DR. C. F. W. WALTHER.

The most conspicuous object in the southern part of the city, as one passes down the Mississippi from St. Louis, is Concordia Seminary, the great theological school of the German Lutheran churches associated in the Synod of Missouri and other States. This great building, completed and dedicated within a few years, was the workshop of one of the greatest of modern German theologians, Carl Ferdinand Wilhelm Walther, in whose portrait appear some features of strong resemblance to the late Dr. J. F. Walker, the eminent author of "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation."

Dr. Walther was a Saxon, born in 1811 into the family of a Lutheran pastor. He received the usual classical education, studied theology at the University of Leipsic, and was ordained in 1837. His mind was of a grave, perhaps austere cast, and the influence of the learned Dr. Rudelbach, a determined opponent of the rationalism, liberalism and neology, the Andover new departures of his day, had a decided influence upon his mind while pursuing his theological studies. During these studies he also began to read the writings of Luther with profound attention. The logical force, originality, scholarship and spiritual depth and power of Luther's works, which left their indelible impression upon German literature and thought, had a powerful effect upon the mind of young Walther, and remained in the result of his work in re-establishing the principles of the Lutheran reformation in the Mississippi valley. The exercises of his mind, indeed, were in some degree resembling those of Luther before his full acceptance of the doctrine of salvation by faith; and as Luther was aided by Staupitz, Walther was led into clearer light by a Bohemian pastor, Martin Stephan of Dresden.

Stephan, Walther and others, desiring larger liberty than was allowed at that time by the state church in Germany, emigrated to this country in a body of about 750 souls, including seven clergymen, theological students, professional teachers, lawyers, physicians, and others who left comfortable homes and profitable business in order, like the Pilgrim Fathers, to find full freedom to worship God in a new country. They sailed in five vessels, one of which was lost at sea; the others reached New Orleans in the winter of 1838–9. Soon after their arrival Mr. Walther was put in charge of the affairs of the colonists as their leading spirit. Some settled in St. Louis, others in Perry county, half way down the river to Cairo. They immediately,notwithstanding many privations, established several churches, and a theological seminary with preparatory schools. Their churches were and are conducted strictly on the congregational principle of the independence of the local church, the power of synods being only advisory.

In 1841 Dr. Walther removed from Perry county to St. Louis, to take charge of Trinity Church,which has now grown to five or six congregations. The theological school which he founded and taught in a log house followed him. One of his biographers speaks of the great care used in the preparation of his sermons. "He would often spend a whole week and digest whole volumes for a single sermon. Being a most scholarly man and having good taste as well as excellent judgment, the aim of his sermons was to reach the perfection of lucid simplicity. His language is not only correct but also elegant, yet always popular.....Dr. Walther has published more than three hundred sermons. His favorite themes are the forgiveness, the grace and the peace in Jesus, the spirituality of the church, the absolute guilt of all sin, the absolute certainty of the Christian religion, and the glorious freedom of the Christian. Instead of preaching right conduct and good works Dr. Walther sought to change and sanctify the source from which all individual conduct flows."

The growth of these German churches demanded an organ and the fortnightly Lutheraner was begun in 1844. Some seven years ago a journal representing the Missouri Synod and devoted to secular news, the *Rundschau,*was started, and has lately been removed to Chicago, where it has greatly increased its circulation. In the Lutheraner Dr. Walther wrote largely of theological topics, though often upon subjects of practical Christian life. He published many theological essays and a treatise on practical theology. He entered heartily into doctrinal controversies, maintaining his convictions with great ability and uncompromising firmness. When he began his work in this country in 1839 the Lutheran church had barely an existence. At the time of his death in May, 1887, it had become one of the largest of the evangelical denominations.

The churches which grew out of the emigration of 1838 and those associated with them are joined in what is commonly known as the Missouri Synod, and is the largest body of the kind in America. This is also associated with other smaller synods in the Synodical Conference which is the largest of the three divisions of the Lutheran church in our country. It is one of the crowning glories of Dr. Walther's life that this great body of churches numbering some 500,000 members, makes no compromise with the secret lodge, but also stands firmest of all against the insinuating power of secretism. While the General Council, as such, merely gives advice against the lodge, and is in some sections overrun with the orders, the Synodical Conference declares that this evil is so plainly contrary to the spirit and teaching of the Word of God as not to be allowed among Christians. Members of churches connected with the Conference are therefore required to dissolve their lodge relations, if they have any.

This firm and righteous decision was brought about under God by Dr. Walther some twenty-five years ago; and the fact that this great body of churches maintains this position amid the swarming multitude of secret orders is a noble proof of his power as a leader, and the force and clearness with which he established this principle of separation. From time to time, as occasion demanded, Dr. Walther resumed this subject in his sermons and other public addresses and a collection of the Conference documents on the secret orders would fill a volume. About ten years ago the Lutheran congregations of St. Louis and vicinity held a convention on the lodge. Dr. Walther made a memorable address on the occasion which was reported in shorthand and published in German. The Cynosure will endeavor in the near future to place some of his arguments before its readers.

Not only is this body of Christian churches a wall against the lodge storm, but in its congregational principle, is thoroughly American. The Lutheran church in some countries of the old world is episcopal in government, and some branches in this country incline to that theory, but Dr. Walther taught local church independence, and made the synods advisory. He also abhorred intemperance and proclaimed the Gospel as the true way of deliverance from this evil; so, too, with dancing and such like evils, against which he preached with great power, yet enforcing his views only with arguments addressed to the conscience and with the authority of the Word of God. While his German countrymen are too often recognized in this country as advocates of infidelity and rationalism, he represented exactly opposite views, and his disciples claim for him the distinguished honor of being the father of Lutheran orthodoxy in America.

It is to be regretted that the work of this great man was solely in the German language. For this reason he was comparatively little known, outside his church circles, and the American churches generally were not influenced by his vigorous and eloquent discourses. The principles to establish which his life was devoted will live, however, in the church and will be more and more widely diffused. He preferred, says one of his biographers, "ideas to organization, the Gospel to institutions, the truth to numbers, and obscurity to worldly fame;" and these are among the eternal things of truth.

JESUS CHRIST, YESTERDAY, TO-DAY AND FOREVER.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The poet Tennyson was fully persuaded that

"Through the ages one increasing purpose runs."

Jesus Christ is that purpose. Prof. Schaff says, "Take away Jesus Christ and the human race is left without an animating soul, without a purpose, an inexplicable enigma." Jesus Christ, "the light and life of men," sheds light and life back upon the night of heathenism and the twilight of Judaism, and forward through all the ages of subsequent development.

In what respects do the events preceding the incarnation of Jesus Christ appear preparatory thereto? Both heathenism and Judaism had a distinct and efficient part to act in paving the way for this event, and each in its two-fold aspect of positive and negative results. Heathenism demonstrated that "a salvation devised by man, with the means at his command, was impossible, and that neither nature nor art, neither worldly wisdom nor culture, neither oracles nor mysteries, neither philosophy nor theosophy, neither political institutions nor industry, neither sensual indulgence nor luxury, could satisfy the cravings of the soul or restore to man the inward peace he had lost. Thus humbling their pride and awakening in nobler spirits a sense of need, heathenism prepared mankind for salvation."

Judaism, on the other hand, produced the conviction that "the weak and beggarly elements" "could not make the comers thereunto perfect." Heathenism also yielded positive results. "It had produced great and imperishable results," says Kurtz, "in the domains of science, art and human culture, which became handmaid to religion, when brought to own the power of that truth which the Lord had revealed. It furnished forms which, from their depth, distinctness and correctness, their ready adaptation and general suitableness, proved most fit for presenting and developing the new truths which were to issue from Judah's land. It also produced contemplation and study both of nature and of mind, of history and of life, which in many respects even opened the way and prepared a soil for the great realities of salvation. Socrates gave faint echoes of Christian doctrine and life in tracing his deepest thoughts and motives to divine suggestions, and in willingly surrendering the enjoyments of this world in the confident hope of gaining that which is spiritual and eternal." "The speculations of Plato even more closely and fully approximated Christian views. That philosopher collected the scattered germs of his great predecessor's teachings. In his profound, speculative and poetic mind they sprung up and unfolded to a new mode of contemplating the world, which came nearer that of Christianity than any outside of revelation. The philosophy of Plato spake of man as claiming kindred with the Deity, and led him beyond what is seen and sensuous to the eternal prototypes of the beautiful, the true and the good, from which mankind had fallen, thus awakening in him a deep longing for the blessings he had lost." "These two philosophers have been of incalculable advantage to Christianity, in that their systems were presented in such a form as to be available to Christian science in its inquiries and dogmatic statements."

But this heathenish preparation is still more clearly seen when viewed from a political standpoint. "As they had refused allegiance to the personal and living God, they were impelled by a sort of inward necessity to concentrate the mental and physical powers of mankind, and through them all the powers of nature, and the products of the various zones and continents, and subject them to one man—the acknowledged representative of Deity." This gave rise to those bloody conquests of Cyrus, Alexander and Cæsar, which resulted in the overthrow of the Chaldean, the Medo-Persian and the Macedonian empires successively, and which culminated in the Roman Dynasty—the goal of universal empire. This was the greatest and strongest monarchy—Satan's visible kingdom in the world, and it was permitted to attain the summit of power and glory, that the Saviour in visibly overcoming Satan's kingdom in its greatest strength and excellence might obtain a more complete and ostensible triumph over Satan himself. When Satan tempted Christ he no doubt argued thus: "See this great Roman empire which embraces all the kingdoms of the world. See its unity, its wealth and its power. See the glory of its capital on the seven hills. See these great Roman roads, stretching from Britain on the north to Palestine on the south; and from the Straits of Gibraltar on the west to the river Euphrates on the east. See how the Greek language has been introduced in every province, thus suspending the judgment by which the languages were confounded. All this is mine. I am the controlling power. My will is supreme. All this will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Thus we see that empire united in one universal civilization, which "rendered it comparatively easy to circulate the fresh blood poured by the church into the veins of nations."

Still another fact. About 250 B. C., Ptolemy Philadelphus had the Old Testament Scriptures translated into Greek, and the Jews in the dispersion carried the Scriptures with them into every country, erected synagogues, and had them read every Sabbath. As James said in the council at Jerusalem, "Moses of old time hath in every city them that preached Him (Jesus), being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." So that all the world was on tip-toe of expectation when Christ came, and when Paul sounded the Gospel trumpet at Rome its notes went reverberating through the whole world.

On the other hand, Judaism was the chosen instrument in "preparing and maturing a salvation," the benefits of which were to be shared by all nations. "Every thing connected with the history of this people bears reference to the coming salvation. Each revelation and dispensation, all discipline and punishment, every promise and threatening; their constitution, laws and worship; every political, civil and religious institution, all tended toward this goal. In one sentence: Judaism has supplied to the church the substance, the Divine reality; heathenism, the human form and the outward means for developing and carrying forward the great work."

It thus appears that during the first forty centuries God was working toward an atonement. It is just as plain that the last eighteen hundred years have been occupied in establishing and enlarging Christ's kingdom in the earth. And it will go on until "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

"Not in vain the distance beacons;
Forward, forward, let us range.
Let the great world spin forever
Down the ringing grooves of change.
Thro' the shadow of the globe
We sweep into brighter day;
Better fifty years in Europe
Than a cycle in Cathay."

WHY IS THE LODGE SECRET?

BY OLD AMERICAN.

The lodge claims to be founded upon the Golden rule to do to others as we would have them do to us. At least it is charitable to view its origin in this light—the "light of other days." It had, ostensibly, another object, to give light to the novices, and when they saw it, amid the fiddle-faddle of the rituals, it was found to proceed from three candles forming a triangle. But in the light of the Golden Rule, had they clung to that, and lived up to it in its broad spirit, the lodge would have been, even now, only half a Christian institution, recognizing the Saviour's lesson on the relation of man to man, and nothing further.

But if it started out on this principle, it must have lost it some decades ago, for to-day, and since my knowledge of it began, it has, in its best features, been a clannish, selfish, money-making insurance company. I think there is not now a secret society in existence—and the age swarms with them from the Vatican at Rome to the humblest village, from the Pope to the butcher-boy—that can consistently claim for the lodge that it is anything more than an insurance medium, with extraordinary powers and processes ramifying all its machinery.

If this is so, the plea that secrecy is a necessity for the better maintenance of the order is puerile; for the insurance business is honorable if justly conducted, and there can be no harm in my neighbor knowing that if I am sick I can draw $10 a week until I recover, or that I may call for $30 from the lodge to aid in burying my wife should I survive her, or that the lodge will donate a sixth part of my own funeral expenses. Certainly, no one would think any worse of me for receiving these benefits, for nearly all men know that I pay the lodge handsomely from year to year, for the relief and comfort of those who also pay to help me. It is simply a quid pro quo—not always evenly balanced, because my "degree" may be less profitable and less exacting than my neighbor's. Besides, he may be sick more weeks in a year than I am, and if so I certainly ought not to envy him his increased stipend.

What need of secrecy in the lodge really exists? I once belonged to it, and held my membership for many years, and there I saw nothing of any value to myself or others that might not be exhibited like a Punch-and-Judy show at the street-corners, and with about as much edification. Why was I bound, by useless solemnities, to do that which Christ openly commanded—to love my neighbor as myself? All the concomitants of the initiation—the paraphernalia, the regalia, the varied rites, the lectures, or the penalties suggested, could not make my obligation to do good to all men any stronger than that which the Bible openly declares.

Nothing in the lodge or its ceremonies bound me to love God with all my heart, mind and strength, or to trust in his Son for my salvation. Seemingly no one there cared for these requirements of the Bible; and I think I never saw a confirmed lodgeman who (outside of his ministerial functions in the church) spoke to me upon these important topics.

The secrecy was confined to the lodge-work—the dramatic exhibitions and the recognition by-play. Honest men, imbued with the spirit of Christianity, have no need of either. They say "Yea, yea," when necessary for the transaction of everyday business, or "nay, nay," if they cannot endorse some specific proposition, believing that any further expression of assent or dissent might lead to evil speaking.

Is secrecy necessary for purposes of lodge recognition? No more than the lodge itself; and men who love God and their neighbors as themselves, despise the one and hate the other. The ratio of dishonesty, I estimate, in these institutions, is equal to the secrecy required concerning the work performed. They do not let their right hand know what their left is doing, even if it is abstracting the contents of some one else's pocket; and if by accident the right hand discovers what is being done, it dare not whisper it to a living soul, under penalty in such case made and provided. The system is acute—the lodge training is excellent—quite as perfect as that of the Jew Fagin, in "Oliver Twist," when educating his pupils in the mysteries of street robbery.

Secrecy becomes such men as Fagin, Guy Fawkes, anarchists, and scoundrels of every degree, but no other class, outside of family, business and neighborly affairs. That which prefers a claim to be considered a public benefit need hide nothing from the public; and that which, perforce, destroys confidence between men and their wives and children, like a lodge obligation, borders on criminality. That which shuts the mouth of a witness who can disclose matters that would fulfill the aim and end of justice when crime lays waste the lives and property of victimized citizens, is itself criminal—as unrighteous as withholding stolen goods from their owner, knowing they are his. That which will strive by the lowest subterfuges to ruin an honest man's reputation and business because he flees from the lodge for his soul's salvation, is also criminal—as foul and indecent as the assassin in his midnight work. And yet all these, it has been proven, time and again, are in the spirit, if not the practice, of the lodge.

Will the lodge ever be abolished, or disappear?

Ad referendum.

MASONRY UNDER THE MAGNIFIER.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

A talented young man of a prominent and influential family in the village called upon a leading business man and said:

"Mr. Harper, I have just completed my college course. My ambition is to succeed in business and become a useful member of society. You are the Master of the Masonic lodge in this place. For some time I have been thinking of joining your 'ancient and honorable' order; but before applying for admission thought it best to call upon you and see if there are any works I could read or information you could impart that is proper and right for me to know."

"Yes, there are plenty of publications explaining the well known principles of the society. They contain none of the secrets, but are perfectly reliable. Here are our monitors, rituals, lexicons, histories, works on jurisprudence, digests of Masonic law, Grand Lodge reports, and other legitimate publications that any Mason will loan you or that any Masonic publisher will sell you. All you have to do while reading is to compare these authorities with the general character and make-up of the fraternity and you will find them absolutely correct in every particular. You can read here at my private office or at your own room as you like. My partner is an officer of the lodge, a better scholar than myself, and will give you any information that is proper and right. So just make yourself comfortable and I will be back at supper time when you will break bread with us. There are some good cigars, and if you like a sip of champagne, help yourself. But then I believe your people don't approve of such things. Your father is a prohibitionist, and I myself admire steady, moral young men. Must use these things temperately, you know. Will see you later."

(Young man alone.) "Well, here's a go. Guess I'm in for it. Temperate in all things! He's half full now, and smokes and chews all the year round—a perfect slave. Wonder if he did just right in letting me read these books? I always thought Freemasonry a profound secret. Guess I'll just send word down to my folks that I won't be home till late and they'll think I've gone out of town. Old Harper has money, but his morals are not at a premium. However, if I join the lodge I'll have to get used to his ilk. Here is my pencil and book; I'll just put down in shorthand the cream of this business as I proceed. Let me see—Webb's Freemason's Monitor, by Morris, page 10: 'It is a duty incumbent on every Master of a lodge, before the ceremony of initiation takes place, to inform the candidate of the purposes and designs of the institution,' etc.

"That's part of his business, then, to post me up before I join. But this Thomas Smith Webb, who is he? Here is a written note: 'The author of this book was the first standard writer on Freemasonry in this country. He is the father of American Masonry.' All right, father Webb, we'll see if these other works agree with you. Freemason's Monitor, by Daniel Sickels, 33°, Secretary General of the Supreme Council of the Northern jurisdiction of the Masons of the United States, page 31: 'It is the duty of the Master of the lodge, as one of the precautionary measures of initiation, to explain to the candidate the nature and design of the institution; and while he informs him that it is founded on the purest principles of virtue, that it possesses great and invaluable privileges,and that,in order to secure those privileges to worthy men, and worthy men alone, voluntary pledges of fidelity are required; he will at the same time assure him that nothing will be expected of him incompatible with his civil,moral or religious duties.'

"Who would want any better assurance than that? Guess I'll take that home to father. You see, father is a lawyer and mother is a Methodist. Heard him tell mother one night that he had read Morgan once and tested it pretty thoroughly. He don't take much stock in Masonry from the way he speaks of it sometimes when he has a big suit on hand. 'Great and invaluable privileges!' What are they? O, yes, here it is, on page 62 of same book, 'Masonry includes within its circle almost every branch of polite learning. Under the vail of its mysteries is comprehended a regular system of science. Many of its illustrations to the confined genius may appear unimportant, but the man of more enlarged faculties will perceive them to be in the highest degree useful and interesting. To please the accomplished scholar and the ingenious artist, Masonry is wisely planned, and in the investigation of its latent doctrines the philosopher and the mathematician may experience equal delight and satisfaction.'

"Now don't that beat you! Here I've been seven long years in school,and,lo and behold! it is all right up stairs in the Masonic lodge. Wonder if old Harper teaches all that? Suppose he must for he's 'Worshipful Master.' Worshipful! now that's a nice note—swears like a born pirate, butchers the king's English at every breath and don't know a noun from a preposition. Guess I'll look this matter up a little."

TEMPERANCE FARMING WITH WORN-OUT MACHINERY.

A downright common sense way of dealing with the temperance orders Captain Wood has adopted in the following from an editorial in the Los Angeles Censor. He has labored long and earnestly with the Good Templars in his State for straight temperance, but is not perhaps aware that Rev. Dr. Marsh and Dr. Charles Jewett, who were among the noblest names in our temperance ranks, condemned the secret orders as a hindrance to the work, which might to-day have been victorious in the nation but for them. The Censor says:

The temperance methods and machinery have also evoluted and improved in this half century. The old moderation societies and then the total abstinence societies did a grand work. They employed the very best weapons of the day, the best and truest patriots of that time were the workers; they did all the work that was done in their day. Those old pioneers, groping in comparative darkness, deserve to stand in the first rank of heroes, patriots, philanthropists and martyrs for the truth.

Then the Washingtonian movement burst forth like a new sun, conquered wherever it went, pledged its thousands all over the land, absorbed all the old societies and seemed about to close up the liquor traffic summarily. But it used faulty methods; it made old drunkards, libertines and conscienceless men its priests and prophets; it had no organization but a pledge and it knew no God, so in about three years it went out like an extinguished torch. It did a good work,but with better machinery and leaders and methods, it could have led the world to victory.

Then a tidal wave of secret societies swept over the land and the Sons, Rechabites, Temples of Honor, Good Templars and many others sprang up. They were an improvement on all that had gone before. They adopted better methods than most that had been used; they recognized a God; they organized and set into activity most of the patriotic, aggressive Christianity and benevolence of this country and they also attracted a good deal of unworthy and ungodly material.

They did very nearly all the temperance work that was done for about thirty years, but still the liquor traffic was all the time growing and increasing tremendously in power. The methods and machinery of these societies were incompetent to subdue the monster. And these orders have become as they grew older less efficient and of less numbers and influence. And every year they have continued to lose in the aggregate more members than they recruited.

In the year 1869 the Prohibition party was formed, a Christian, patriotic, open organization aiming at the root of the evil and the legal arrest of the business of drunkard making. Its methods may not yet be perfect but it is improving. It keeps all it wins and it has always been recruiting and enlisting for life the very best men and women. It has not gone backward in anything, but is taking always higher and better ground.

In the last days of 1873 the Woman's Crusade broke out. It was an effort of prayer and moral suasion. It did a great work, but the national legalized rum traffic and inhuman pagan laws undid their successes. Then the W. C. T. U. organized into a Christian, patriotic, open society, not only to put down the dramshop but to reform our laws, uproot all our vicious systems and evangelize the world.

This society holds all it gains and gains all the time. It is also every month adapting new methods to new needs and enlarging its sphere of operations. It labors in every field and is belting the world with Christian influences. If it knows any course to be right it pursues it, be it in politics or in any direction.

The W. C. T. U. is sending its missionaries and its literature all over our country and the world. It is building a $600,000 headquarters and enlisting in its work the noblest men and women in the world. We have now the W. C. T. U., the Y. W. C. T. U., the Loyal Legion, the Band of Hope and the Prohibition (Home Protection) party. All of them progressive, prosperous societies and sufficient with the Christian churches, the Y. M. C. A. and the Sunday-school to destroy the kingdom of rum and Satan and reform the world.

Now the I. O. G. T.,after collecting and expending perhaps ten times as much money in the year as the W. C. T. U. and Prohibition party did, reported in January, 1885, in the United States 209,703 members. It received that year 106,975 members and lost 122,591, leaving only 193,087, a loss of 16,616 as the result a year's work. And this was about a fair average year of the past twenty for them. Should the W. C. T. U. or Prohibition party ever have such an experience we should say it is wasted effort and wasted money. But we have no fault to find with the many good people in the United States who think they can resuscitate an institution which has made no progress but backward for twenty years past save in some spasmodic local successes.

None of these temperance societies, new or old, is worth a penny unless as it is destroying the rumfiend. The friends of temperance should everywhere and always be found using their time, labor and money to produce the greatest results for prohibition and for the general safety of our country.

A BLOT UPON OUR STATUTE BOOKS.

A recent event has directed our attention to the operation of the Chinese immigration laws in a manner that is not particularly flattering to our pride as citizens of the greatest and freest republic in the world. The circumstances, when briefly related, are these: Two tea-carrying steamers, the Monmouthshire and the Glenshiel, started from Amoy nearly the same time, for New York. They raced with each other over a whole hemisphere, with the Glenshiel coming into port several days ahead, having made the trip in forty-two days and thirteen hours—the fastest time on record.

It seems that the crew of the Glenshiel consisted of Chinamen. As soon as she arrived, an inspector of customs was placed in charge of the vessel, "in order," as one daily paper stated, "to prevent any of them landing to degrade American labor."

Now, observe that the men thus watched and guarded by the argus-eyed inspector of customs were not criminals, nor paupers, nor even workmen competing with Americans in the labor market, but simply sailors who desired to recreate on land after the toil and hardships of a long ocean voyage. To forbid the landing of sailors ordinarily would be the refinement of cruelty; but in the present case it was an exhibition of barbarism hardly to be expected from the most enlightened nation on the globe.

Imagine the feelings of those gallant and plucky seamen on being told that they were forbidden to land, lest they degraded American labor! that America, free to the rest of the world, including the wild men of Borneo and the degenerate Hottentots, was not free to them, simply because they were Chinese, and that they must content themselves with a sight of the land flowing with milk and honey, but were not to enter it. Imagine their disappointment and disgust with the loud pretensions of this country to be a land of refuge! What must they have thought of the mockery of Bedloe's Island—Liberty enlightening the world? The irony of the French sculptor is not the less keen because unintentional.

Suppose our American sailors, the bravest and pluckiest of all that plow the high seas, were forbidden by Chinese law to land on the Chinese coast! How indignant we would be, and how eloquently we would declaim on Chinese heathenism and exclusiveness! And yet, under our very noses, the laws against Chinese immigration are so enforced as to perpetrate the grossest injustice and inhumanity.

Every day we meet with cases where the mischievous operation of the anti-Chinese laws can be plainly seen. But while we can trace many evils directly to the enforcement of these laws, the evils that result indirectly are neither to be traced nor to be adequately calculated. The persecution, distress, and wrongs to which the Chinese in this country are subject in consequence of those laws and their harsh execution are unknown quantities; but it does not require much intelligence for any one to understand that when our Government refuses to acknowledge the rights of these poor strangers, and shows itself reluctant even to accord them the protection of the laws, this will be taken advantage of by their mortal enemies, the foreign miner, the sand lotter, the hoodlum, and the saloon politician. We quote the following from Fire and Water, to show that we are not talking at random:

"When calling attention last week to the danger of a destructive conflagration at Los Angeles, Cal., we might have added to the other hazards that contributed by the presence of a large and extremely unpopular Chinese element. It seems that barely a fortnight ago the agents of most of the insurance companies canceled their policies on buildings occupied by Chinamen, upon the ground that the existing feeling against them made the hazard too great. They have reason to congratulate themselves upon their foresight, for early on last Sunday morning a fire of unknown origin, which started in a gambling den in the Chinese quarter, consumed twenty five buildings, in which about 1,000 of the 'almond-eyed' had been housed, the losses being estimated at $100,000; and the press dispatches mention significantly that, although the fire companies came promptly to the spot, the slow and deliberate way in which they went to work 'seemed to indicate that they were not over-anxious to save the buildings.'"

It is true that the fire started in a gambling den, but the majority of those who were burned out of house and home were, doubtless, industrious and peaceable men—not addicted to gambling. Could there be a meaner exhibition of depravity than that shown by those firemen? They did not put out the fire, but they extinguished every spark of honor and humanity in their own breasts.

As Americans, we are ashamed to own that such things are possible within our boundaries. We are not proud of the position we occupy of being the only nation that carries out the policy of exclusion, and we denounce the ill-treatment of the Chinese as unchristian, barbarous, and inhuman.—Scientific American.

We heard a minister remark the other day that the colored people of the South had spent,since the war, no less than one hundred million dollars on secret societies. We are not prepared to deny or disprove this startling statement. It would amount to about twenty dollars to each colored person in the South, or about five million a year for the last twenty years. This may be all considered as just so much clear loss, for which the colored people have nothing to show. Had the money been sunk in the depths of the sea the colored people would today be as well off financially and a great deal better off morally and spiritually. Secret societies are bad enough among white people in dragging them down and must needs be much more deleterious in their influence on the poor and ignorant colored people of the South. So long as the ex-slaves patronize these dark lantern, midnight associations and fritter away on them their thoughts, time and money they will remain in a low moral,intellectual and spiritual condition. What would our country not be were the whole brood of secret organizations swept out of existence. They are a menace to the best interests of church and state,begetting suspicion to fellow members of the church and destroying that candor and confidence which should ever exist among Christian brethren. They undermine the foundations of civil society and are ever a source of dread to patriots.—Sandy Lake News.

Judge Valiant, of the Circuit Court of St. Louis, has handed down his opinion regarding the closing of saloons in St. Louis on Sunday. The opinion virtually reversed the opinion of Judge Noonan, given about two months ago, and holds that the law of 1857 did not legally permit the sale of wine and beer in this city on Sunday, and that the Sunday law as applied to the other parts of the State has always been applicable here. The case will now go to the Supreme Court, with a request that it be advanced on the docket, and it is not likely that any effort will be made to indorse the Sunday law until that court renders its decision.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 14, '87.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In one of Napoleon's colossal battles, at a certain stage the cavalry was ordered to charge. But Junot could not get them to move. Again and again the command was repeated, but they would not stir. Marshal Murat, recognizing the situation, put spurs to his horse and came galloping down the lines, brandishing his sword and waving his plumed hat. Then, without saying a word, he turned his beautifully caparisoned steed and started with all possible speed for the enemy's ranks. The soldiers caught his spirit, and with one accord followed him and ere he reached the enemy were at his heels. The enemy flew before them. A signal victory was won.

O, for a minister to awaken such a spirit in the sacramental host! A ministry in "blood earnest" is the need of the church; a ministry filled with "the irrepressible;" a ministry that will rush forward upon the fortifications of Satan, shouting, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon;" a ministry that will "cry aloud and spare not," until judgment has been brought forth to victory.

Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Cedarville United Presbyterian church, Rev. A. Campbell, pastor. This is an old and substantial congregation of 187 members. The first preaching service I remember of attending was in their house. It was like getting home to go there. Almost all were personal acquaintances, a great many were old schoolmates, several were my pupils in the Cedarville High School for two years, and not a few have the misfortune to be relatives of mine. Rev. Sproull being away in Adams county, the Covenanter brethren came out. There was an audience of 300. At 3 P. M. I preached in the Oak Grove school house, five miles out. After the sermon Rev. W. A. Robb took charge of the services and I returned to Cedarville where I preached at 5 P. M. in the town hall. Notwithstanding the rain there were over 500 out.

I talked on the "Mediatorial Dominion." The text was from the 18th Psalm, v. 43: "Head over the heathen." This Psalm is Messianic. There are two marks by which a Psalm is known to be such.

1. Where there is a description of a perfection of character and conduct, a depth of humiliation, a number, variety and severity of suffering, a suddenness and completeness of delivery, a heighth of exaltation and a permanence and universality of dominion which can be true only of the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Where the Psalm is quoted in the New Testament and applied to Christ. The 18th Psalm bears both marks. The theme is, "The sufferings of Christ and the glory which followed." The author divides it into six parts: 1. The prelude or proem in which the Messiah appeals to the Father as his Rock, high tower, shield, etc., indicating that God will preserve him in the midst of and ultimately deliver him from all enemies and dangers. vs. 1–3.

2. The sufferings of the Messiah, his exercises under those sufferings and the results of those exercises. vs. 4–6. He is overwhelmed with the floods, bound with cords, entangled in the snares of death. He cries to God; God heard and answered him.

3. His preternatural deliverance. vs. 7–19. God entered his chariot and came down. The moment it touched the earth it quaked. Thick clouds enswathed the earth. The lightnings flash, the burning coals beneath his feet, the smoke of his nostrils. His enemies are arrayed against him. He shoots out his arrows and discomfits them. A great revolution follows. The sea becomes dry land and the land becomes sea; the channels of the waters were discovered. He drew the Messiah out of deep waters. He took him from prison and gave him large liberty because he delighted in him.

4. His prayer of thanksgiving for this deliverance. vs. 20–31. "The Lord rewarded me according to my righteousness." "With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful."

5. The Messiah's conquest of the nations. vs. 31–41. He pursues them and overtakes. He leaps over the wall. He casts them out like dirt that lies upon the streets.

6. His universal and permanent dominion. vs. 42–50. "Thou hast made me the head of the heathen; a people whom I have not known shall serve me." And he shall reign forever and ever. This last is what the National Reform Association seeks to realize.

I spent Saturday night with Uncle R. Kyle, whose daughter Agnes is an accomplished teacher in the Cedarville schools. Mr. David Ervin, one of Cedarville's most substantial reformers, drove with me out to the afternoon meeting. We spent the evening at the home of Dr. Winter. He was raised in South Carolina, where he lived until he was forty, and was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. He had an extensive practice as physician and an interest in iron and steel works. When Sumter was fired upon he left and joined the Union army and all his property, amounting to $150,000 was confiscated. They were glad of the opportunity to do that, because frequently he had bought slaves to save them from being sold and sent away from their families, and given them the freedom of his farm. They hated him for this and seized his property at once. He served through the war, and lost his health through exposure. The government gives him a small pension—shamefully small, but he recovered none of his property. Since the war he has been quietly following his profession as he is able. Providence has a purpose in such a career. It is an object lesson.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

AN ADVENTURE AMONG THE SPIRITS.

As the lights went down, somebody began to play a piece of melancholy music, just as though some one was dying instead of coming to life. After the music ceased, all were as silent as the dead—no, not as silent as the dead, for were they not about to be proven otherwise? We must find a new simile.

Suddenly the curtains of the cabinet were parted, and something white rushed out into the middle of the room. This apparition, it was announced, was an Indian girl, and that it would shake hands with the audience. After this introduction, the dusky daughter of Lo, who was very talkative, shook hands with all disposed to allow her. As she passed around, she, also, very generously gave each person a handful of confections, my portion consisting of wintergreen wafers, some of which I carried in my pocket for months, as a sort of memento, daily expecting them to dematerialize.

Now, I really dislike to accuse any one wrongfully, but I believe that this Indian girl was none other than the silly girl whom I have mentioned. The glistening substance with which her garments were covered, outlined her form very clearly, showing similar proportions; besides this, the tones of voice were the same. I am confident that I saw a head dressed in the same peculiar style as the so-called silly girl's, pass in the range of the faint light from the lamp on the organ over to the cabinet, and it didn't return until after a long time. In fact, I saw enough to convince me that, at least, half a dozen of that audience were dematerialized into spirits, which I think is an easier thing to do than vice versa. After greeting and supplying the whole company with sugar plums, the little aborigine retired, when other shining incarnations darted out and in the cabinet.

Meanwhile, the pompous female, who had taken possession of the chair next the cabinet, kept up a continual expression of praise of the merits of the spirits.

"Just see what a magnificent haler," she would exclaim, as the brilliantly clad forms appeared.

On the impulse of the moment, thoroughly disgusted by the sham, and evident gullibility of the audience, I said, loud enough for all in my immediate neighborhood to hear, "That shining stuff is nothing more nor less than solution, or preparation of phosphorous, which may be obtained of almost any chemist." I noticed that this gratuitous information seemed to offend some persons on my right.

"Did you see that beautiful disappearance? How splendidly it dissolved," cried the big woman, as a spirit near the cabinet fell back and vanished.

Now, I am naturally of an impulsive temperament, and anything like deception inflates me with "righteous indignation," to which I must give vent or explode, and to avoid such a catastrophe on this occasion, I chose the lesser evil. The valve having been opened by my first remark, fearless as to the result, I continued to define the situation.

"Anybody could do that," said I. "All that is to be done is to squat gradually, and then quickly fall back on the floor behind the curtain, or sink slowly in the middle of the room, and draw some dark material over the white clothing."

"Shut up," growled an old chap on my right, who had just seen a daughter that had a mole on her face, whereby he had identified her.

I refused to "shut up" my valve, however, and said, if they would allow me, I would duplicate all that had been done so far.

"How'd yer do it?" asked a young fellow at my left, who had informed me that he was investigating the "phenomena," in tones which half convinced me that his credulity was more than half phenomenated.

I replied that I would manipulate after the same manner I had just explained the so-called spirit were doing. He expressed his satisfaction with the explanation, with a sob-like chuckle.

The next materialization was considered by the spiritists present, as the most wonderful of the evening—that of a child, perhaps six or seven years of age. This was heralded by the big reception committee of one, (who, without doubt, was equal to a dozen), with dearest and sweetest epithets, which I did not hesitate to adulterate with a few acrid expressions which I am satisfied lessened the relish of that audience, at least.

"That," said I, in the most distinct tones I could command, as the dim-inutive form, designated as that of a child, appeared, "that is none other than the medium herself, crawling out on her knees."

Judging from ominous, but subdued mutterings all about me, I began to realize that my candid, and logical criticisms were hitting harder than was compatible with my environment. D. P. MATHEWS.

REFORM NEWS.

IN THE MOUNTAINS OF EAST TENNESSEE.

In and about Jonesboro—Alongside the State line—A region untrodden by slaves—Freemason's happy valley—The birthplace of Abolitionism—Now a theme for Goldsmith's melancholy muse—Awful effect of the tobacco habit—The Brethren and their simple rites.

JONESBORO, Tenn., Sept. 12, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My stay in this vicinity has been much longer than I expected but has not been uninteresting and I think not unprofitable. Sept. 2nd I spoke in Jonesboro; on the 3rd at Uriel M.E. church, a few miles east. On Sabbath I spoke once each in a Presbyterian, an M. E., and a Dunker church. On the 5th I lectured on prohibition at the Bethesda church near Garber's Mills and had an excellent hearing, the congregation voting without dissent for the Amendment.

On Tuesday, the 6th, I went to Erwin, the county-seat of Unicoi county, which is in the mountains and only three or four miles from the dividing ridge which separates this State from North Carolina. I had expected to lecture there on Tuesday night, but found that the announcement had not been made and that I was too unwell to have spoken. I remained and lectured on Wednesday evening to a good audience. On Thursday I hired a a conveyance to Embreyville, in Washington county, and lectured at night in a Southern M. E. church to a full and attentive audience. On Friday I walked to Garber's Mills and was taken to Dry Creek in the mountains where I spoke to a small congregation. On Saturday I attended the Brethren's (Dunker's) yearly meeting and was invited to preach to them on the subject of secret societies.

All of these were white congregations. I have not seen five colored persons outside of Jonesboro. There were never more than a handful of slaves in this mountain region. Most of the people were loyal during the war, and are, and have been since, Republicans. The whole country is rich in varied and romantic scenery and in historic incidents. The Chuckey river is a considerable and rapid stream that sweeps along the western base of the Blue Ridge and unites with the French Broad above Knoxville to form the Tennessee river. It has a narrow, fertile valley and considerable mountains on either side.

Unicoi has within a few years been cut off from Washington and Carter counties, and is a narrow strip of valley and mountain. Erwin, the county-seat, is at the foot of Unica mountain and three or four miles from the top, which is the State line. It is a little hamlet of 175 inhabitants with a small but decent court-house, with no church and no school-house, but has a small brick building erected and owned by the Masons, the upper part being used for the lodge, and the lower room graciously granted to the people for school and religious purposes. Here religious meetings are jointly held by the different sects who seem to vie in their devotion to the lodge power. About the only religious man I found in the place is a devoted Mason, fully persuaded of the antiquity of the order and of its divine character. He told me that there was abundant evidence of its existence and divine approval to be found in the Bible, but failed to point out the passages. He declined to have any argument on the subject as it was contrary to the principles of the order. He told me, however, that the Masons there were such a worthless, drunken set that he would have nothing to do with them, and that they met in the lodge to drink whisky. I spoke in their temple of Baal, and had less than my usual freedom. The air was oppressive. This town is older than Chicago, and has been a county-seat ten years, but its streets are in part a frog-pond. I found a bright little schoolmaster doing a most needed work, and another young man printing a little paper, one page at a time, on a little hand press. There is hope even for Erwin.

Four miles from here at the end of all roads is Unica Springs, a summer resort. Five miles down the valley is Embreyville. It was once a considerble place, with a blast furnace, rolling mill and nail factory, the first in the State. It is now nearly deserted—one small store and small corn mill only left. The Embreys started and carried on the business, and Mr. Peter Grisham of Washington, who is known to the readers of the Cynosure, was their clerk. The Embreys inaugurated the first anti-slavery movement, anticipating by a year or two Benjamin Lundy and W. L. Garrison. This was more than sixty years ago. Their paper was called the Emancipator, and was published at Jonesboro, the oldest town and the first capital of the State. The Embreys were Quakers and were moral heroes. It would seem that "there were giants in those days" and that the race has become extinct.

It is the opinion of Bro. J. Augustus Cole that there have been cities in the interior of Africa that were once highly civilized,and that they have greatly declined. I do not know how this may be, but I am convinced that these East Tennessee villages have, under the joint influence of slavery, war,whisky and tobacco, greatly deteriorated. The war put everything back, but there is a growing recuperation within the last few years. The discussion of the Amendment question is doing great good. It is about the first live issue that has been presented. It is the first since the war that has appealed to their moral sense. I can see no reason for the ignorance, indolence and poverty of these mountain people except the excessive use of tobacco. The children seem to be born with an insatiable craving for it, and beg for it from passers-by.

On Saturday I attended the annual business meeting of the "Brethren" and witnessed the setting apart of two young men to the second degree in the ministry. In this degree they may administer the ordinances and solemnize marriage, but are not yet elders. I was greatly pleased with the apparent piety, simplicity, and intelligence of the young men. After an examination the mind of each person present was separately taken and they were welcomed by a kiss from each of the brethren present and a clasp of hand from each sister. This congregation has been very faithful in their testimonies and their discipline. They took no part in the late war. They have never received any members of secret societies and have always opposed slavery.

In the year 1854 Elder Samuel Garber came here from Illinois. By special request he preached a sermon against slavery. He was at once arrested, tried and bound over to the court under $2,000 bonds. He expressed his entire willingness to go to prison, but the Brethren insisted that he should leave. He did not appear at the trial and the Brethren paid his bonds. They have eight or ten churches in this part of the State. A few are opposed to prohibition and most of them use tobacco, but they are, on the whole, the most consistent and best people I have seen here. I leave in a few minutes for Knoxville. Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

PLANS FOR OHIO.

MANSFIELD, O., Sept. 15th, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last I have spoken twice in each of the following places, Mesopotamia, Middlefield and Northfield. Friends have received me cordially and no serious obstacles have been encountered. At Northfield two lodgers spoke a few words in defence of their institution. Their so-called arguments were illogical and not worth repeating. We could only pity their ignorance and wish them more light. As usual, Cynosure subscriptions have been obtained, a few books sold and tracts distributed.

On the way to this place I stopped at several points. Last Saturday I visited what is known as Stowe United Presbyterian congregation near Hudson. After a tramp of some five miles through the dust, arrangements were made, as I supposed, for a lecture on the following Tuesday evening. But I received a letter on Monday stating that my request had been reconsidered, and that it was not thought best to have the lecture. The reason given was that there were certain grangers who might be offended. It was thought by a Rev. Wallace who had labored succesfully among the friends here that the best way to kill the grange was to let it alone.

Had I time and space I should like to mention many friends who have shown me kindness and assisted our work. I must not pass without mentioning my brief call at the home of a veteran reformer now seemingly near the gates. Josiah Lee of Albion will, if spared, be 91 years old next month. Though his natural vision is clouded, his spiritual and intellectual sight seems clear. He has always abhorred underhandedness, and of course the lodge. He endeavors to use every opportunity to bear his testimony. But recently a Methodist minister called on him for some money to repair the church. Knowing him to be a Mason he did not neglect the opportunity to impart some sound words of warning.

I have just been talking with Secretary George about ways and plans of carrying forward our work. We should hold the State convention soon at some suitable point. New Concord, Muskingum county, is suggested. As soon as we hear from the General Agent when it will suit his convenience to be with us, the time and place can be fixed. Pres. C. A. Blanchard expressed a willingness to be with us. I am sure from what I have heard that the friends in Eastern Ohio will not fail of an opportunity of listening to the President.

No general appeal to the friends in this State for financial support has been made for more than a year. Some forty dollars have been handed me during the the past month; much more will be needed to carry on our work successfully. I feel confident that the friends will do what they can in this matter. Please do not delay but write Rev. S. A. George, Mansfield, Ohio, what you can give during the year. There are some pledges of last year unredeemed. We trust this also will be looked after. I remain in this section over Sabbath,working as the way may open.

W. B. STODDARD.

RECORD OF WISCONSIN WORK.

MILTON, Wis.

DEAR CYNOSURE: — The evening of Sept. 2nd found me whirling toward the great State of Wisconsin. Night found me at the home of Bro. M. R. Hoard in Sharon. In the morning he drove with me over to Bro. Jas. W. Suidter's. It rained till noon and we held a council of war on the Secret Empire. In the afternoon we began announcing a meeting for the Free Methodist church and put 1,300 pages of literature in 130 dwellings. The audience was small,but no less than was anticipated. Sunday night I spoke on Masonic religion to a good and enthusiastic audience at South Grove three miles out.

Clinton Junction was reached in the rain and after a short stop I went on to Janesville. Here I was hospitably entertained by Bro. Andrew Stevens, an old time Anti-mason. Notwithstanding the mud,on the 6th 4,800 pages of literature were put into more than four hundred homes in Janesville. The city has some sixty saloons, it is said, and Rock county is lodge ridden. Prompted by curiosity a visit was paid to the old Willard farm and that vicinity salted with literature.

On the 7th I stepped from the train at Milton Junction and sought Elder Nathan Wardner, the only man I knew and a warm friend of the cause. He bade me a hearty welcome and counseled as to the best method of moving on the enemy's works. Some four miles west at East Fulton, where Mr. Re-nayne once worked the degrees amid wild commotion, I broke bread with H. Harvey, a venerable brother who has been a staunch Anti-mason for lo, these many years and whose daughter is noted for her zeal for reform. There are a number thereabouts who will be in attendance at the coming meeting at East Milton. Several days of personal effort and search have secured the names of many who are in sympathy with the cause.

The 9th found me interviewing men and scattering literature at Albion and Edgarton. The friends at the latter place were fearful, yet a hearing was secured in the church Saturday night and I got the promise of quite a number who expect to be with us.

Last night was spent with Bro. David Smith, who has taken the Cynosure since it was a little 4-page paper.

M. N. BUTLER.

[The last few lines of Bro. Butler's letter were on a small scrap of paper which was unaccountably lost.—ED.]

IOWA HEARTILY RESPONDS TO HER AGENT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Henry county I went to Birmingham, Van Buren county, and began the canvass for a renewal of subscriptions to the State Association to continue the reform work through another year.

The subscriptions taken during the summer and fall of 1886 and the winter of 86–87, to pay a certain amount monthly for one year, beginning July 13, 1886, are past due now; and what has not been paid

CORRESPONDENCE.

INTO THE FIRE WITH IT.

THE MANIFESTATION OF THE SPIRIT IN THE ARKANSAS BAPTIST CONVENTION CASTS OUT THE TOBACCO FIEND.

PORTLAND, Ark., Sept. 12, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am sure it will interest you and your many readers to glean some few facts, now and then, of the reform that is steadily moving on among the colored people of the South. "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light." Every form of popular intemperance is turned upon by representatives of clergy and laity everywhere. Indeed, the secret empire is fast losing mortar and stone from its very foundation, and the church is doing its "first works."

The "Arkansas Baptist State Convention" met at Camden, Ark., on the 23d ult., continuing in session four days. When the committee on temperance reported and dealt out such strong blows at the tobacco cud, the cigar stump and the bottle, it seemed that a temperance revival broke out anew, "beginning, of course, at the house of God"—the birthplace of all successful revivals and the origin of all true reforms. Live speeches were made by the advocates of temperance and moderate confessions were made by those who had so long been slaves to the dirty habit of smoking. The president, secretary and other officials, as well as many other members of the convention, gave their tobacco as fuel for an eventful bonfire. Nothing but conviction made them do this. They made their own confessions, signed their own pledges, and threw away their own tobacco—or gave it away—without a song or traveling reformer.

It is remarkable, too, to know that it was not necessary to refer to dram-drinking among the brethren, for this custom has also long become odious to every leading preacher of the State. It used to be that the brethren could not preach well (?), could not act well their part in religious or political deliberation until they got a "drink or two ahead." "And there were giants in those days." The man that spoke against strong drink was nothing more than one pigmy among many giants. But every condition of those times stands now in a reversed order. It is no longer unsafe or unpopular to speak against any of these subtle delusions.

I am hoping and praying that the "good work begun in us will continue until that day." Why not? "If God be for us who can be against us?" It will take such work to make the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

Next month I go to the capital city of the State (Little Rock) to grasp the reins of a young institution known as the "Arkansas Baptist College." It is under the auspices of the Convention, which itself has begun to love and cherish every true reform. Hence the reformatory and Christian character of the institution. Whatever your readers can do for us in our well-begun work will be gladly received. We shall need books to build up a wholesome library. We shall need money to help us in the erection of ample buildings. These we are obliged to ask at the hands of those that are in sympathy with our class of institutions. Please place the Cynosure on file with us. Yours very truly, JOS. A. BOOKER.

EXPERIENCES WITHIN AND WITHOUT.

LUTHER, Mich.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—For many years I have been in sympathy with the N. C. A. I was seven years an active Good Templar. The temperance pledge I took in initiation June 14, 1869, I have conscientiously observed and always expect to. I would have done so if I had never joined that or any other temperance organization.

By knowledge gratuitously proffered by an Odd-fellow on the honored principles of Odd-fellowship, I united with them in 1875, to reform and purify the order. The rules were set aside to confer two degrees each week upon me. Through a blunder in initiation I entered the upper hall with my eyes open, beholding the blind-folded lodge, a fit type of the spiritual blindness resting upon them. I was more than ever anxious to see the devil's tail as well as his horns, and receiving the charges on my feet and remembering what they told me, I received the degrees as readily as they were conferred. Quoting Scripture from the ritual or the Word was alike offensive and incurred censure. One sentence of Scripture was all they could bear at one time, and I found that must be the last sentence I uttered. The whole lodge was ready to cut off any Scripture by calling me to order. So pronouncing lodge reform a failure after seven months' experience I withdrew.

In receiving eleven initiations and degrees in secret orders, I would only pledge my honor, yet with a little study of Masonic signs and experience in using them, I was pronounced by the craft (as the secret afterwards leaked out,) a regularly initiated Freemason deserter. At last becoming convinced it was sin to use the devil's tools (secret order signs) in the Lord's work, I sought and found grace, to forget all unwritten, but really "housetop-proclaimed" work.

As a converted infidel who had proclaimed skepticism and the doctrine of demons during four years' travel in twenty-two States, I refused God's call to publish glad tidings for thirteen years before entering the ministry, which I then did to declare the Gospel in apostolic simplicity, compromising with no error, and openly opposing all sin, never to preach the Gospel on a salary, or ask a living soul for a dollar for support, but accept all free-will offerings and live on them or starve. Penurious, soul-starved believers are satisfied with the arrangement, receiving no duns for over-due salary. Nearly a year in the north woods of Michigan, exposed to its rigorous climate, supporting a wife and three children on $34 cash and $89 in trade at high prices, from the field for ten months, has not improved my health, but hindered my pastoral work. Seeing only scores accept Jesus where I looked for a host has not lessened my cares. I regard it important that I leave here by Oct. 17 to go to a milder yet healthy climate.

While I have not made a specialty of fighting secret orders more than other sins, yet secrecy always strives to destroy my influence and support. I would prefer to settle with a Baptist church not afraid to reject secret orders.

I am convinced that secret orders are the most destructive errors entertained by the church and government. The insidious poison is palsying the heart life of its votaries. With charters drawn from pandemonium what else can we expect? When the prayers of believers before fallen men are consistent with their plea to God in the hour of need, and they vote as they pray, satisfied to receive heaven's choicest gifts with persecutions, we may expect to see the Redeemer's kingdom come with power, and living temples erected as monuments of skill in Jehovah's master-building.

Suffering purifies. Our imminent peril brings God nearest. Man's need is God's opportunity. The grandest triumphs of grace I have witnessed were when I was so physically fatigued as to be barely capable of knowing what I was doing, yet strengthened by seeing sin and infidelity totter and fall. Ever yours in overcoming grace, (Rev.) W. H. GARDNER.

THE SPIRIT CLEANSETH.

SEYMOUR LAKE, Mich.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I should almost ask pardon for my long silence the last few months. The Lord has wonderfully delivered me from the powers of the enemy. I am still saved from the powers of Masonry and secret societies. If I can do nothing more, I will from time to time give the readers of the Cynosure my testimony against Masonry. Praise God, I still have the same undying hatred for Masonry I did when I was taken from the lodge. Still I love and pity its poor duped followers; love them enough to warn them of their awful condition; yet I know if they are ever redeemed it will be by the mighty hand of God. Well do I remember how those blasphemous oaths held me in bondage until my soul was well nigh lost forever. Dear reader, there is nothing that will bind a man's soul down to hell like Masonry. There are some diseases that are incurable by man, and nothing but God can cure them. Nothing but the blood of Christ cleansing the heart can ever wash away this terrible scourge of Satan. A man may try to throw it off some other way, but mark the result; it still clings to him like an incurable disease. Praise God, one breath of the Holy Ghost will drive it all away. Drive what away? Masonry? Yes. Drive away the whole catalogue of sins. When Christ is formed within a man he is a new creature. Though I stand alone, I must stand for prohibition and Christ.

PITH AND POINT.

FURTHER FROM THE ARKANSAS COLORED BAPTISTS.

The action of the St. Marion District Association is causing much discussion o n the streets, and of course am accused as the ring leader. A deputation of society folks went to Rev. J. H. Flagg, who would not admit secret society members to his church, and said, "You are trying to follow Johnston. Now, you must let up on your talk on societies and let us help you. Johnston will do you little good; when you need bread and meat, we are your friends." But many Baptist ministers say to me, "Get your school up and we will work for it and give you our support, and attend your school." If we have necessary agencies given we will find sentiment changing in a short time. I hope you can see your way clear to heartily request aid for our school house.—LEWIS JOHNSTON, Pine Bluff, Ark.

AN EPITAPH.

I suggest as an epitaph for an active, fervent opposer of popular evils: He lived up to his convictions.—R. D. NICHOLS.

A GLARING INCONSISTENCY.

Christians, heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ, are you asleep? Can any thing be more preposterous, that is, "utterly and glaringly foolish, contrary to nature and reason" (see Webster), than for the many professedly enlightened Christians in our country to be so busily engaged in doing the very opposite of the works of Christ by the most absurd delusion; that is, hiding their light in the light (darkness) of lodgery? Do they not see that thus they side with those who would prove their Lord wrong? How can they think it wise to bind themselves by oaths or promises which are contrary to the will of God? None such were ever authorized by him in the Old or New Testament.—T. H.

LIGHT BREAKING.

I do not let the Cynosure sleep, but hand it to others. I will take more interest hereafter; I want to see the paper taken throughout the land, and enlightening the world. Would that men would read and lay aside prejudice; they would become more earnest in doing to others as they would be done by, and ministers of the Gospel would not seek the secret orders. At present those are pointed at with the finger of scorn, who dare say a word against the secret orders in this place, but I will fight on for right. I begin to see light.—J. B. WOOLSEY, Bloomfield, Iowa.

MORTGAGES AND MASONRY.

I will try and do something for you this fall, with the help of God. The farmers here are hard up. They all plow too much and run in debt for machinery, and then mortgage and pay ten per cent interest; some pay as high as fifty per cent. Masonry is increasing here fast. I do wish some of your best men could come here and show our young men the evil of the lodges; they should be exposed here. If I had the means I would write them and pay all expenses.—HARVEY TRUSDELL, Kemma, Nebraska.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON I.—Oct. 2. The Centurion's Faith.—Matt. 8: 5-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.—Matt. 8: 10.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Humility of True Faith. vs. 5–8. This nameless centurion has come down to us through the ages like the Syrophonician woman, famous for her great faith. But his humility is no less wonderful. Do we consider as frequently as we should that humility is always a condition of true faith, and therefore of all true prayer. Both are based on and proportionate to the strength of our desires and the greatness of the blessing we seek. The centurion knew that he was seeking at the hands of Jesus superhuman aid for his sick servant, and that the being to whom he applied must be superhuman in order to give it. There is a method very common at the present time of trying to reduce everything in the Bible that we cannot understand to the plane of a natural law. Such a habit of minds kills humility and stifles faith. The habit of trust in a higher power brings us into communion with that power, makes us feel ourselves a part of it, so that we gather courage to battle with difficulties which would appall a soul lacking this sense of divine aid. The more faith a man has in God, the more faith he will have in himself.

2. The Infinite Ruler. v. 9. A whole library of treatises on the nature and laws of prayer might be written and yet the centurion's simple but grandly logical illustration would outweigh them all. Many passages in the Bible speak of Jehovah under martial terms as a "man of war," and "mighty in battle." Even Christ is depicted in one of the sublimest chapters of Revelation as the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of Heaven; and in the hosts over which he is Captain we must place natural law, not only that part of it whose workings we partially understand, but all those tremendous physical and psychic forces that we do not understand at all. The only ground of discouragement in Christian work, lies with the workers themselves. The stars in their courses obey his voice with prompt unquestioning obedience, while the false modesty of a Moses pleads, "I am slow of speech," or a cowardly Jonah may flee to Tarshish, or even the lion-hearted Tishbite have to be asked the question, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" A Christian who says that the liquor traffic is a terrible evil, a crime against humanity, yet believes in licensing it because "prohibition is impracticable," is far from having the faith of this Roman centurion. The same reasoning is applied to the lodge. Many Christians are willing to confess that secret organizations are ruinous to the church, subversive of justice and a foe to the family, while they cannot be brought to do any active service for their overthrow, "because," as they say, "Masonry is too ancient and formidable an institution ever to be attacked with success." While such men may be possessed of a little faith, it is not of the kind which removes mountains. It is not the centurion's faith.

3. The Wideness of God's Purposes of Mercy. vs. 10–13. We have here a divine promise that many will be saved from heathen lands, who live up to the light they have. This so far from checking our enthusiasm for foreign missions, should be our highest incentive to the work. If men can be found like Cornelius and this centurion who, reared in the darkness of heathenism still practice righteousness and mercy, how many might they bring to Christ under fuller light? What streams of beneficence might they set in motion that would eventually reach and bless all humanity? They are pearls too precious to be lost to the church and the world, and read aright the story of the Roman centurion ought to be the most inspiring of missionary lessons.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof." Observe three estimates of the centurion's character: first, his own, not worthy, because a Gentile, and because a sinner; second, the Jewish estimate, worthy, because he had built a Jewish synagogue, the highest encomium on character which a Jewish elder could pass on a Gentile outcast (Luke 7: 4, 5); third, Jesus's estimate, worthy, because of his faith, and needing no commendation from Jewish elders, but himself an example and a rebuke to them.—Abbott.

"For I (also) am a man under authority." The also is very necessary, and is translated in Luke 7: 8. The centurion draws a comparison between our Lord's position and his own. He was a man under authority. He had power, indeed, but it was authorized and delegated power, power derived from the powers above him, such as the tribunes or chief captains (Acts 21: 31) of the legion. The position of Christ was somewhat corresponding. He was sent from above. He held a commission. "All power—all authority—was given unto him" (Matt. 28:18). He was the Lord High Commissioner of the Sovereign of the Universe, the Chief Captain of Salvation.—Morison.

"And I say to this man, Go, and he goeth," etc. He leaves it to our Lord to understand that he recognizes in him an authority beyond all, expecting the powers of nature to obey their Master, just as his soldiers or his servants obey him. It is not probable that he recognized such divine power in Jesus, but power delegated to him by God, as the centurion's power from the emperor, so that he could, without going to the house, say to the disease, Go, and it would go, and to health, Come, and it would come. How grandly he must have believed in him! And it is to be well heeded that the Lord went no farther—turned at once.—McDonald.

"Many shall come from the east and west." From far-off nations, from peoples who had then not even heard of the true God and his salvation. This centurion was an example from Rome, and it was but a few years after this before there were converts to the true faith in almost every nation of that age.

"But the children of the kingdom." The Jews, the natural heirs of the pratriarchs, to whom were committed the oracles of God, whose were the adoption, the covenants, and the promises, and who could not be disinherited but in consequence of their own willful misconduct and unbelief (Rom. 3: 2; 4: 11, 12, 16; 9: 4, 31, 32; 11: 7–10, 20).

APPLICATIONS.—Like the centurion in this chapter, we have many needs, both for ourselves and others, which only Jesus can supply. We have sins and sorrows and burdens beyond our power to remove.

Jesus has proved himself able and willing to help, by having already bestowed upon others the very blessings we need. He is a tried and proved Saviour. He has sustained others in trials and needs like ours; therefore, he will sustain us. He has forgiven others' sins; therefore, he will forgive ours. He has heard others' prayers; therefore, he will hear ours. He has healed others; he will heal us. His words calmed the sea that raged and stormed like the one that is tossing us; therefore, when we see him walking on the waters, we know that the winds and the waves will again obey his "Peace, be still." The history of God's people is full of monuments of his promises.

We must go to him with faith that he is able and willing to help.

Our faith should be generous, reaching out to others, humble, strong, confident, persevering.

Such faith is sure of its reward. God never disappoints those who put their trust in him.

We see more clearly the nature of this faith by considering how we are saved by faith. (1) Faith is a yielding of ourselves to God, a committing of ourselves to him as our God. (2) It is an act of acceptance of his offers and conditions of salvation. It takes what he has so freely given. (3) It implies a choice of Jesus as our Lord and Saviour. We believe in him so as to obey his commands and follow in his footsteps. (4) A faith that realizes what Jesus has done for us, awakens love and devotion in our hearts for him and his cause.

OBITUARY.

Died at Grundy Center, Iowa, on the 11th of September, 1887, MRS. CORDELIA A. BARLOW, wife of Elder J. L. Barlow, after many years of almost constant suffering, aged 75 years. Beloved in life, and sincerely mourned in death, by her surviving husband, children, and numerous friends.

ELIZA TUTTLE was born in Connecticut, June 3, 1811, and died at Mt. Tabor, Vernon county, Wisconsin, August 29, 1887, aged 76 years. She was married to Rev. B. S. Tuttle of the Baptist church, August 29, 1831. They lived in York State and in Ohio; they came to Ontario, Wisconsin, where he died some years ago. She suffered long with paralysis, but died in great peace. In her last days her joy was equal to her suffering. She wished it to be said through the Cynosure that she was an ardent lover of the cause it is advocating. "How blessed the righteous when they die." J.W. REED.

IN BRIEF.

Uncle Sam now has much more than 100,000,000 silver dollars stored away in subterranean vaults.

There is a watch in a Swiss museum only three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, inserted in the top of a pencil case. Its little dial indicates not only hours, minutes, and seconds, but also days of the month.

A foolish woman at Niagara Falls insisted, in spite of the objections of attendants, on taking her three-months-old child through the Cave of the Winds. When she came out the child was dead, having been suffocated by the spray.

Probably the biggest yoke of oxen in the world are on exhibition at the Eastern Maine State Fair this week. They were raised in Vermont, and measure ten feet in girth and actually weigh 7,000 pounds. It cost to raise them up to their great weight over $1,000.

A most remarkable recovery from a supposed fatal injury has just occurred at Tolono, Ill. Frank McCann, an eight-year-old boy, was accidentally struck on the forehead with a ball bat, Aug. 13. His skull was fractured just below the hair line and a considerable quantity of the brain escaped through the opening. Leading physicians of the county pronounced the injury almost necessarily fatal. They desired to perform an operation on the boy's head, but his parents objected. The little fellow rallied, however, within a day or two, and is now to all appearances fully recovered.

The Sunday base ball players were again in the municipal court Tuesday, nineteen of them, including the Minneapolis and Duluth clubs, with the umpire. The case was continued to Sept. 20, and each man placed under $200 bonds, for his appearance in court at that time. Men who will deliberately and wilfully violate the law of the State, thereby making themselves criminals, cannot entertain a very exalted opinion of themselves. If they expect to shield themselves under the city ordinance they will find that like leaning on a broken reed, as the city has no power to abrogate or nullify a State law.—Review, Minneapolis.

The Pennsylvania oil regions that have produced petroleum worth many millions of dollars are to-day in a pitiable condition. The owners of the wells are generally bankrupt, and in a few days the once active oil fields will be virtually idle. The only hope of the producers is to close the wells, stop the supply, and hope for the dawn of better times. The hand of monopoly has fallen heavily on the erstwhile rich region, and to-day it is only a sad ruin of what it was but a few years ago. Thousands and thousands of men have come to poverty who looked forward to wealth. Even speculation is dead. Tool-dressers, pumpers, drillers and other mechanics are out of work, for no new wells are being sunk, and those now running are being worked as economically as possible. Men who once had incomes of from $100 to $200 a day from their wells are now getting a laborer's pay. The fine residences, built by the lucky ones in their palmy days, have become neglected, and the once palatial rooms are let out to lodgers. The producers and the consumers have both enriched the great Standard Oil Company, but the consumer, who pays only a few cents extra each week, has hardly felt the hand that has crushed the life out of the producer. On the principle that little drops of water make the mighty ocean, so the few pennies from each consumer have made millions of dollars for the Standard Company. If it saw fit the Standard Company could advance the price of oil to 50 cents a gallon, and it would take six months for competition to affect the market. It rules the home and foreign trade, and is one of the greatest monopolies in the history of the world.

SUNRISE IN THE SOUTH.—We hope our readers will notice elsewhere that an entire Baptist State association (colored) of Louisiana, has voted unanimously to exterminate and exclude secret societies from their churches. This, so soon following the St. Marion Association of Arkansas, is surely moral sunrise in the South. Dickens, in his letter to Mrs. Stowe, excepted to her suggestion in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," that the colored race might yet come to the front and get the ascendant over the whites, and so "the last" literally become "the first." However this may prove, we know that the white faces are a small minority of mankind, though they now lead and control them. But if God means to save and exalt, morally, the whole people on this globe, great and mighty revolutions must come, and they surely seem to be coming. Will not all our readers turn their eyes South; and all who can send us suggestions about the proposed National Convention in New Orleans next winter.

THE LODGE IN WAR HISTORY.

SEWARD'S DEFEAT AND LINCOLN'S NOMINATION IN THE CHICAGO CONVENTION, MAY 16, 1860.—OTHER SECRET LODGE EXPLOITS.

The thrilling "History of Lincoln," by Nicolay and Hay, now in process of publication in the Century, while searching the United States as with candles, to bring out the hidden causes of the Great Rebellion, makes too little account of one chief agent in the mighty melee, to-wit, the lodge. And yet, can any rational man suppose for a moment that the thousands of Freemasons, dispersed throughout the Union, especially through the South, meeting in temples and halls nightly, were idle lookers-on in the thirty years which preceded and prepared for the war?

In 1860 ten thousand men crowded the Chicago wigwam to make the first Republican nomination which was to succeed. No man in the United States had anything like the prospect for the nomination as Gov. William H. Seward. No one so fully represented the Republican party as he did. He received on the first ballot 72 more votes than any other candidate. This was so well understood, that Horace Greeley telegraphed to the New York Tribune the evening before, that 'Seward would be nominated," though Mr. Greeley was one of his strongest opponents.

The city of Chicago was in a quiver of excitement, and everywhere candidates were discussed on the evening previous to the nomination. Mr. Philo Carpenter heard two Freemasons talking on the sidewalk, who made no secret of their views.

"Well," said one, "I suppose we are to have that Anti-mason Seward as our Republican candidate tomorrow morning."

"Not a bit of it," replied the other. "The lodge has seen to that. Seward will have a large complimentary vote, to satisfy his friends; but he will not receive the nomination, and never will be President."

So it turned out. Mr. Seward received 173½ votes, and Mr. Lincoln 102 at the first ballot. At the third ballot Lincoln was nominated. Judge David Davis and Leonard Swett, knowing that Thurlow Weed was chagrined and disappointed at the failure to nominate Seward, saw and urged Mr. Weed to return by Springfield to see and converse with Mr. Lincoln, to which Weed consented. He went from Chicago to the Mississippi, thence down to Rock Island, and across to Springfield. On the boat he fell in with members of the Virginia delegation returning home, who, before the convention, had promised Mr. Weed to support Seward. These gentlemen said to Mr. Weed, that an explanation was due him, because after pledging themselves to support Seward they had gone against him. "The fact is," said they, "we did not know till we reached the Convention that that was the Wm. H. Seward who was so busy about Anti-masonry in Morgan times."

If there was no mistake in the above statements, which rested at the time on what seemed good authority, the nomination of Seward was defeated by Freemasons on account of his Anti-masonry.

The history of Lincoln in the September number of the Century has the following, page 664:

"One of the earliest symptoms among the delegates at Chicago was a strong under current of opposition to his (Seward's) nomination. This opposition was as yet latent, and scattered here and there among many State delegations, but very intense, silently watching its opportunity and ready to combine on any of the other candidates."

If Messrs. Nicolay and Hay had wished to describe Masonic opposition, the above are the precise terms they would have used. It was neither political or partisan, Northern or Southern. It was an "under-current," "latent," "scattered here and there," "very intense," "silently watching,"—in one word, Masonic. Then, on page 681, speaking of the early "agencies which organized the rebellion," these writers say: "Since conspiracies work in secret, only fragmentary proofs of their efforts ever come to light." But further on, page 684, it is said explicitly: "Two agencies have thus far been described as engaged in fomenting the rebellion: the first, secret societies of individuals, like 'The 1860 Association,' designed to excite the masses and create public sentiment; the second, a secret league of Southern governors," etc., etc. True, those Southern secret lodges commonly took new names. They could not trust a whole Masonic lodge, as some of them might be Union men, and not rebels. But they were all Mason lodges with an alias. Gen. Howard informed the writer that even the butcherly, night-riding Ku-klux "kept their disguises in the Masonic halls!" Thus the White Leagues, Knights of the Golden Circle, the secret societies which defeated St. John in Kansas, with the whole tribe of ante-bellum clubs of conspirators, just assumed new names, adopted a stop degree and new tokens of recognition, but swore the same secret oaths varied to meet the particular scheme on foot, and used the same lodge-rooms, and sheltered each other as different branches of the same dark family of conspirators. The Blue Lodges of Missouri did not even change their names or vary their ritual, but as simple Masons, eo nomine, raised, enlisted, and armed the bloody raids on Kansas, and informed Senator Pomeroy that if he would join the Masons they would protect him, but if not, "if he attempted to go up the Kaw River, he would be killed!" And when Senators Pomeroy and Lane reached Washington, Mr. Ferguson, who was secretary of Federal Lodge No. 1, and aided to initiate Pike's Indians, informed the writer that the ten lodges of the District all went for secession, and Lincoln's assassination was one of the Masonic exploits of that District.

SHALL WE WRITE LOUISIANA AT THE HEAD OF THE LIST?

HER BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION AFTER A REMARKABLE DEBATE VOTES OUT THE LODGE.

Rev. Mr. Hall, an intelligent colored pastor of one of the Congregational churches of New Orleans, called at the Cynosure office a few days since with a most remarkable account of the victory won for Christ and truth in the late meeting of the State Convention of the colored Baptist churches of Louisiana.

This meeting was held at Opelousas and was attended by large delegations. The subject of secret societies, an ever-pressing one among the colored churches, was up for discussion, and numerous speakers spoke of having received the Cynosure through the kindness of unknown friends; that they had read with astonishment and avidity, and had become convinced that the secret orders, now overrunning their churches, were actually practicing religious rites that were a false and forbidden worship. Many of the speakers had preached on the subject, using the facts and arguments gained from the paper with great effect. The unanimous vote of the Convention was that the lodges could not live in the churches, and that the latter should purge out the secret-society leaven from their membership.

This is glorious! And following so soon after the St. Marion Conference decision in Arkansas, gives us joy we can hardly express. Surely the day of God is dawning upon the churches, but the blessed light of Christ strikes the foot of these mountains first. These lowly churches are reading us at the North a blessed lesson; and deeply deserved will be our condemnation if we do not heed it. In them the Lord is again ordaining praise, as once he did from the mouths of babes.

Bro. Hall also gave a happy testimony to the excellence of Miss Flagg's work on the Sabbath-school lesson. Her notes are used regularly in some of the churches, and the applications of the Word of God to the lodge evil are seed in good soil, which shall appear duly in an abundant harvest.

These repeated testimonies to the value of the Cynosure in the Southern work should cause us to redouble our efforts for its circulation there. The colored pastors are unable generally to pay for it, but welcome the gift of Northern friends. It is a small thing to ask this year for A THOUSAND DOLLARS for this fund. Five times that amount would not be too much. This is a great, a blessed work. Let brethren at the North who have means send on the paper, and follow it with their prayers.

—Bro. Peter D. Miller of Wright's Corners in western New York is in favor of a State convention and hopes the Ohio agent can be spared to work for it.

—Secretary Stoddard wrote Saturday very hopefully of the prospect for the Illinois State meeting at Belvidere. Good meetings have been held in the vicinity of Belvidere. Bro. Butler is assisting. He is a great tract distributor, and has judiciously scattered 6,000 pages in Boone county.

—Rev. J. Augustus Cole, who is now visiting the Wesleyan State conferences in Illinois and Iowa, visited Wheaton on the Sabbath, preaching in the College Chapel in the evening. A collection of over $26 was taken for his African mission. He has a company of seven already engaged to go with him to that work, two or whom have been students at Wheaton.

—Our reform bard, George W. Clark of Detroit, is in feeble health. He fears the effect of the Southern trip last winter yet remains in his system in a low malarial fever; but he hopes to wear it out and have strength to sing and speak for pure and holy living to yet many thousands of his fellow men.

—Rev. M. A. Gault gave two lectures last week before the students of Milton College, Wis. He also lectured twice in the Seventh-day Baptist church at Milton Junction. The week before he gave three lectures in the Buffalo U. P. church in Marquette county. He also lectured the same week in Columbia county at Caledonia, DeKorra, Arlington and Paynette. He preached in two of the leading Janesville churches last Sabbath.

—Bro. Wm. F. Davis, of Chelsea,Mass., the evangelist of Boston Common,sent the other day a sharp rebuke to the Chelsea Record of the leading members of the Y. M. C. A. of that city for their worldliness and sinful example as active members of Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges. They are plainly told that they are not fit to be trusted with the direction of Gospel work and impugn their own intelligence and bonesty by ministering at the false altars of the lodge.

—The sad word had but just come from Elder Barlow of the death of his beloved wife, a long and patient sufferer, when a letter from Rev. C. E.Walker, of Grey Eagle, Minnesota, a freqent contributor to the Cynosure and pastor of the United Brethren church, tells of the brief and fatal illness of his young wife,Sept. 12. To both these bereaved brethren we give our sincerest sympathy, with the prayer that the Divine Comforter may graciously sustain them in this greatest of life's trials.

—Bro. G. H. Gregorian, an Armenian from Cæsarea in Cilicia, completed his studies at Wheaton College and Chicago Theological Seminary last spring, and is now on his return to take charge of an important church and school at Yozgat, Asia Minor, under engagement to the American Board. He writes from Great Barrington, Mass.,where he is visiting the aged missionary and great friend of the Armenians, Rev. H. T. VanLennep. Before his departure from this country he is lecturing in New England and raising funds for a small outfit to be used in Armenia. His work there will be partially self-supporting, the Board supplying deficiencies. Bro. Gregorian is well known to many readers of the Cynosure and will write occasionally for them. The action of the American Board in engaging this native Armenian brother for labor among his own people is cheering, and indicates a more liberal management among the Armenians which will be hailed by the American churches. A few years since Armenians seeking an education in this country for missionary service were hampered and perplexed greatly.

—In our brief notice last week of the Farm, Field and Stockman, the able farmers' journal conducted by Gen. C. H. Howard in this city, there was not room to speak of a singular experience that paper is having. Mr. Wilson, one of the publishers, is an experienced seedsman, and in following up a business in which he had delight, he made the offer of seed premiums a profitable one for the paper. But it seems that the American Seed Trade Association, a secret society of seed dealers, consider that this business is trespassing upon its privileges, in giving away that for which they are accustomed to charge very high prices. At their last meeting at Philadelphia, the Association, therefore, passed a resolution boycotting the paper and binding all its members to withdraw their advertising and other patronage from it unless its publishers shall discontinue their free seed distribution. As this resolution is inspired by purely selfish motives, and the paper is engaged in a generous and commendable work, the boycott, as is usually the case when this vulgar weapon is used, is likely to prove a boomerang to the seedsmen. The publishers of the paper not only propose to go right along supplying its subscribers with new varieties of seed free, but has also, as an answer to the boycott, made arrangements to supply them with such seeds as they want to buy, at wholesale prices.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We can not have Gladstone and Bright, but in October an English deputation will reach Washington to present a memorial on international arbitration to President Cleveland and Congress. Andrew Carnegie, the iron manufacturer of Pittsburgh, will introduce them, and Lord Herschel, late Lord Chancellor under Gladstone, will join them here. Our Presidents have in several annual messages called upon Congress to act in this matter, and it will make any administration illustrious which can secure a definite action and permanent results. It is a noble reform, but it is pitiful that our law makers turn from it to proposals for big ships, guns and forts on which they can spend an immense treasury surplus.

The trial of Munchrath for complicity in the murder of Haddock at Sioux City is over. The jury retired Saturday evening and next day reported a verdict of manslaughter. An appeal will be taken, but the verdict will probably stand. It is received with satisfaction by the people, who saw with alarm the former triumph of the murderous saloon in the Arensdorf case. This conviction re-opens the whole case, puts the prosecution upon the vantage ground, as evidence valuable to the prosecution has been established, contradicting the defense set up by Arensdorf. The latter is fast losing the ill-deserved sympathy he has enjoyed; the saloons are all closed; the resources of the indicted conspirators are vanishing, and a far different result awaits the chief actor in the great targedy when he shall be again put on trial.

Rev. Mr. Goss, pastor of Chicago Avenue church, in this city, is preaching a series of six secular sermons on consecutive Thursday evenings, commencing with the subject, "The Dignity of a Servant Girl's Position." His other themes are: "A Clerk's Temptations," "Poor People and Good Clothes," "The Manufacture of Paupers," "The Homes of the Poor," and "The Nineteenth Century Taskmasters." Mr. Goss's recent sermon in the interest of tailoring girls was the subject of general comment, and his known interest in the welfare of all classes of workingmen and women is drawing large and attentive audiences. The Inter Ocean publishes an abstract of each discourse. A false and evil report has gone out that the recent trouble in the church which called Mr. Moody from the East came from the anger of wealthy manufacturers in the church. There are no such members. The objection was for an altogether different reason, and the young pastor by using a mid-week evening for these discourses is harmonizing all conflicting interests.

The decision of the Illinois Supreme Court affirming the judgment of the lower court was given to the world last Wednesday. The solemn sentence again sent a thrill of awe through all hearts, and seven men are to be hung on the 11th of November next, if their sentence is not commuted. Talk of an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the engagement of eminent lawyers is nearly subsided, and the anarchists within and without Cook County jail are giving every energy of thought and action to move Governor Oglesby to use his clemency. It cannot be denied that there is an ill-concealed sentiment in favor of commuting the sentences of Fielden and Schwab; but it is not likely to affect the Governor. The Knights of Labor and labor union lodges quite generally in Chicago and New York are declaring against the verdict in spite of Powderly's declaration that his order is not anarchistic. The verdict is received generally, however, with the belief that the courts have done their duty well, and the decision, though reached through unusual difficulties, is just and must be maintained.

THOUGHTS ON NATIONAL REFORM.

IT IS HAND IN HAND WITH THE N. C. A. WORK.

W. L. Wright, of Waukesha, Wis., said to me recently—and he is among the most intelligent and liberal supporters of all reforms—"I am now convinced that you can't carry the National Reform and anti-secret ideas separately, though I once thought that this could be done." He is now satisfied that the National Reform plow must be put in so deep that it will tear up by the roots the upas of secret societies.

Rev. J. D. Smith, pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Lodi, Wis., is desirous of working in the anti-secret reform, but cannot leave home on account of an invalid wife. He has helped me more in National Reform work than any minister in the State. He told me that true loyalty to Christ would never permit a National Reformer to dodge the anti-secret issue. The law of God is a unit, and Divine truth is a unit, and you cannot separate it, or ignore any part of it.

But still there is reason and good sense, as Bro. Smith says, in each movement giving its main strength to its special department of reform. Let the anti-secret movement direct its main strength to prove the danger that comes to state and church from secret societies; and showing how they obstruct all reforms; and putting some other reform to the front if necessary, as a sugar coating to the pill. Also let the National Reformer, while showing the danger of leaving God out of government, not shun to declare when it comes in his way—and there are few places where it will not come in his way—that secret societies, especially Freemasonry, commits the same sin as the government, in putting another supreme above God and the Bible. But the advocates of each movement must confine their strength mainly to their distinct issues. A lecturer "will get mighty thin if he spreads himself over all reform questions." On the principle of division of labor, let us be mainly specialists.

A generation ago, the National Reform idea, or the idea of God in government, was heralded by a somewhat eccentric but powerful preacher named Dr. James Renwick Willson. His dust for nearly fifty years has been sleeping in Coldenham churchyard, Orange Co., N. Y. Dr. John Mason said in his day, that Dr. Willson was the most eloquent preacher in the United States. Prof. J. R. W. Sloane and Dr. A. M. Milligan were students under Dr. Willson, and I have heard them both declare that they got their main inspiration on this question from him.

Sloane and Milligan were men such as the centuries seldom produce. Sloane was a power in argument and debate, and Milligan was the eloquent orator. I have heard Talmage and Beecher, but their words have never stirred my soul like the words of Dr. Milligan. But while these men by their popular addresses in conventions and meetings, were the chief instruments in arousing a sentiment on the National Reform question, and popularizing the movement, yet they lacked the ability to organize that sentiment. This was left for two men who were students under Dr. Sloane. They were Dr. David McAllister, and Dr. T. P. Stevenson, the editors of the Christian Statesman, who have given the best strength of their lives to this movement. Its perfect organization, and judicious management, are due mainly to their influence. They have made this question a life study, and are perhaps better authorities on all questions relating to government and God than any men in the nation.

Recently at the Lake Side convention where Dr. McAllister made an address, and presided at a question drawer, a large variety of questions were handed in, and the Doctor answered them so satisfactorily that the people could not help expressing their admiration. When the question in reference to secret societies came up, Dr. McAllister disposed of it in much the same style as Dr. Blanchard would have done.

THE HOME.

THE FORSAKEN FARM-HOUSE.

Against the wooded hills it stands,
Ghost of a dead home, staring through
Its broken lights on wasted lands
Where old-time harvests grew.

Unplowed, unsown, by scythe unshorn,
The poor forsaken farm-fields lie,
Once rich and rife with golden corn,
And pale green breadths of rye.

Of healthful herb and flower bereft,
The garden plot no housewife keeps;
Through weeds and tangle only left,
The snake, its tenant, creeps.

A lilac spray, once blossom-clad,
Sways bare before the empty rooms;
Beside the roofless porch, a sad,
Pathetic red rose blooms.

His track, in mold and dust of drouth,
On floor and hearth the squirrel leaves,
And in the fireless chimney's mouth
His web the spider weaves.

The leaning barn, about to fall,
Resounds no more on husking eves;
No cattle low in yard or stall,
No thresher beats his sheaves.

So sad, so drear! It seems almost
Some haunting presence makes its sign;
That down yon shadowy lane some ghost,
Might drive his spectral kine.

ONE WAY TO LOOK AT IT.

Mrs. Barnes, with her friend Mrs. Preston, stood before a counter doing some morning shopping.

"I have a consignment of muslin underwear that I would like to show you," said the proprietor. "They are much finer and cheaper than anything I have had heretofore."

The ladies exclaimed as box after box was opened before them.

"How pretty, and how well made!" said Mrs. Barnes.

"Good work and good material," said Mrs. Preston, examining with critical eyes.

"And the embroidery is so fine and put on so tastefully," said her friend.

"They are much cheaper than you could get them by buying the material and having them made," said the proprietor, and his customers fully agreed with him.

"How is it possible to sell them so cheap, and make any profit?" asked Mrs. Barnes.

"Well, you see," said the gentleman, "the muslin is bought from the mills and the embroidery from the factories, by the million yards. The cutting is done by machines which cut thousands at one movement. And the sewing machines which make up the garments are run by water or steam power."

"Still," said Mrs. Preston, "there must be a good deal of human power expended on the putting together, the guiding of these dainty tucks and ruffles. I wonder," looking thoughtfully at one of the pretty garments, "how many backs and eyes have ached over these."

"I suppose that's a consideration which has to enter in," said the proprietor. "It is very likely that those who have the most work in these things have the least profit."

"You needn't, however, try to make me feel solemn over them," said Mrs. Barnes, laughing. "I'm going to buy them, and take all the comfort I can out of their goodness and cheapness, without having it spoiled by your dismal reflections."

"It is very likely I shall buy, too," said Mrs. Preston, with a smile, "as I do not see my way to the correcting of whatever abuse may lie in the matter."

Mrs. Barnes bought largely; Mrs. Preston took a few articles, remarking, "I must take measurements of my growing girls before I get any more."

The ladies separated as they left the store, Mrs. Preston taking the street-cars which led into the neighborhood of the house of her washwoman.

She found Mrs. McFinn in the full tide of wringing, boiling, rinsing, and starching, but not too busy to sit down for a short time to enjoy the visit, made half for business, but half, she well knew, for friendliness.

A girl with a slender form, and a face whose paleness and expression of wistful depression appealed strongly to Mrs. Preston's sympathies, was cowering over the stove as she came in, but soon after left the room.

"Who is she?" asked Mrs. Preston.

"O, it's a slip av a gurrel that's got niver the bit av a father or mother, God help the crathur! She come up from the counthry lasht fall, to take a place in wan o' thim big shtores. An' they worked her very hard—she shtandin' on the two feet of her sometimes till 'livin o'clock o'nights whin the Christhmas thrade was doin'. An' whin that was over, they give her short notice to quit; an' she's been thryin' to sew since thin. But it's the shtarvin' prices they pays for shop work. An' the poor bit av a thing comes in here to get warm, for it's no fire she has in her own room."

The steamy air of the room, heavy with the vile odors of soiled linen, together with other odors which belong to crowded living and lack of ventilation, were already making Mrs. Preston long for a breath of the outside air. Mrs. McFinn's buxom figure seemed to thrive on the familiar atmosphere, but her visitor's heart ached with the thought of the pale girl, and her mind wandered to her own blooming daughters. How could she bear to have them breathe such air for a moment? Had the mother of this girl, in dying, looked forward with sad foreboding to the possibilities which might await her child?

"Couldn't she take a place at housework?" she asked—she had small sympathy for the sentiment, whatever it might be, which would keep a person from seeking the comforts of such a situation.

"Well, ma'am, it's a wake back she's got, an' it's no heavy work she could be doin'."

Mrs. Preston considered for a moment.

"Tell her to come around to see me," she said, "and I will give her some sewing."

"Indeed, ma'am, it'll be the blessed thing for her. She's thryin' with all her might to help somebody belonging to her, an' it's my belafe she don't get a dacent bit to ate from wan month's end to another."

Mrs. Preston considered again, then asked to see the girl, and engaged her to come to her house and do sewing by the day.

"Have you bought your underwear?" asked Mrs. Barnes of her friend as she stepped in for a morning chat two or three weeks later.

"No, I am hiring it made."

Mrs. Barnes held up her hands in astonishment.

"Why, Margaret, don't you know it's the most extravagant and thriftless thing in the world to hire such work done?"

"Oh, I think not," said Mrs. Preston, smiling at her friend's vigorous way of expressing herself. "I am inclined to believe it about the most economical arrangement I have ever made."

"Then you must be getting it done cheaply, wonderfully so. Now, begging your pardon, Margaret, I have my doubts about its being right to pay these very low prices. Doesn't it seem a little like grinding the faces of the poor?"

"I hope I shall not do that," said Mrs. Preston, smiling now at Mrs. Barnes's virtuous air and words. "I am not putting the work out, but having it done in the house."

"Margaret! It will cost you a small fortune! It's bad enough by the piece, but the idea of having plain sewing done by the day! Why, I thought you had very sensible ideas on the subject of economy!"

"Did you?" said Mrs. Preston, a sober look taking the place of the smile. "I chanced to meet with a young girl who stood sorely in need of the comforts of a home, a warm room to work in, and plenty of good, nourishing food, and I have taken so much pleasure in seeing the color and the roundness coming into her cheeks, and the forlorn, discouraged look going out of her eyes, that I feel as though I had made a very good bargain."

"But it will take her weeks, or months, to do your plain sewing."

"Probably. And she is nice and quick in her ways about other things; so, if nothing better offers for her, I may decide to keep her all the time."

"Very nice for people that can afford it," said Mrs. Barnes. "You see, it is simply adding one more to your family. You are at the expense of her entire support."

"Yes, and in view of the fact that I do not really need, all the time, exactly such help as she can give, it may look like an extravagance. But I have been thinking more about such things lately, Ruth, and I am not sure that our best economies are those in which we save the most money. To get right at the root of my idea—if I don't bore you?"—

"No; go on. I like to hear you talk."

"Well, when a man is able to marry and support a family—a decent Christian family, I mean—he is doing a great deal more good in the world than if he lived only to himself, isn't he?"

"Of course."

"And if they keep one or more servants who become partakers of the comforts and good influences of the home, it is doing just so much more, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Well, now, it has become impressed upon me that when such a family is blessed with a fair share of prosperity, the best use they can make of it is to extend these benefits a little farther. Suppose, for instance, a friendless girl has a share of the comforts under their roof, doing what lies in her power to earn them? Now, if in giving her the chance of doing so, my sewing costs me a little more than it otherwise might, I am quite willing to let the balance go over to my gifts, feeling sure that the Lord will see that it is counted up fairly."

"You are right," said Mrs. Barnes as she took her leave.

She walked home, musing on her friend and her friend's words and ways: "'I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in.' Yes, yes; she is doing it in the very letter and the spirit."

"I'M HANDLING TRUST FUNDS."

Stepping into the store of a Christian business man one day, I noticed that he was standing at his desk with his hands full of bills which he was carefully counting as he laid them down one by one.

After a brief silence I said:

"Mr. Henry, just count out $50 from that pile of bills and make yourself or some other person a life member of the Christian Giving Society."

He finished his count and quickly replied, "I'm handling trust funds now."

His answer instantly flashed a light on the entire work and life of a Christian, and I replied to his statement with the question:

"Do you ever handle anything but trust funds?"

If Christians would only realize that all that God gives us is "in trust," what a change would come over our use of money. "I'm handling trust funds now!"

Let the merchant write the motto over his desk; the farmer over the income of his farm; the laborer over his wages; the professional man over his salary; the banker over his income; the housekeeper over her house expense purse; the boy and girl over "pocket money"—and what a change would be made in our business!

A business man who had made a donation of $100,000 to a Christian enterprise once said in the hearing of the writer:

"I hold that a man is accountable for every sixpence he gets."

There is the Gospel idea of "trust funds."

Let parents instruct and train their children to to "handle trust funds" as the stewards of God's bounty, and there will be a new generation of Christians.

Thanks to Mr. Henry for the suggestive remark: "I'm handling trust funds now." It will help us to do more as the stewards of God. May it help others.

EYES OPEN.

Rachie went off to school wondering if Aunt Amy could be right.

"I will keep my eyes open," she said to herself.

She stopped a moment to watch old Mrs. Bert, who sat inside her door binding shoes. She was just now trying to thread a needle, but it was hard work for her dim eyes.

"Why, if here isn't work for me!" exclaimed Rachie. "I never should have thought of it if it hadn't been for Aunt Amy. Stop, Mrs. Bert, let me do that for you."

"Thank you, my little lassie. My poor old eyes are worn out, you see. I can get along with the coarse work yet, but sometimes it takes me five minutes to thread my needle. And the day will come when I can't work, and then what will become of a poor old woman?"

"Mamma would say the Lord would take care of you," said Rachie very softly, for she felt she was too little to be saying such things.

"And you can say it too, dearie. Go on to school now. You've given me your bit of help and your comfort too."

But Rachie had got hold of the needle-book, and was bending over it with busy fingers.

"See," she presently said, "I've threaded six needles for you to go on with. And when I come back I'll thread some more."

"May the sunlight be bright to your eyes, little one," said the old woman as Rachie skipped away.

"Come and play, Rachie," cried many voices as she drew near the play-ground. "Which side will you be on?"

But there was a little girl with a very downcast face sitting on the porch.

"What is the matter, Jennie?" said Rachie, going to her.

"I can't make these add up," said Jennie in a discouraged tone, pointing to a few smeary figures on her slate.

"Let me see—I did that example at home last night. Oh, you forgot to carry ten—see?"

"So I did." The example was finished and Jennie was soon at play with the others.

Rachie kept her eyes open all day, and was surprised to find how many ways there were of doing kindnesses, which went far toward making the day happier. Try it, little girls and boys, and you will see for yourselves.

"Will you look here, Miss Rachie?"

Bridget was sitting in the back porch,looking dolefully at a bit of paper which lay on the kitchen table she had carried out there.

"It's a letther I'm afther writin' to me mother,an' it's fearin' I am she'll niver be able to rade it, because I can't rade it mesilf. Can you rade it all, Miss Rachie? It's all the afternoon I've been at it."

Rachie tried with all her might to read poor Bridget's queer scrawl but was obliged to give it up.

"I'll write one for you some day, Bridget," she said. "I'm going over to Jennie's to play 'I spy' now."

The fresh air and the bird songs and the soft wind made it very pleasant to be out of doors after being in school all day. And her limbs fairly ached for a good run. But she turned at the gate for another look at Bridget's woe-begone face.

"I'll do it for you now, Bridget," she said, going back.

It was not an easy task,for writing was slow work with her; but she formed each letter with painstaking little fingers,and when she had finished felt well repaid by Bridget's warm thanks and a satisfied feeling of duty well done.

"Our Master has taken his journey
To a country that's far away."

Aunt Amy heard the cheery notes floating up the stairs, telling of the approach of the little worker.

"I've been keeping my eyes open, Aunt Amy,and there's plenty and plenty to do."—Sel.

GRANDMOTHER READING THE BIBLE.

Hush, little feet! go softly
Over the echoing floor,
Grandmother's reading the Bible
There by the open door.
All of its pages are dearer still,
Now she is almost down the hill.

The golden summer sunshine
Round her is gently shed,
Gold and silver together
Crowning her bending head,
While she follows where saints have trod,
Reading the blessed Book of God.

Grandmother's past the morning,
Past the noonday sun,
And she is reading and resting
After her work is done;
Now in the quiet autumn eves
She has only to bind her sheaves.

Almost through with trial,
Almost done with care
And the discipline of sorrow
Hallowed by trust and prayer,
Waiting to lay her armor down,
To go up higher and take the crown.

No little feet to follow
Over this weary road,
No little hand to lighten
Of many a weary load;
Children standing in honored prime
Bless her now in her evening time.

Grandmother has closed the volume,
And by her saintly look,
Peace I know she has gathered
Out of the sacred Book;
Maybe she catches through the door
Glimpses of heaven's eternal shore.

A WONDERFUL ECHO.

There is, near Boston, in that part of Newton known as the Upper Fall, a most remarkable and magnificent structure justly called "Echo Bridge." People from a distance visit it as one of the wonders of New England. The bridge is about 500 feet long, and has seventeen arches. Six of these have spans of thirty-seven feet each, but the seventh is 130 feet, the second in size on this continent, and one of the largest stone arches in the world. But the most wonderful feature of this structure is the "echo," from which it derives its name. An ordinary shout will be repeated from fifteen to twenty times, and it is said that a pistol-shot will create upward of twenty-five echoes. A party of visitors shouted the word "Ha!" and such a merry peal of laughter resounded, that they were forced to join it in spite of themselves. The word "echo" (with the accent on the last syllable) was spoken in a sharp, full tone, and the voice of the "cow-boy" was heard in the surrounding woods, calling, "co—co—co—co—co," growing fainter and fainter, as, in imagination, the boy with his cows left the party in the rear. —Congregationalist.

TEMPERANCE.

THE MICHIGAN PROHIBITION VOTE.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

What mean those one hundred and seventy-eight thousand ballots for the amendment? They were cast by the most intelligent, virtuous, loyal and patriotic citizens, and the heaviest tax payers of the State. These votes certainly did not mean mere "restriction" or "regulation." They did not mean high or low license. Nor did they mean "high tax" or "local option," nor any scheme which implies license—thus making the people guilty and responsible for the crimes and wretchedness caused by the traffic. All these schemes are cunningly devised evasions, shirks, to stave off the duty and responsibility of the real issue, to head off the Prohibitionists and so keep the "G. O. P." in good favor with the liquor interest, and secure for it the liquor support. All this tampering with the enemy favors, fattens, strengthens and emboldens the monster and prolongs the struggle for his destruction. It keeps the old wolf upon its legs, hungry, voracious and prowling for its prey. No, gentlemen, that 4th of April vote has no doubtful, no uncertain, no equivocal significance. It means death to the liquor traffic. It means straight out prohibition and nothing else. It means prohibition, "rooted and grounded, sure and steadfast" in the constitution; prohibition firmly imbedded in the fundamental law of the land.

And now when the good people demand bread will you give them stones? When they demand fish will you continue to give them scorpions? When they ask relief and protection from this Satanic traffic by prohibition will you open the flood gates of crime and woe upon them by license? Under this Satanic license or tax system the liquor mongers have grown to be a bloated, insolent and menacing oligarchy, setting at defiance the laws of both God and man. Their traffic, like the slave traffic,is a piracy, and, like that inhuman traffic, has no rights but to die! Its saloon rows, riots, outrages, Sabbath desecrations and bloody murders are the order of the day; and every newspaper teems with its revolting deeds. Its control, not only of votes but of courts, its manipulations of juries and evasion of convictions and of penalties, its thwarting of justice and escape from deserved punishment for its cold-blooded and atrocious crimes, are notorious and alarming to all lovers of law and order, of home and country.

The old political parties have courted and coddled and licensed this bloated, beastly power until it has grown into a huge monster anaconda, under the influence and power of whose crushing coils they are now writhing and beginning to cry out,"The saloons must go!" But the saloons won't go, gentlemen, so long as they are upheld and sanctified by your license, tax or local option laws. They will continue to murder our sons, beggar and break the hearts of our daughters, and fill our prisons and poor-houses and mad-houses just so long as they can subordinate your parties to their base, selfish and devilish purposes. This monster will only loosen his terrible coils and yield his deadly grip by the power of entire prohibition. All monkeying around, all claptrap legislation,all tampering with this excrescence, this moral putridity, will utterly fail to eradicate it.

TEMPERANCE TEACHING.

I wonder if any other mother has two boys who are such walking interrogation points as mine are. They come home from school bubbling over with information, which they proceed to impart to me in the Socratic fashion.

"Mamma, who killed the Gorgon?" said Arthur—who is reading Charles Kingley's "Greek Heroes"—one day last week, when I was busy making a cottage pudding for dinner. I tried to remember whether it was Perseus or Theseus, and, on the Irishman's principle that if it was not one it was the other, managed to answer it right.

The next question proved not so easy. "Mamma, where are the Eastern Highlands?"

"Oh, a part of Boston, I suppose," I answered, absently, trying to remember whether I had put any salt into the pudding sauce.

"Not right!" said my young mentor; "the Eastern Highlands extend from the Appalachian system to the Great Atlantic Plain."

"Well," I said, "you can see the great Atlantic plain in Boston; that is, if you stand on high enough ground and use your eyes."

"Oh, you mean the great Atlantic Ocean; that isn't it at all," said my disgusted young teacher.

The new temperance text-books have just been introduced into our schools, so, now, my teaching is all on the line of the physical effects of alcohol on the human system.

"Mamma, what does alcohol do to the muscles?" said Eddie, the younger and more fervid apostle of temperance, the other day.

"I suppose it weakens them," I said, doubtfully.

"No, it don't; it changes the muscles into fat," said Master Eddie, and both boys looked suspiciously at my plump self.

"Oh, well," I answered, quickly, in self-defense, "it doesn't make good, solid fat, but soft and flabby."

Both boys gave my arm a reassuring pinch, and confidence was restored to their young bosoms.

"What does alcohol do to the human stomach?" was the next question.

"It causes dyspepsia," said I, taking refuge in a long word.

"Worse than that," said both boys in chorus; "it takes the coat all off a man's stomach."

"I have known it to take the coat off his back, too," I answered, jocosely; but they were in no joking mood.

"That is nothing, mamma; a man might stop drinking, and earn money and buy a new coat for his back, but he could never get his coat for his stomach back again."

Another time, when we had boiled eggs for breakfast, the boys took occasion to explain how the brain becomes cooked in alcohol until it is almost like the hard-boiled egg, till, at last, I said:

"Well, boys, how do you suppose a man feels with his muscles turned to fat, the coat of his stomach all gone, and his head full of hard-boiled eggs instead of braine?"

"I think he didn't know what it was going to do to him, or he wouldn't have used it," said Eddie. "You won't get any of the school-boys to use it, not if they was a-dying," he protested, forgetting his grammar in his earnestness.

After the boys had gone to school I kept thinking of Eddie's words, and thanking God for scientific temperance teaching in the schools.—Zion's Herald.

PROHIBITIONISTS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The State Prohibition convention met in Worcester September 7. It was composed of 857 delegates, representing 190 cities and towns. Three thousand five hundred dollars was raised for campaign purposes. A telegram was sent to Neal Dow stating the number present and saying: "Cheer up, old man; your children are growing to a mighty height." W. H. Earle of Worcester was nominated for Governor; Dr. John Blackmer of Springfield for Lieutenant Governor; Amos E. Hall of Chelsea for Secretary of State; J. H. Kilborn of Lee for State Treasurer; E. M. Stowe for Auditor, and Allen Coffin of Nantucket for Attorney General. The platform accuses the liquor men of bribing legislatures and murdering its opponents; declares against licensing and local options; insists on the necessity of a third party; declares that the Democratic party makes no pretensions in the direction of prohibition, and that the Republican party does nothing else, and, in conclusion, it demands the immediate repeal of all license laws and the submission of a constitutional prohibition amendment to the people.

The new law in New York against the adulteration of wine has just gone into effect. It prohibits among other things the "carbonating" process for making champagne. The dealers are preparing to fight the law.

The late Iowa Republican convention put this plank in their platform: "Iowa has no compromise to hold with the saloon. We declare in favor of the faithful and vigorous enforcement in all parts of the State of the prohibitory law. The pharmacy law and the county permit law should be so amended as to prevent the drugstore or wholesale liquor law from becoming in any manner the substitute or successor of the saloon." This is the emphatic position that should be everywhere taken by the Republicans. Such a course is the only salvation of the party. A large body of the party in Iowa, however, have seceded, and are working up an independent movement with the hope of keeping it alive on liquor.

can be used when sent to the treasurer of the State Association, James Harvey of Pleasant Plain, Jefferson county, Iowa, in paying what is behind of the expenses of last year's work. But now the effort is to raise a subscription to meet the expenses of a second year. Why should the work cease? Who will help financially to carry the reform forward in the State of Iowa?

Dr. J. N. Norris, the veteran of the anti-lodge reform in Iowa, was gone on a visit to his children in Nebraska. They miss him at home, and I was sorry to find him away. He headed the subscription with $1 per month for the last year. Dr. W. Pitt Norris promptly subscribed $1 per month for the second year. Henry McCausland followed with the same. Bro. J. Graham, a pillar in the Free Methodist church of Birmingham, subscribed 50 cts. a month, as did Dr. J. C. Norris and Bro. C. M. Thompson of the Christian church. Each of these gave the same subscription they gave last year, except Dr. J. C. Norris, who doubled his. Wm. Miser, who is also a pillar in the F. M. church and a seceded Mason, subscribed $5 for the second year.

There is an unchartered, clandestine Masonic lodge in Birmingham, and Bro. Miser assured me that they do as perfect work as any of the "lawfully constituted lodges" in that or the adjoining counties. A number more subscribed so that on Saturday I booked $53 in subscriptions to the State Association.

At 11 A. M. on the Sabbath I preached in the U. P. church for Rev. George Warrington, the pastor, who is president of the Iowa Association and editor of the Birmingham Free Press and also of the Psalm Singer, an able monthly fast coming into favor with the Psalm-singing churches. In the evening I preached in the Free Methodist church.

On Monday I took subscriptions to the amount of $29, and Tuesday night I lectured in the U. P. church. Dr. W. Pitt Norris assured me that his father and himself would secure what additional subscriptions they could in their county. The reformers of Iowa are determined to push on the work until God, in his good providence, shall give the victory. If the same indomitable spirit, that many have manifested, is in the hearts of the friends of reform throughout the State, we shall be able to go forward through the year to come despite the obstacles in our way because of the prevailing drouth. Let friends of the anti-secret reform, all over Iowa, send in their subscriptions or cash donations to James Harvey, State treasurer. You will find his name and address among the officers of the Iowa State Association published every week in the Cynosure.

From Birmingham I came to Pleasant Plain and stopped with James Harvey. Here I lectured Saturday evening and preached in the Friends meeting house Sabbath morning and in the Presbyterian church at night. James Harvey, Aaron Burgess, J. C. Paxton, Milton Paxton and John Lena subscribed to carry forward the reform work another year, and Mrs. Dr. Smith gave a cash donation of $5.

From Pleasant Plain I went to Washington and called upon Dr. Crawford. I was encouraged to find the last year's subscription so nearly paid, and to be assured that those who had not already paid were staunch men whose pledge was as good as money in bank. I had only time to begin the work of securing a renewal of subscriptions at Washington for another year.

I cut short my work at Washington to go to Oskaloosa to attend the Friends' Yearly Meeting, to secure the enlarged co-operation of Friends represented in that body.

I hope that the annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, to be held at College Springs, Page county, Oct. 18, will be largely attended by the friends of reform. The outlook at the Oskaloosa Yearly Meeting will be given in my next.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Evangelist Moody does not intend going to India. His reasons are that the work of the missionaries is more successful than his meetings. He will quite likely labor this fall in the Southwest, possibly beginning in Kentucky.

—D. W. Whittle begins a series of meetings at Ottumwa, Iowa, Sept. 15. From thence he goes to Dubuque, Iowa, and after that to Keokuk, reaching the latter place by Nov. 15. It is understood that some concerted effort is being made to keep him in Iowa this season.

Munhall, for a series of evangelistic meetings to begin on September 18. Dr. Munhall will be accompanied by Professor and Mrs. Towner, so well and widely known for their services in Gospel song. The services are to be entirely undenominational, and will be held in one of the largest rinks in the city. Dr. Munhall spent a portion of August conducting the night meetings at Lakeside, Ohio. August 24 he began a two weeks' campaign at Bowdoin Square Baptist church, Boston.

—The Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions has lately received letters depicting a terrible condition of affairs among the famine-stricken people of the Cicilian plain, Asia Minor. The inhabitants are literally starving, and the missionaries at Adana are furnishing bread to 1,500 families. The American Board has made an appeal for funds with which to alleviate the distress. Contributions for that purpose should be forwarded to the treasurer, Langdon S. Ward, No. 1 Somerset street, Boston.

—A deputation from the Edinburgh Medical Students' Missionary Association is to visit America in the interests of evangelistic work. The deputation consists of Professors Simpson and Greenfield, of the Edinburgh University, and Professor Drummond, whose name has become a household word all over the world. The deputation is also to consist of a number of students. This deputation has already visited most of the universities in Scotland and England.

—At the last meeting of the American Bible Society in New York the attention of the Board was called to the recent official order prohibiting the use of the Dakota language in certain schools in Montana and Dakota Territory, and a committee consisting of Dr. Fancher, the Hon. John Jay and Secretary Gilman was appointed to consider this matter in its relation to the circulation of the Scriptures printed by the Society in the Indian languages.

—Over two million dollars is the sum to be distributed under the will of the late Cornelius B. Irwin, of New Britain, Conn., President of the Russell and Irwin Manufacturing Company. Among the bequests are $10,000 each to the American Home Missionary Society, American Missionary Association, American Baptist Home Missionary Society, and the Connecticut Industrial School for girls; $30,000 for Mariette College, Ohio, and $25,000 for Oliver College, Michigan.

—Dr. Horatius Bonar, of Edinborough, Scotland, has been in the ministry for fifty years, and is now making arrangements to retire from active work. He is an able and earnest preacher, a somewhat voluminous writer, and the author of some of the most beautiful Christian hymns in our language.

—There are now upon the upper Congo seven steamers, four owned by the Free State, one by France, and two by missionary societies. The fleet will soon be doubled by the addition of another Free State steamer, one for Bishop Taylor's mission, and those belonging to the Compagnie Belge du Congo, and the American, Dutch and French trading companies.

—Bishop Tuttle of the Protestant Episcopal church, writing from Salt Lake City to the Spirit of Missions, twenty years after his first arrival there, says: "I have lived to see the imperious arrogance of Mormonism bite the dust, although deep-seated, obstinate rebelliousness remains." During his one month's visit he had confirmed fifty persons, of whom twenty-five came out of Mormonism.

—In the First Baptist church, San Francisco, Sunday, Aug. 21, nearly a thousand dollars were raised for a Chinese mission building in that city. This was a good thing to do in the city where the cry was first heard, "The Chinese must go."

LITERATURE.

UTOPIA. By Sir Thomas More. Pp. 112. Price, 25 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

Every reader of English has heard of the fanciful region born in the imagination of Sir Thomas More, the learned and justly celebrated chancellor of Henry VIII. of England, but comparatively few have ever seen the book that gave a new word to our language. It was a happy thought of Mr. Alden, now that questions of political and social economy are leading all others, to reprint this celebrated book in a pleasing style and at such a price that its sale should at least equal Henry George's volumes. Utopia describes an imaginary model country and people, and, like the "Atlantis" of Plato, is an attempt, after the best ideas of the age in which it was written, to construct a community whose social, religious and political relations shall approximate perfection. There are not a few suggestions in the theory of this old statesman which might be wisely followed in our time. Not the least charm of this little volume is in the learned and elegant style in which it is written.

ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION, a second work of Grace. By Rev. C. B. Whitaker. Pp. 165. S. B. Shaw, Holiness Record office, Grand Rapids, Mich.

We believe that all sincere efforts to help the Christian church to understand the mission of the Holy Spirit, and to bring individual Christians to accept him fully as Comforter, Guide, Sanctifier, the present Immanuel, God with us, should be encouraged. The church of God is deplorably weak because the Scripture teaching is either not believed or understood, or at least not practiced in its revelation of the Divine Comforter. This little volume teaches the necessity of personal consecration and the sealing of the Spirit in sanctification, rather by example than precept. The author's personal experience is first given, an arrangement which might be sharply criticized, then follow the relations of Carvosso, Finney, Bishop David Edwards and others, some of which have become almost hackneyed. An interesting chapter, which might well have been first, is that of Bible characters who have walked with God on the earth. There is always something repulsive and irreverent in the frequent use of the term "second work" in speaking of the work of the Holy Spirit. It is nowhere used in Scripture, and it discredits his first work and third work and fourth work. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, . . . so is he that is born of the Spirit," says Christ. He does not work according to the mathematics or regulations of theologians or speculators, wise men though they may be. In this let us not dishonor him.

The Lincoln history in the Century, by the private secretaries of Mr. Lincoln, Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, will deal during the coming year with the political and military history of the early period of the war. New light will be thrown upon certain events of that period by the publication of correspondence and other documents never before printed, and unknown to but a small circle. The failure of crompromise will be described and explained, as well as Lincoln's policy, conduct and confidential correspondence after his election and previous to his inauguration. The historians now enter upon a more personal part of their narrative.

The September number of the Cosmopolitan opens with an interesting illustrated article on "How the Persians Live," by Wolf von Schierbrand, the private secretary of Minister Winston, while the latter was the American representative at the Persian court. "The Hurricane Island" by Herbert H. Smith, the distinguished naturalist, describes St. Thomas, famous for its destructive hurricanes and its picturesque scenery. The second installment of Arnold Burges Johnson's recollections of Charles Sumner contains many facts in regard to the great statesman that are now published for the first time. It is accompanied by a fine portrait of Sumner by Tietze: the frontispiece of the number is a fine pitcture of "Sumner and Longfellow." "Shall America have Ambassadors?" is a question thatMoncure D.Conway answers in the negative,showing how useless they are,and how unfavorable is the influence of court life upon them.

LODGE NOTES.

Twenty-four lodges advertised their meetings in a late Sunday paper of Chicago.

Rev. Charles Conklin, a Universalist minister on the West Side, Chicago, on a late Sabbath evening preached on "The Church and Secret Societies."

Powderly publishes in response to the German Catholic convention lately held in Chicago: "The Knights of Labor are neither anarchists, socialists nor prohibitionists."

Prominent Fenians have been accusing O'Donovan Rossa of giving away the secrets of their order in an exposition published in a New York daily last month. Rossa denies the charge.

An order for the annual church parade of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, is issued. Several Generals, Colonels, Adjutant Generals, etc., of this lodge are absent from Chicago, and there is a general suspense until they return.

General Fairchild states that he is not a candidate for re-election as Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R. The Departments of Idaho and Arizona have been organized, making now forty departments of the G. A. R. in the country.

The upper floor or the new Haymarket Theater Building, going up on West Madison street, Chicago, is being built expressly for secret societies, and the rooms will be ready about Jan. 1. This is a happy combination—theater and lodge.

The "Patriotic Order Sons of America" announces with swelling pride at the privilege of protecting the nation: "One of the objects of the Sons of America is the advancement of the free public school system, and should any sectarian body attempt its destruction, it will be met with by opposition from 100,000 sworn Sons of America."

Charles S. Crane, a Chicago business man, was buried on the Sabbath, Sept. 11, with great Masonic parade, Dr. Thomas and BishopFallows doing the religious rites. Mr. Crane was prominent in Masonic circles, being a member of Cleveland Lodge, Siloam Council, Washington Commandery, Chicago Commandery, Oriental Consistory, and St. John's Conclave of the Red Knights of Rome and Constantine. He was also one of the founders and president of the Masonic Benevolent Association.

A large meeting of the county board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians was held on a late Sabbath afternoon in Chicago, to hear the report of the State officers and board of insurance trustees. John O'Callaghan, State Treasurer, made a report showing that since the adoption of the pro rata plan of the assignment fifteen deaths had occurred which had been paid with $15,000. The yearly cost of insurance was shown to be less than that of similar organizations, while the mortality was very much less.

At the National Brewers' Union meeting in Detroit last week, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, T. V. Powderly, General Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, has recently in his speeches proved himself opposed to the sale of intoxicating beverages, and,

WHEREAS, The General Executive Board of the Kinghts of Labor has sustained him in his views, and,

WHEREAS, The constitution of the Knights of Labor contains a provision prohibiting the admission of organizations whose members are identified with the manufacture or sale of intoxicating beverages, and,

WHEREAS, The order of the Knights of Labor has not given us any assistance whatever in our struggle against capital, and,

WHEREAS, Laws which would prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating beverages would be detrimental to several thousands of brewery employes and their families, and would cut off a revenue of millions of dollars from the Government's income. be it

Resolved, That we, the National Association of the United Brewery Employes, condemn the action of General Master Workman Powderly as detrimental to our emancipation.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them, he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

IMPURE WATER.

If a man were to go abroad in his garden and fields and scatter Paris-green or any other deadly poison over the cabbages and other vegetables, on the strawberries and fruits; and in the closets in the house were to dust the bread and other food with some such virulent poison, he would be counted a lunatic or a most reckless criminal. If he did not know what he was doing, he might be acquitted of criminality, but the results of his ignorance would be no less disastrous and deadly.

But thousands, nay, tens of thousands, of persons are daily and hourly scattering abroad equally virulent poison, without knowing, and some, alas! with full knowledge, but most amazing carelessness, and infecting themselves and their most loved ones with deadly diseases. It is at this season that this ever-present and ever-increasing danger is most imminent, and this danger exists in the worst form in which it can come, viz., in the water we drink. Decaying organic matter is one of the worst of poisons; it reeks with germs whose office in nature is to disorganize and destroy all matter. As regards dead and waste matter, these germs, like animals which are carrion consumers, serve a useful purpose; but as regards living creatures, they are most injurious and destructive. Strangely, too, they are most abundant and deadly in rural localities, where purity and health are most expected. When taken into the animal system they attack the blood, being carried there most easily, and produce various fevers, diarrhea, dysentery (the commonly called summer complaint, and typical of the prevailingdanger described), and in thousands of cases these disorders are fatal. Friends wonder why in so healthful a locality, where pure air abounds, these diseases should be so frequent, and honestly believe that these sad deaths were unavoidable—"providential" is the term used. Surely in many cases the sins and neglects of the parents are visited upon the children who are the first to suffer.

Impure water is the prevailing cause, and the centers of infections are the wells. Water is a large part of the subsistence of a person. The human body consists mainly of water, seventy-five per cent of it being thus composed. All this part of the system is absorbed in the water we drink, and if the source of all this part of our body is impure, how can we exist? It is amazing, considering the vast amount of impurity taken into the stomach and absorbed by the blood, that pestilences are not prevailing every year, when the heat contributes very much to the rapid decomposition of the household wastes which are cast out and accumulate in the cesspools, slush pools, open drains, sinks, stables, yards, pig pens, and various other centers of foulness. Where does it all go? The rains wash it into the soil, and it sinks gradually deeper and deeper, spreading laterally all the while until it finds an outlet with the soil water into the well or a spring from which the household supply may be taken. It is only a question of time when a new-made cesspool, a new slop hole, a leaking drain, will discharge its dangerous and deadly contents into the new-made well. An expert, examining the ground and the soil and figuring the rainfall, can tell you, within a few months, when the danger will culminate and the deadly poison flow into the well.

But you say the soil will filter the water and keep back the impurity, or its approach may be known by sight, taste or smell. No such thing. A filter cannot always act and will become foul in time, and the stream of filth, like slow moving time, is always going to the outlet. The soil oxidizes decaying organic matter, but this action makes the poison more active and fatal

What is the remedy? Abandon the dangerous system and go back—forward is the better word—to that inculcated by the philosopher of ancient times, Moses. Read the Mosaic laws pertaining to cleanliness, hygiene and health. Cleanliness with Moses was a prevailing and paramount law and a part of the Jews' religion. It ought to be still more so among Christians, and in this age of intelligence and newspapers and books. There is an easy remedy. Abandon the poisonous cesspool and use the dry earth-closet, which was the system prevailing in the Mosaic time, and is no new thing. Dry earth is the most effective deodorizer and disinfectant. Its porosity favors a most complete oxidation of organic matter, and in practice this action is so complete that the earth taken from a closet has been used over and over again after short intervals for rest for ten times, and still fully exerted the desired effect. The same method should be employed for the house and kitchen waste. The outlet of the drain should be made in a tight, shallow box, which is kept well supplied with dry earth. The earth from these may be used as a top dressing for grass land; and a lawn may be kept in the finest condition by the use of this excellent fertilizer and a little fresh seed sown occasionally. I have used this soil for a rose-bed in which I had one hundred varieties of tea roses, and the effect was marvelous. For all sorts of flowering plants, the soil from the kitchen slop receptacle will be found most useful, but there is, or should be, no objection to use it in the vegetable garden, and especially for onions, which delight in such a fertilizer.—Henry Stewart in Rural New Yorker.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Farnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Chattanooga Advocate: "An avalanche of argument."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

OF

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

FARM NOTES.

SEPTEMBER IN THE GARDEN.

It may be well to consider how the dry weather, if it should continue, may affect some kinds of fall work. As to strawberry plants, unless they can be watered and mulched, it would be inadvisable to put them out in great numbers; better defer the work till spring. A garden supply can easily be taken care of, so the earlier they are got in the better it will be for them, for they can make a strong growth this fall, if properly tended. As the ground is very warm vegetation will be quick if the fall rains should be plentiful; for this reason we think it will be advisable in the Northern States to defer sowing Spinach seed until late in the month, after which it will make all the growth needed before cold weather sets in. Cuttings of currents and gooseberries planted this month will root quickly, especially if they can be watered and mulched; they will make a much stronger growth next season than if left to be put out in the spring. Transplanting operations will not take place until next month, and by that time the rains may be general and allow all kinds of work to proceed as usual. Should they not come sufficiently early, however, the labor of digging many kinds of nursery trees will be very heavy, and a good degree of caution and self-control will be necessary to take out the roots and not cut them off.

Lawn-seeding can go on all through the month, with the chance that the grass, even on late sown pieces, will be strong before winter sets in.

During this month it will be necessary to give attention to the potting of those plants intended for winter blooming, that have been summered over in the open garden. The calla, or Ethiopian lily, is one of the most important as it is a general favorite. Use light and rich soil, giving it good drainage that the water which it needs in abundance may pass off rapidly. If the plants are wanted to bloom early, use only five or six-inch pots, and give them no shift, while those for later blooming can be shifted into pots of larger size when the roots reach the outside of the ball of soil, and can be kept on growing. A week or ten days before removing from the ground such plants as geraniums, begonia, chrysanthemums, bouvardias, and the like, it is a good plan to cut around the roots, leaving a ball of soil somewhat smaller than the pot the plant is to occupy; the result is that a great quantity of fine roots are formed in a short time, and when the plant is potted these roots are ready to feed immediately on the new soil that will be placed between them and the sides of the pot. Seeds of perennials, such as pansy, sweet william, canterbury bell, snapdragon, aquilegia, and hollyhock should be sown early.—Vick's Magazine.

The Hon. Miles C. Moore, a well-known capitalist of Walla Walla, confirms the reports we have published, and says that Eastern Oregon will this year have the largest wheat yield ever known, and adds: "The largest yield that I ever knew of personally was seventy-one bushels per acre for a field of thirty-two acres. The grower made affidavit before me as to these figures, after the grain had been thrashed and the field measured by competent surveyors. They tell of bigger yields along Snake River, and I have no doubt the statements are true, but seventy-one bushels per acre is the largest that ever came to my personal knowledge."

The enormous demand made by the 6,600 men employed in the western extension of the St. P., M. & M. Ry., on the bean supply of the country, has resulted in a corner in that popular article of food. One of the large jobbing firms of St. Paul has notified the contractors in charge of the construction that if this demand for beans is to be as heavy in the future as it has been, they will find it necessary to import from Europe, having already secured all the beans in sight in the United States.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

In the anarchist cases Wednesday, the Supreme Court of Illinois affirmed the decision of the Criminal Court of Cook county, that Spies, Schwab, Lingg, Fielden, Parsons, Fischer, and Engel be hanged, and Neebe be confined in the penitentiary for fifteen years. The date of the execution of the sentence is fixed for Nov. 11.

The anarchists have sent one of their representatives to New York to retain a lawyer as associate counsel with Captain Black, to conduct the proposed proceedings before the United States Supreme Court. Colonel Ingersoll, General Butler and General Roger A. Pryor are spoken of as among the lawyers who will be asked to defend the anarchist appeal in the Federal Supreme Court.

The receipts of peaches in this city Wednesday amounted to 70,000 baskets. This is much the largest record of any one day in the history of the Chicago market, and probably of any city in the world, not excepting London.

The drivers and conductors of the West Side system of street railways held an all-night session on Saturday, and decided that unless the companies grant the increase demanded, to 22 cents an hour, before Wednesday evening a strike will begin on Thursday morning.

COUNTRY.

The chief clerk of the Supreme Court of New York Monday rejected the application of Johann Most, the anarchist, to become a citizen. Most said he would appeal to the courts.

A conference of representatives of the Standard Oil Company and independent producers was held Monday, to consider the advisability of shutting down all the wells in the country for the purpose of restricting the production. Many of the best known oil men in the country were in attendance.

Col. Fred Grant was Wednesday nominated for Secretary of State by the Republicans of New York.

A meteoric mass as large as a railway car, fell Thursday night in New Brunswick, six miles from Vanceboro, Me. Its heat was so intense Friday that people who flocked to the scene were unable to approach within several feet of the celestial vagrant.

For some weeks forged checks have been successfully passed in Madison, Wis. Friday Frank Swettmore, the 15-year-old son of respectable parents, was caught in the act of passing a check, and confessed himself guilty of all the forgeries.

The wreck of the missing whaler Amethyst was found recently on Castle Rock Island, in the Northern Pacific Ocean. Beside her crew of thirty-eight men, she had on board five of the crew of the missing bark Rainbow, and the fate of the forty-three men remains a mystery.

At Syracuse, N. Y., Thursday was begun the construction of the library building of the Syracuse University, to hold the Von Ranke collection of books. The cost will be $40,000.

At an early hour Friday morning an explosion of gunpowder fired the grocery of D. M. Messina, at New Orleans, the spread of the flames preventing the rescue of the inmates, Messina and his wife and four children being burned to death. The children—two boys and two girls—were between 3 and 9 years of age.

George Smith, a farmer living near Logansport, Ind., threw a club at a cow, but missed his aim, the missile striking his little 4-year-old daughter a terrific blow on the head, tearing off a large portion of the scalp. The suffering of the little victim is intense.

The anarchists in New York are indulging in ravings at the decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois, and have flooded the city with circulars calling on their sympathizers to rise in their might and prevent the execution.

The ceremonies connected with the great constitutional centennial celebration at Philadelphia were brought to a close on Saturday. President and Mrs. Cleveland were heartily received, and the President, Justice Miller, and Mr. Kasson delivered addresses. A reception was given subsequently to Mrs. Cleveland, and Mr. Childs drove the Presidential party out to his residence, where Mrs. Cleveland planted a tree and was given the choice of eight thoroughbred Jerseys as a present. A banquet was given by the Hibernian Society, which was attended by President Cleveland, and in the evening a grand banquet was given by the literary societies of Philadelphia to President Cleveland. There was a brilliant gathering at the Academy of Music on the occasion, and it is proposed to erect a memorial monument to commemorate the celebration.

FOREIGN.

Queen Victoria on Friday, in an address prorogued the British Parliament, which will meet again Nov. 11.

It is reported that a Russian engineer has discovered a new explosive which is destined to drive all existing ammunition out of use, being equal in strength to pyroxyline. It is said that the Russian War Office will build a special factory for its manufacture.

Berlin dispatches announce that Prince Bismarck's policy has dispelled the idea entertained by the Czar that Germany would indorse Russia's policy regarding Bulgaria, and consequently the relations between Germany and Russia have become colder than ever, while Austria feels she can rely on the permanent strength of the alliance with Germany. The interview between Bismarck and Count Kalnoky at Friedrichsruhe means a check on Russian intervention in Bulgaria and the neutrality of Europe toward Prince Ferdinand, leaving him to his own resources and freedom of action for the Bulgarians.

Independence Day was celebrated in the City of Mexico Friday, with extraordinary enthusiasm. The city is finely decorated and the illuminations magnificent. At 11 o'cock A. M. President Diaz made his apperance in front of the national palace and read to the great crowd the historic Declaration of Independence. The American colony took an active part in the celebration. The American allegorical cars in the grand procession which occurred later in the forenoon were greatly applauded. They represented the landing of Columbus, Hidalgo and Washington, and Columbia, or the Goddess of Liberty. The Americans lavished great care and expense on these cars, and they were acknowledged among the finest in the procession.

A dreadful collision occurred Friday on the Midland railway, England. A train filled with excursionists who were going to Doncaster to witness the races at that place collided with another train and was wrecked. The Midland train was standing on a crossing one mile from Doncaster while tickets were being collected, when the Liverpool express dashed into it. The guard box was smashed to atoms, and the first carriage of the Liverpool train telescoped by the next and broken into splinters. It was a long time before the injured and dying who were wedged in the ruins could be rescued. Twenty-three persons were killed and sixty injured. Many of the injured cannot recover. The disaster was caused by defective signalling.

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A 16-page weekly journal, published by the National Christian Association,

is an undimmed, ever-shining POLE STAR OF REFORM to lead the way of deliverance from the lodge evil.

THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM

is the source of greatest danger to the Christian Church. It religious rites, from the Sons of Veterans down to the Masonic, are anti-Christian. Following the advice of Rob. Morris, its members join churches to control or disintegrate them. The United Brethren, the Lutheran, the United Presbyterian, the Congregational and other denominations are learning that the history of the churches, in the weakness and dishonor caused by slavery, is being repeated by the encroachment of the secret lodges. There are in the United States

Some 200 different Lodges
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars unrecognized by the Word of the Living God.

Every Christian and Patriot should take the CYNOSURE

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE begins its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

It is reported of the late Bishop Harris that in his early days he was prominent in the Masonic lodge, and was even at the head of a Knight Templar commandery in Toledo. Doubtless in the secret of his heart he long since renounced the blasphemies of these early days; at least there seemed to be no thought of the lodge about his funeral obsequies.

The Chicago anarchists and their friends are crowding their old haunts at Greif's and Florus Halls on West Lake Street, but the police are equally busy, watching every movement. There are not a few people, especially among the labor societies, who denounce the decision of the courts as sanctioning murder. They are unanimous in the decision that the judgment of the shabbiest anarchist, who has not yet worn out his old-country clothes, is much better law than can be given by the best courts of the country. Roger A. Pryor and lawyer Black are seeking some means to get the ear of the Supreme Court, and petitions to the Governor are circulated. The last order for the fatal November 11th is in the hands of the sheriff; and, dreadful as is the sentence, it is just that the order should be faithfully carried out.

The Chicago Times thinks that "Brother Blanchard and other Anti-mason fanatics" ought to be convinced by this time that Masonry does not protect its members when guilty of crimes. The Cynosur will be glad to accept the Times hypothesis if its learned editor will convince us that the dealing of of the Freemasons with McGarigle and the other "boodlers" is not the exception and not the rule. It is very well for the lodge to put on the mask of reform when its rascalities have been found out. How long since, can the Times inform us, have Freemasons begun to weed out the thieves from their number. It was not thought of twelve years ago for whisky-ring thieves, plenty of whom were Masons. Boss Tweed was a Mason; will the Times tell us if his Masonic standing was vitiated by his knavery? But we have attacked the lodge as a shelter for thieves, because it has been so, and because it will be so, as long as its principles are unchanged.

Joseph Buchanan, the editor of the Labor Tribune, has become one of the strongest endorsers for the condemned anarchists. His paper says: "The case will be laid before the Supreme Court. Justice and love of our country's institutions, which are being used by one class to oppress another class, demand that the workers, whose sweat has made us 'great,' and whose blood has sealed the declaration of our freedom and equality,shall go to the highest tribunal on earth ere surrendering in his struggle for fair play. The voice of the people must be heard in this case. The right of labor to protest against being robbed and beaten must be demonstrated, or we are indeed ready for the American empire, the aristocracy of wealth, and the subjection of the toiler." To talk of the condemned murderers as the "workingmen" is nonsense. Their most industrious moments were spent in making bombs, or haunting saloons, or howling their tirades and threats to any crowd who would listen. There was not an honest workingman in the whole circle of secret groups which nursed their hateful conspiracy. The empire they wished to construct would have been as fatal to honest labor as their bombs were to the police.

The proposition of Captain Pratt of the Carlisle Indian Training School to furnish an object lesson at the Centennial, which the Cynosure lately noticed, was very successfully carried out. The Indians were cheered along the whole route and formed the most striking features of the parade. The Philadelphia Press says of their performance: "The scenes of life on the plains, the wild, uncivilized garb and painted faces of the braves were noted with great interest by the crowds, but the representations of the same Indians, robed and in their right minds, called forth long and steady applause. It was, however, the lads from Capt. Pratt's Carlisle School, marching in uniform with the firm step of veterans, which wrought the people up to the greatest pitch of enthusiasm. Handkerchiefs waved and the gloved hands in the Bellevue's boxes clapped tumultuously as the dark-skinned, bright-eyed sons of the prairies marched past with heads erect and shouiders squared."

The press reports tell of "small audiences" and "empty benches" in the St. Louis churches last Sabbath. Some of their pastors have lately preached faithfully against the sacrilegous folly of the annual carnival. They cannot afford to be silent at the Sabbath violation by the Grand Army. Trains and streets full of shouting men marching to and fro do not recommend the moral character of the lodge to whom such honors are paid. One of the most important questions before this meeting will be the pensions. It is a standing order and about the first on the list. The proposition which will have most attention will be a universal pension—every soldier who served more than two months to be a tax upon the Treasury. Ben. Butler's speech the other day urging this "service" pension, and the immediate distribution of the Treasury surplus in pensions to both Union and rebel soldiers, may yet prove to be prophetic. The increasing demands of the Grand Army upon the Treasury will soon be met by a counter demand from the South, and soon the question will be, Who will pension the tax-payer?

Next Saturday and Sabbath Chicago will be filled with tramping militia and blaring bands. The "International Military Encampment" begins October 1st, continuing until the 20th or later, and the weeks between will be filled with the "Pride and pomp and circumstance of glorious war."

Drills, parades, sham battles, and prize contests will draw the multitudes and make the enterprise a profitable one if possible; and it is difficult to conceive any other object worth such a demand upon time and energies of thousands of men. If the managers did not hope to make money they would not engage in the speculation. We believe in praying for their disappointment, because the whole affair will be a source of demoralization. Sabbath-breaking, the love of parade, vain competition, and unreal views of war's horrors will be promoted, and the people will be urged by every possible consideration to spend their money for these follies and falsehoods.

As an antidote for these mercenary revivals of war spirit, it is good to read the brief address of ex-President Hayes at the Centennial banquet in Philadelphia. Aside from its vigorous moral tone it is accounted one of the best speeches made during the celebration. Mr. Hayes was not on the programme,but he was forced to respond to a unanimous call from the guests at the banquet. No sentences uttered on that occasion are more worthy of preservation than these: "We hear of such a nation being the great war power of a continent, and of such another as the ruler in diplomacy. It is the glory of America, under the Constitution, to be the great pacific power of the globe—able without an army or navy to keep peace at home and to command respect and consideration abroad. I thank the general of the army, that gallant soldier whom we all admire so much, for the remarks he has made. He has foreseen the position which this country is to occupy in the future in favor of arbitration as a means of settling international difficulties. Our position is such that we can command a hearing by the world." This is a sentiment worthy of the statesman, patriot and philanthropist who uttered it. Our wise men in Washington, and warlike editors all over the country who clamor for coast defenses and frowning navies, though the revenues of the nation be poured out like water for them, are blind with stupidity and pride, or they would see that the best defense of a nation is a loyal citizenship, a treasury without debt, and a land enriched by years of peace. Beside, a tithe of the sums spent in vain preparations for war would secure universal arbitration and a practical exemption from the dread evils of international strife.

LINCOLN AND THE COVENANTERS.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

The following anecdote of Abraham Lincoln has never been in print. It shows his estimate of the old Scotch Covenanters and their descendants. Dr. Sloane used to relate it in the seminary at Allegheny City. During the war the Covenanters decided to send some missionaries to the Freedmen; but there was a difficulty because the Covenanters would not take an oath to the Constitution. In their view it recognized another supreme than one Jesus. And in those days the Government required such an oath before any one could pass our lines to the front. Dr. Sloane was sent to Mr. Lincoln at Washington to request that our missionaries be passed with a modified oath.

When he had presented the case to Mr. Lincoln, the President turned to one of his secretaries and said, "Whitehead, do you know those hard-shell Covenanters?"

"Yes," replied Whitehead.

"Well, write them out just such a modified oath as they request, for you know there is not a disloyal hair in their heads."

Whitehead, at Dr. Sloane's dictation, then wrote out a form of oath; but insisted on inserting a clause binding to loyalty to the Constitution. Then bringing it to Lincoln, he read it over slowly; when coming to this clause, the President said, "Whitehead, what did you put that clause in for?"

Whitehead replied, "I thought our officers would not honor it without such a clause."

"The devil they won't," replied the President; and drawing his pen across the clause, he signed his own name to it with a flourish, saying, as he handed it to Dr. Sloane, "There, they will honor that."

THE LITTLE FOXES OF LODGERY.

BY MRS. M. A. BLANCHARD.

Visiting a fine collection of animals my five-year-old boy is delighted with some young tigers, and he begs me to buy one of those pretty kittens for him to play with. "Oh no," I reply, "though now so beautiful and harmless apparently, when they are older, gladly would they feast on your flesh, and drink your heart's blood."

Musing on this incident, such I thought in spiritual things are the lesser or minor secret orders of to-day. Drawn largely from our youth "who want a good time," and those who really desire to "do good," the Good Templar and kindred societies seem to offer them an open door to attain their wishes. Like the lad who saw only a beautiful kitten in a young Bengal tiger, they see not the dark, moving, pervading spirit of the lodge they join; nor the ghosts of murdered souls hid in or behind its shadow.

Generally speaking, they do not know that men originated those orders who had been the members of a blood-stained order, on which the brand of Cain is so set that forty-five out of every fifty of its members left never to return. They do not realize that they have entered a vast training school, the natural course of which is onward and downward, through unquestioning obedience, and blind secrecy, away from Jesus, and so away from God and heaven.

DISSEMBLING FOR THE SALOON.

THE DETROIT FREE PRESS, SANFORD H. COBB AND JEFFERSON DAVIS VS. PROHIBITION.

A REVIEW BY GEO. W. CLARK.

I read with curious interest from time to time the extraordinary and persistent efforts of the old political party organs to belie, malign, and misrepresent Prohibitionists, and make their readers believe "prohibition is a failure!" Has the rum god totally blinded their eyes, or totally depraved their hearts? or both? It does seem these organs must know there never was a time when the prohibition cause stood as strong, when it polled as many votes, when as high and unquestioned testimony proves its success and good results where adopted and enforced, or when the old pro-license parties stood as much in fear of the great prohibition uprising, or the liquor dealers were as much alarmed for the safety of the wicked "craft by which they get their gains," as now. Think of 180,000 votes so recently given for the amendment in Michigan, and now 91,000 voters in "God-forsaken Texas," facing the vilest and most powerful opposition including Jeff. Davis, and voting for prohibition against his autocratic ipse dixit!

The Free Press of this city, after writing down prohibition, and professing willingness to hear both sides, refused a reply. So much for the fairness of the opposition. It is said, "Great minds run in the same groove." You have, Mr. Free Press, on this question the sympathy and support of the liquor men, not only, but such furtive brains as Mr. Sanford H. Cobb, and that great patriot-statesman and generalissimo who has done so much for his country and mankind, Mr. Jefferson Davis! But really it don't look as though prohibition was such a failure as you would make it—when its loudly increasing thunders have awakened such Rip Van Winkle fogies from their slumbers to reiterate such stale and oft-repeated and oft-refuted sophisms! I do not see how you, Mr. Editor of the Free Press, prove your claim to "an earnest desire for temperance and the extinction of the drink evil;" nor how you can conserve the interests of good society, a noble manhood, good government, and happy homes, by supporting the liquor license system, and continually and persistently opposing prohibition. Your position is paradoxical, like the man who "was as much opposed to slavery as anybody, and just as much opposed to abolition!" And it seems to me you are not even serving the liquor interest as effectively as you imagine, or as you might, if that is the animus of your writing. You are firing a gun that may do execution at the wrong end.

If you could prove that the common, every-day rowdyism, riotings, fightings, Sabbath desecrations, wife-beatings, shocking casualties, savage murders, attributed to the liquor business, were purely imaginary; could show that the statistics of the country which prove eight-tenths of all these revolting consequences to be caused by liquor are false; could show that grog shops were demanded by any want of the people, a necessary factor to their prosperity, industry, economy, good order or happy homes, you might indeed do the liquor fraternity a good turn and secure their good will and support. But suppose you show that the combined efforts of Christians, philanthropists and statesmen, by moral suasion and by prohibitory laws have failed to stay the tide or mitigate the liquor curse, what then? You have unconsciously presented a terrible indictment against the liquor crime. You have given the strongest argument for immediate and universal prohibition! You have shown a state of things that should alarm and startle every good citizen, namely, that we have suffered to take root and grow up, have actually environed and fostered by our laws, a deadly foe to manhood, morality, religion, education, industry, economy, law and order, and all we hold sacred in human society—a brazen-faced foe that contemptuously tramples under its feet both the laws of God and the laws of the State. By your own showing, therefore, you have proven that this defiant power for evil should be prohibited and crushed out ere it has completely undermined the foundations of society.

Is it not strange the Free Press, or any other public journal, should pour out its vials of wrath against so good and a so much needed law, instead of upon the guilty violators of the law? Or on the guilty political parties and their recreant officials who neglect or refuse to enforce the laws? Why condemn prohibition for the crimes committed by the lawless in spite of prohibition, and accuse the law of "failure" instead of the guilty officers who fail to execute it?

You procure the most perfect and complete printing press for your business that art and skill can produce. It is set up ready for action. The time comes to run off the great edition of the paper, but no engineer comes near, no word of command is given to start the press, no sound of machinery is heard, no printed sheets fly away to their expectant subscribers. What is the matter? Is the press at fault? O no! the press is all right, but no one puts its powers into action. No one sets it to work, and it will not run itself! Will you publish the next day a column or more of rhetoric to prove your new press a "failure" and its constructor a "fanatic" and "crank?" I trow not.

I marvel that you profound and astute editors have not discovered and dilated upon the short-sighted policy of the Almighty in prohibiting instead of "licensing" crime and wrong; that he did not adopt our modern "license" or "tax" scheme with Adam and Eve in regard to the forbidden fruit, and so "license" the crimes forbidden in the Decalogue instead of prohibiting them! And why do you not on the same principle expatiate on the "failure" of the whole Divine and human economy of penal laws and declare the civil codes of all nations miserable abortions, total "failures;" for there is not a crime or wrong prohibited by the penal laws of any nation that is not committed daily, notwithstanding the fines, imprisonments and death penalties imposed.

Why not be consistent, and on the same principle denounce the "license" system as a failure? It deserves double damnation. It sanctions, for money, the devilish traffic it pretends to "control" and "regulate," and then suffers its licensed, toddy-stick gentry to violate with impunity and set at defiance every restraining or prohibitory clause in it! selling to drunkards, minors, Indians, and on Sundays, election days and forbidden hours of the night! It is worse than a failure, so far as checking or removing the evil is concerned, or in educating the people in temperance principles and habits; while it gives legal status and respectability to the traffic and fastens its ghastly crimes and miseries upon society by law and takes a bribe for its share in the deadly business.

And now the Free Press calls to its aid Mr. Sanford H. "Cobb" of the new Princeton Review, who repeats the stale aphorism, "You cannot make men virtuous by compulsion!" Far fetched! No Prohibitionist dreams of any such thing. But would you, therefore, have no laws to prevent or punish vice and crime, but rather license the most prolific cause of wrong doing and wretchedness? Has not God ordained penal laws as a "terror to evil doers," "and a praise to them that do well?" Should we not remove as far as possible every temptation calculated to lead men, especially our youth, astray? Do you pray, "Lead us not into temptation," and then license grogshops all along their pathway? Mr. Cobb reiterates the trite old saying, "Self-control is a manly virtue!" Yes; and then would he legalize the use of that which of all else most completely takes away and destroys all power of self-control, and makes the emasculated dupe the pliant victim and slave of his wicked tempter and destroyer?

Mr. Cobb dilates in real, old-fashioned style on the "excessive use" or "abuse" of alcoholic or intoxicating drinks, as though any use of them as drinks was not an "abuse," an abuse of the liquor, and an abuse of the drinker! "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Such talk is a virtual justification of the so-called "moderate drinking," the old Satanic and fatal snare which has ever led and whelmed men in the awful maelstrom of intemperance and its dreadful ruin. Did the All-wise Father and law-giver talk to our first parents after that fashion, and gingerly warn them against the "abuse" or "excessive use" of the forbidden fruit? Did he talk to the people through that immortal Decalogue about the "excessive use" or "abuse" of stealing, swearing, adultery, murder? No. Total abstinence from the wrong and the hurtful was the first doctrine ever taught to man, and prohibition was the first law ever announced to the world. "Abstain from all appearance of evil" is the Divine injunction. Any amount of alcohol used as a drink is an abuse; is just as much a violation of the physical laws as any amount of theft is a violation of the moral and statute law! One drop of alcohol in contact with the mucous membrane of the stomach produces an unnatural and injurious irritation of that delicate and sensitive organ, as one-hundredth part of a drop on the corner of the eye irritates and inflames that sensitive organ.

But Mr. Cobb seems to have reached his climax when he charges Prohibitionists with demanding, "because intoxicants are abused by some to drunkenness, that there shall be no intoxicants at all!" He then answers to this, "that because the sexual instinct is abused by some, therefore all union of the sexes shall be forbidden." Who cannot see the sophism and absurdity of this postulate? Comparing or assuming for the drinking of intoxicants the same demand and justification in nature as for the use of the sexual instinct! Any man of intelligence knows there is no normal or natural demand for intoxicants, and consequently no natural supply of intoxicants in nature. The demand and the supply are wholly artificial or factitious. They are illegitimate and hellish. They are of their "father the devil, and his works they do!" Shakespeare well said of the "invisible spirit of wine:"

> "If thou hadst no name by which to know thee,
> We would call thee devil!"

God never made man for intoxicants, nor intoxicants for man. But he did create the sexual relation and the sexual instinct for the procreation and perpetuation of the human race. The relation of intoxicants and their effects upon humanity are of the devil: the relation of the sexes to humanity is of God; and the consequent reproduction and continued identity of the human race through all these intervening ages is not only a profound mystery, but a justification of this relation—a wonder and a glory, the matchless glory of the Eternal Infinite!

As to Mr. Jefferson Davis, it seems he is still "hanging on a sour-apple tree," and seems not to sweeten with age, though certainly old enough to mellow; and one would suppose the sufferance which has allowed him to live these long years, and given him opportunity to meditate on the bloodshed and suffering his great unatoned crime has cost the republic, would ere this have softened his heart and led him to do something to redeem his name and make amends for the great wrong he wrought and the terrible calamity he brought upon the nation. A great opportunity was offered him in Texas to use his influence for the good of the people, but he showed himself still a rebel, and with all his influence aided the whisky rebellion.

But what other could we expect from a man who could cover up and shield his determination to perpetrate and perpetuate the heinous crime of human slavery under the specious guise of "States rights" or "State sovereignty," and involve a great nation in a fratricidal and bloody war for such an inhuman system, but that he would be ready also to cover and shield the murderous liquor traffic under the same false and spurious plea!

AN ALARM AND WARNING.

An apt illustration of the spirit of Romanism in our country is found in the report of the Central Union of German Romanists lately meeting in Chicago. Dr. Augustus Kaiser said: "A single head is necessary for the church. . . . Gregory XVI. used to say he was nowhere completely the pope except in North America. The Catholics should support the pope by strict obedience, and, if necessary by resistance, compel the temporal authorities to make the required concessions."

These are the true sentiments of the faithful Romanists. What are the true sentiments of the faithful Protestants? The one deliberately and boldly avows supreme allegiance, politically and religiously, to the pope. Read the words again, reader! All politics are used to serve him and our liberalism smiles complacently at their speeches and at their success; at the imprisonment of preachers in Boston, and at the outrages against them in Chicago.

The above statement derives vastly greater importance from the fact that it is not an ebullition of Irish zeal, but the deliberate words at the Central Union of German American Catholics! We are fast arriving at the place where "boodler" politics will be for or against municipal, State and national support of Romanism.

Another speaker at this meeting said, "The Catholics wanted to influence the school system of this country in accordance with their principles." This is done under the claim of "equal rights," by which they mean that, as Catholics, they should have the right to preserve the German tongue and Catholic religion in the education of their families. Priests and laymen were to be a committee, with power to add other nationalities and non-Catholics who agreed with them. Another referred to our public schools as "impious, irreligious, and of injurious influence."

Another straw shows how the wind blows. At the great celebration of our National Constitution in Philadelphia the opportunity was taken advantage of to have President Cleveland, the head of the nation,and the prince of the Roman Catholic church in the United States, brought together; and they grasped each other's hands in the sight of the great gathering, and the record tells of the hearty welcome and applause which followed.

Well may the Pope say that nowhere is he so much the pope as he is to-day in the United States! But what shall be the fruit from such seed? Popish supremacy is as truly the animus of Rome to-day as it ever has been, and this is as incompatible with the supremacy of the will of the people as slavery was to liberty, and the fruit must be the same.

MASONRY UNDER THE MAGNIFIER.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Is Freemasonry a religious or irreligious, moral or immoral institution? We will start with Webb every time and finish up with these later authors. Webb's Masonic Monitor, by Morris, page 13: "No lodge can be regularly opened or closed without religious services of some sort."

"Some sort." Perhaps they just render a chant, sing a hymn, or, as father says, take up a collection. But on page284of this same lodge monitor it says:"No lodge or Masonic assembly can be regularly opened or closed without prayer." Then that "religious service" must be prayer. When a man prays he is supposed to be standing face to face with Almighty God. Why do Masons always pray? Here is a Lexicon of Freemasonry, by Albert G. Mackey, Past General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the Masons of the United States, page 369: "PRAYER. All the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer, because Masonry is a religious institution, and because we thereby show our dependence on, and our faith and trust in, God."

That is the reason why every devout, pious person should pray, if they offer a consistent petition. That is the reason my mother prays, and father says she prays enough for the whole family, and she's right, too, for the Bible says to pray without ceasing. When they got married father was an Abolitionist and mother was a Wesleyan Methodist. He don't like our M. E. preacher because he is a Mason, and mother don't like that either, and as for me, well, I'm in on probation, and I'm going to sift this question. Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, by A. T. C. Pierson, Past Grand High Priest and Grand Captain General of the Grand Encampment of the Masons of the United States, page 14: "But the order of Freemasonry goes further than did the ancient mysteries; while it embodies all that is valuable in the institutions of the past, it embraces all that is good and true of the present, and thus becomes a conservator as well as a depository of religion, science and art."

Again, we listen to 33° Sovereign Grand Inspector General Dan Sickels, in his "Ahiman Rezon" or Freemasons' Guide, page 57: "And, finally, we shall discover that our rites embrace all the possible circumstances of man—moral, spiritual and social—and have a meaning high as the heavens, broad as the universe, and profound as eternity."

Beat that if you can! I'll have to post father and mother up a little so they won't oppose "all that is valuable," and "all that is good and true." What a grand and comprehensive system! If that is not religion it is the next thing to it, for it has on religious clothes, father says "sheep's clothing," but I suppose he refers to their "sheep skins, or white aprons." Of course it is a religion, with its odes, chants, prayers, and funeral dirges; its chaplains, stewards, deacons, worshipful masters, priests and most excellent grand high priests.

Let us consult General Grand High Priest Albert G. Mackey again. Well, as for titles, what can compare with theological dignity like that. On page 95 of his great book of Masonic Jurisprudence, he says: "The truth is that Masonry is undoubtedly a religious institution—its religion being of that universal kind in which all men agree;"—Hold on, Sir High Priest Mackey. That's not my mother's religion, the religion of the Bible, the religion of the church that holds me on probation. All men do not agree in the Christian religion. What are the tenets of this peculiar religion? Perhaps it will all be explained as we proceed.

SOME ASPECTS OF THE IMMIGRATION QUESTION.

The problem of immigration has suddenly become one of the foremost issues of the day, and is likely to remain as such until some practical measures are adopted by Congress for remedying the evils which are believed to result from an unrestricted flow of foreign populations into this country. It is not expected, however, that this question will be settled at once, or without a stout conflict among the friends and opponents of a restrictive policy. There are many arguments to be urged on both sides. The difficulty on the side of restriction is to know where to draw the line between objectionable and unobjectionable immigrants. We already have laws designed to exclude actual paupers and laborers brought out under contract, but these laws are imperfect in their operations, and really help the situation but very little. The classes of foreigners against which the country is revolting are the multitudes of ignorant, vicious, degraded outcasts of European countries,who crowd into our cities and swell the population of our asylums and prisons. For the sober, industrious and self-respecting foreigner who comes here with an honest purpose to better his condition, and a real desire to identify himself with the country, there is still an abundance of room and a hearty welcome. But it is easier to set up a standard of qualification for these new comers than it is to enforce any discriminations. The trouble is to know where and how to apply the tests which shall distinguish the future anarchists, desperadoes, lunatics and vagabonds from the honest, frugal, ambitious, home-seekers and worthy citizens of the future. What process can be devised which shall separate the dross of immgration from the solid ore as the whole mass comes rushing in together through our seaboard gates? This is a problem which will tax our ablest economists and our wisest statesmen to solve.

A vast amount of valuable information on this emigration question has lately been furnished through the medium of the Government printing office at Washington. About a year ago a circular was sent out by our Department of State to consular officers of the United States in Europe, with instructions to investigate and report to the Department on the statistics of emigration in each consular district, the causes of emigration, the classes which supply the greatest number of emigrants, and the social and moral condition of the people. The reports received in accordance with these instructions are now published in a form for public distribution.

The tabulated results of the investigations made by the consuls afford some interesting and suggestive statistics. For example, in a classification by occupation, it is shown that the total emigration for the years 1873-86 was 5,396,416, and of this number 2,596,188 are set down as without occupation, 587,349 as skilled, and 31,803 as professional. In other words, over forty-eight per cent, or nearly half, of the immigrants coming in that time had no stated means of obtaining a livelihood, and only about ten per cent were skilled workmen. The records of emigration from Scotland show the largest per cent of skilled labor, the average indicated being about twenty-five per cent. France, Belgium and Switzerland maintain about an equal average of fifteen and eighteen per cent. Ireland stands the lowest, with an average of less than seven per cent of skilled laborers in a total of over 700,000. The average in Sweden, Italy and Russia is also very low. In a circular diagram, showing the proportion of agriculturists among the emigrants of 1886, Germany has nearly as much space as all the other countries put together. Italy has the next largest space,and the Netherlands the smallest of all. This is as they stand before coming to this country. Very few of the Italians engage in farming after arriving here. In a chart of the emigration of certain occupations in 1886, showing the relative number from each country, Germany is found to send the largest proportion of carpenters, tailors, shoemakers and blacksmiths; the United Kingdom of Great Britain the largest number of miners, masons, spinners, printers, mechanics and artisans. In general the Germans represent those industries that depend upon hand labor, or the requirements of every-day life, while the English supply the mechanical element.

Turning to the reports of particular countries, we find that Austria-Hungary makes the worst showing of all. The emigrants from Hungary are chiefly of the Slovack tribe, and at home are counted among the poorest, lowest, most degraded and hopeless class of the population. They are greatly given to the vice of drunkenness, and their family and social life is of the lowest order. Very few of them come to America with any intention of remaining, and while here remain herded together in their filthy huts with no apparent desire to profit by the new conditions of life around them. The present emigration from Italy is shown to be but little better in character than that from Hungary. Particularly objectionable are the emigrants from the southern districts and from Sicily. These are the most illiterate parts of Italy, and in these districts brigandage has been for many years extremely prevalent. The general causes of emigration are stated as overpopulation and high taxes. The cost of living has increased immensely in Italy in the last few years with the great increase in taxes. Rents are higher, while the value of the produce of the land is kept down by foreign competition. The consul who reports the district of Milan expresses the opinion that emigration from Italy will be greatly increased during the next few years. There is but little emigration from Russia, more perhaps to the United States than to any other country. The Government of Russia does not encourage emigration; on the contrary it prohibits all Russian subjects from leaving the Empire of Russia, except Poles and Jews. It does not encourage these in any tangible form, but allows them to leave with written permission. The Mennonites have emigrated, perhaps, more extensively than any other class of Russian subjects. The Mennonites are an industrious, thrifty people, and are desirable emigrants. The consuls in Switzerland present a flattering report of the character of the emigration from that country. The number of emigrants from Switzerland to the United States from 1873 to 1885, both inclusive, was 65,332; emigration to all other countries for the same period, 15,242; total, 80,574—80 per cent going to the United States. Previous to 1881 there was much complaint in Switzerland of objectionable and "assisted" emigration to the United States, but in April, 1881, there went into effect a law, passed by the Swiss Government, forbidding "agents to forward persons to whom the laws of the country to which they emigrate prohibit the entry." Mr. Boyd Winchester, who reports for the Berne district, says pauperism, as an institution, is unknown in Switzerland.

In none of these consular reports is any mention made of "assisted emigration," the deportation of criminals and incapables. The consuls are quite unanimous in saying that nothing of this kind has come within their knowledge. The general opinion also seems to be that emigration ought to be encouraged rather than restricted. The statements and statistics given by many of the consuls certainly favor this view.—N. Y. Observer.

Chrysostom beautifully says, for our comfort: "I have a pledge from Christ—have his note of hand—which is my support, my refuge, and heaven; and though the world should rage, to this security I cling. How reads it? 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.' If Christ be with me, what shall I fear? If he is mine, all the powers of earth to me are nothing more than a spider's web."

The first saloon case was settled at Council Bluffs, Sept. 3, when Judge Deemer ruled in the District Court that the temporary writ of injunction granted against the keeper of a saloon and owner of the building should be made permanent, and the bar fixtures sold and lien filed against the building to pay the costs of prosecuting the case. It is the first permanent writ granted and is one of over fifty cases to be heard. It is also the first victory for the prosecutors, and is illy received by the saloon men. The case has been appealed to the Supreme Court. Brown, the owner, is one of the wealthiest and most influential men of the city.

THE CENTENNIAL OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The immense procession and crowd.—The Carlisle School exhibit.—The unheard addresses.—Rome arrogant and dominant.—The National Reform Association's request.—Granted and withdrawn at the demand of infidelity.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 20, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Centennial Celebration of the framing of our National Constitution has come and gone. It was successful beyond the most sanguine expectations of the managers. The Industrial Display on Thursday, the 15th, was witnessed by more than 1,000,000 people, including the Governors and other officers from twenty-four States. The procession was ten miles long. Perhaps 21,000 men were in the line of march, 2,000 horses, 500 wagons and floats, and 2,100 musicians. Colonel Snowden was commander of the day.

A noticeable feature was the Indian lads from Captain Pratt's Carlisle school, marching in uniform with slates under their arms. They were preceded by a company of wild, uncivilized Indians from the plains, with the garb and painted faces of their native state. The contrast between them, and those who were clothed and in their right mind, was an object lesson for the American people as to the power of education and the Christian religion in transforming the Indian. The Military Display on Friday under the command of Lieutenant General Sheridan, with 20,000 uniformed men in line, was an unusual occurrence in this country in times of peace.

But Saturday was the great day of the National feast. A platform erected at the rear of Independence Hall accommodated 10,000 people. Behind this gathered at least 40,000. Hon. John A. Kasson, President of the Constitutional Commission, introduced the speakers. On the stage were President Cleveland and his wife, ex-President Hayes and ex-Vice President Hannibal Hamlin, Secretary Bayard, ex-Secretary Evarts, Chief Justice Waite and Justices Miller, Blatchford and Harlan of the United States Supreme Court, Bishop Potter and Cardinal Gibbons, Governors of several States, Congressmen and military officers. The address of President Cleveland was heard by most on the stage, but the oration of Justice Miller could not be heard twenty feet away. He read closely and his voice was weak. It was my good fortune to have a seat among the reporters, and not a word could be heard there. The occasion, subject and man were there, but not the voice. The plan of this performance was poorly conceived. They should have secured Music Hall and issued tickets for National and State officers, clergymen, lawyers, editors and professors, and selected an orator who could be heard distinctly, and then there would have been some satisfaction and profit in it.

It was noticeable that on the stage the church of Rome was well represented, a church which is the ancient foe of civil and religious liberty; but the great Presbyterian church, which has done so much to make this country what it is to-day, was not represented at all. Modest worth takes a back seat now-a-days, but impudent treachery goes to the front. The music by the Marine Band and the chorus of 2,000 children and 200 male voices was grand. But all might have sung.

At a reform meeting in the First Reformed Presbyterian church last evening, Rev. J. H. Leiper stated that an application had been made to the Centennial Commission, on behalf of the National Reform Association, to allow a carriage in Thursday's procession bearing a banner with the inscription, "Christ the King of Nations and the Bible the Supreme Law;" also another banner with this inscription, "The Fifteenth Amendment secures the rights of man. Let us have another securing the rights of God." The Commission cordially granted the request and it was so published in the local papers. But it brought down upon them such a shower of protests that the Commission revoked the order and notified the Association that they could not allow them in the procession, as it would provoke discussion. They could allow Cardinal Gibbons on the stand with his red hat, but no banner for Christ in the procession. Perhaps it was well enough, for it would not have looked well for such a banner to follow Gambrinus and the Beer Barrel.

The Government gives character to the people over whom it presides. Twenty-three times it is mentioned that Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, caused Israel to sin by setting up idols. The nation became idolatrous and was finally carried captive to Babylon and kept in the furnace of slavery for seventy years, until the dross of slavery was removed, and they were made forever free from that sin. Philip II. of Spain was a rank papist and Spain has been Roman Catholic to this day. France revoked the Edict of Nantes and expelled 400,000 Huguenots. She reaped the bitter fruits of that crime in the Reign of Terror, and to-day she is a nation of skeptics. Henry VIII. repudiated the papal authority and made himself the head of the church of England in 1532, and to-day Queen Victoria enjoys that unworthy eminence. Our nation has a secular Constitution; it is rapidly secularizing the nation. It is only a question of time when the nation will be like the Constitution.

On the other hand the godly governments of David and Solomon, of Asa, Josiah and Hezekiah, made the piety and religion of their reigns possible. The Switzerland Republic became Christian in Calvin's day, and Protestantism reigns in every canton to-day. William the Silent and the Reformers in Holland set up the Dutch Republic, establishing it in Christian principles, and they are a free people. In the English Revolution of 1688 William, Prince of Orange, established civil and religious liberty, and it is so to-day. Let our Constitution be Christianized and the nation will be led up to God.

REFORM NEWS.

THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

The place chosen for the Illinois State Convention for 1887 was historic ground. Thirty-six years ago Belvidere was the scene of a pitiful tragedy, whose guilty agents were shielded by the lodge from justice. The building occupied by the Masonic lodge at that day is still pointed out on the main street of the city. There Ellen Slade was confined by her murderers. The old Keith house where she was ruined is on a corner not far away; and yet further are the houses in that day occupied by Dr. Woodward where she died, and by Judge Whitney, the master of the lodge, whose love of justice was stronger than the villainous bonds of Masonry. The startling events of that day are vividly remembered by some old residents of Belvidere, but to most who live in the beautiful town they are probably unknown. The lodge is strong, too, but more subdued than when it threatened Starry and made a fumbling arrest of W. B. Stoddard for selling a 20-cent pamphlet exposing its wickedness.

Here in a central place, hard by the postoffice I. R. B. Arnold had pitched his great tent, and for several nights had drawn in hundreds to his illustrated lectures. Tuesday evening of last week he gave to a comparison of ancient and modern heathenism. Some 700 people were listening, and he had proceeded some fifteen minutes when alarm whistles and bells and a cry of "fire" stampeded the people. Most of them returned, however, in a short time, having satisfied themselves that their own homes were safe. A cider mill and canning factory which did business every day in the week was burned. Good announcements were made of the State Convention to open next day in the tent, but the friends who gathered next day were disappointed that so few came in at the appointed hour. Other officers were absent and the recording secretary nominated J. P. Stoddard as temporary chairman. The forenoon was occupied in religious exercises and brief addresses, and the time was full of profit. Among the speakers was Rev. W. L. Walker of the Evangelical Association, and Rev. J. T. Hurry, delegate from the Illinois Wesleyan conference.

The report of the Treasurer was read and approved, showing the receipts from all sources to have been $1,295.56; the expenses $1,246.22, leaving $49.34 in the treasury. The Executive Committee report which appears elsewhere, was by a misunderstanding not forwarded by the secretary. Its substance was given from memory with a supplemental report of work done in the State outside the operations of the State society. A verbal report was also made of the changes recommended by the Executive Committee. The most important of these was the formation of the Executive Committee. This was to be of seven persons and the three executive officers of the body ex-officio. Vice-presidents were to be selected one from each Congressional district, who are expected to form a co-operative committee. The reports were approved.

A Bible reading on secretism was conducted by M. N. Butler for an hour in the afternoon, and in the evening able addresses were made by brethren Stoddard and Gault, followed by a brief talk by I. R. B. Arnold with his lantern to help. The day and evening were rainy. At times the roar of falling water prevented the speaking. The attendance was therefore small but the interest was good.

Thursday morning the nominating committee's report was accepted, making Secretary Stoddard president; Revs. William Wishart and L. N. Stratton, vice-presidents at large; M. N. Butler, secretary; and W. I. Phillips, treasurer; Executive Committee: Rev. Joseph Travis, Evanston; Prof. Elliott Whipple, Rev. A. W. Parry and Mrs. L. N. Stratton, Wheaton; Mrs. E. A. Cook and H. L. Kellogg, Chicago; and Prof. Brodt, Elmhurst. The selection of other vice-presidents was referred to the Executive Committee. The recommendation of this last item by the nominating committee suggested some methods of carrying on the work in the State that aroused a spirited debate. Pastor Harris of the Congregational church, Byron, who was present with a delegation of strong men from his church, took an active part in it, and spoke in denunciation of the Masonic lodge into which he had been inveigled by T. T. Gurney and others. Mrs. Cronk, Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, Mrs. J. P. Stoddard, and Messrs. Gault, Hurry, Kellogg, Reynolds, Butler, Grinnell and others took part until the forenoon was gone.

In the afternoon the resolutions were passed upon; a committee of five, C. A. Blanchard, L. N. Stratton, Jerome Howe, Mrs. L. H. Plumb, and E. B. Worrell, were appointed to represent the convention in the Prohibition Conference in Chicago, Nov. 30; and a Bible Reading by H. L. Kellogg on "The Two Babylons" closed an interesting and profitable day. The heavy rains having made the tent unfit for use, a church room was occupied.

In the evening some 600 people gathered again in the tent and listened to one of Pres. C. A. Blanchard's stirring and eloquent addresses, followed by a brief calcium light exhibition by I. R. B. Arnold.

Although the convention was small, barely fifty delegates being enrolled, yet all felt it to be a very profitable meeting, and if its plans and hopes for carrying on the work during the year are fulfilled, we shall have grown to an host by the time the next anniversary comes round.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

Your committee would report the following resolutions:

Whereas, The pulpit, the platform and the press are the most effectual instrumentalities to move public sentiment on the lodge question; therefore resolved:

1. That we will redouble our efforts to maintain a State lecturer who will diligently seek every opportunity for preaching, lecturing and circulating literature on this issue.

2. That the organization of a Lecture Bureau would greatly facilitate the agitation by planning and arranging lecture campaigns, so as very much to economize the time, labors and expenses of the lecturer.

3. Whereas, The prohibition of the liquor traffic has been a prominent plank in our platform of principles from the first, and we believe the eventual success of prohibition depends on the destruction of the secret lodge system and its oath-bound favoritism and sworn affiliation with liquor men; therefore

Resolved, That as American prohibitionists our rule in voting shall be to refuse to support lodge members for office.

4. That we highly commend the W. C. T. Unions for the good they have done and congratulate them on their success under God in the promotion of open Christian work in all their lines of endeavor, but we would urge upon them, as a kindred Christian association, the importance of bearing a clear testimony against the secrecy feature of the orders which seek to gain their co-operation, but at the same time put their light under a bushel contrary to the command of the Word of God.

5. That the time and money consumed in the working of the secret orders, though a great loss, is the "least of the evils" attending their operation; as those orders prove to be immense training schools for the higher irreligious orders, controlled and often started by Masons and members of those older secret organizations.

6. Greater effort should be put forth the present year to secure united and earnest prayer for the downfall of all secret orders and the use of only open methods in promoting benevolent works. To this end we commend concerts of prayer, where two or three will agree regularly to meet and pray for this object.

7. Fully believing in the power of the press and realizing the growing importance of the use of proper literature, both as to papers and tracts, we therefore most heartily approve and endorse the free distribution of the same to every home possible; and we especially commend the Christian Cynosure as the efficient and able organ of the movement and gratefully recognize its influence in the enlargement and spread of our reform; and we do rejoice to see the influence of the paper in the remarkable movements among the colored churches of the South, and we believe it the duty of Christians throughout the State to aid in continuing the circulation of the paper among the colored pastors to the utmost extent.

8. The sincerest thanks of this convention are given to Bro. I. R. B. Arnold and his family for the use of their commodious tent and assistance in making our evening sessions more interesting. Our thanks are also heartily given to the friends of the reform in Belvidere who have hospitably opened their homes for our entertainment.

9. Resolved, That we tender to Elder J. L. Barlow, our former president, who has removed to Iowa, an expression of our sorrow and sympathy with him in the recent loss of his beloved wife, and we pray that the Divine Comforter may bring to him that heavenly consolation which only God can give.

10. Resolved, That we enter our protest against the growing Sunday desecration by the Government Mail ser vice and by railroad corporations, as well as by secret societies in their Sunday street parades and excursion trains.

REPORT OF THE ILLINOIS S. C. A. EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

It is often with fear and trembling that we enter upon the work of a new year. Sometimes our efforts, looking at them from our standpoint, seem productive of little good, but the All-seeing eye has seen the seed dropped even in stony places, or perhaps on the rocks, and we comfort ourselves with the thought that in heaven we are rewarded for what we tried to do. We are not working for the plaudits of men.

At the beginning of this year, 1886–7, we felt greatly encouraged in the prospect of having as State agent, Bro. I. R. B. Arnold. He was engaged and began his work at once. In the strength of the Lord and in his own judicious way, he was exceedingly blest and prospered in his work. He won the hearts of the people with his historic views; and in his reasonable and calm way, with illustrations he clearly proved the ancient origin of Freemasonry and traced it back to the sun and idol worship. Of Bro. Arnold's marked success you will learn by his report.

Near the beginning of the year, Bro. Barlow, our state President, expressed his great anxiety to have this State a banner State for organization. He wanted our State Convention to be a representative body. It was found the constitution would have to be changed, and the committee was instructed to report upon it in a year. H. L. Kellogg was appointed by the committee to prepare the changes of constitution which is submitted with this report.

The subject was frequently discussed of sending out another agent to follow Bro. Arnold, and secure Cynosure subscriptions and organize wherever practicable. Only a lack of funds prevented this being done. Would not some action taken by the State Convention, regarding a financial plan for the coming year, assist the Executive Committee very materially?

The Secretary was appointed to correspond with the colleges, medical institutions and theological seminaries of the State, which was done, inclosing a circular and recommendations of Bro. Arnold's work, asking them the privilege of allowing him to come to their schools, in connection with a lecture course, or otherwise. Although written to early in the season, only two or three favorable answers were received in response to the twenty-five written letters sent, most of these saying their programmes were full for the season; but their answers were very courteous. Bro. Arnold agreed to secure subscriptions for the Cynosure, also to distribute our tracts.

With gratitude in our hearts we again recognize the Master's hand in sending into our State work Bro. W. B. Stoddard for a month, and Bro. C. A. Conrad for a couple of months. Their reports show with what earnestness they went forth, and the good work accomplished.

Many prayers have been offered and many efforts put forth which have availed little, but we are not discouraged. Well do we know that much valuable sentiment has been created in our favor, the Masons themselves being judges. With a hope and a prayer that the next committee may do more and better work, we respectfully submit this brief report.

THE AMENDMENT CAMPAIGN IN TENNESSEE.

A momentous election.—Knoxville crowds to hear Price and Bain.—Athens and its schools.

ATHENS, Tenn., Sept. 16, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Abraham Lincoln's adage, that "it is not worth while to swap horses when crossing a river," seems applicable to Tennessee. She is in the throes of a great moral revolution. No one can predict the result, but nearly all feel that great interests are at stake.

I reached Knoxville Monday, the 12th, at 1:25 P. M., and found all our friends absorbed in the amendment. Prof. J. C. Price, the distinguished colored orator of Livingston College, Salisbury, North Carolina, had addressed a crowded audience at the Opera House on Sunday night. A colored preacher of considerable ability, by the name of Bryant, was also speaking against the amendment, and the Hon. (?) Mr. Butler of the northeast district was in town seeking to repel the imputation of bribery, which, in spite of all his efforts, seems to stick to him.

On Monday night I listened to an open-air address from Prof. Price. He had, it was estimated, 5,000 auditors, of whom, perhaps, one-third were colored. There was good order and excellent attention, and all were held spell-bound by his eloquence. The address was especially to the colored people, but was applicable to all. It was replete with solid argument, telling illustrations and touching appeals.

On Tuesday night Col. Bain of Kentucky addressed an even larger audience at the same place. Mr. Bain is called the "silver-tongued," and well deserves it, for he is an orator of high rank, but he lacks the fascination of Prof. Price. It was in some respects, however, the abler address, and was especially rich in the presentation of authorities. On the same night from 2,000 to 3,000 people were addressed by the colored preacher Bryant, in an open-air meeting. It is believed that East Tennessee, with the exception of Chattanooga, will give a majority for the amendment.

Wednesday I came to this place, the county seat of McMinn county. It has a population of about 1200. Like most of the towns in East Tennessee it has had a long period of stagnation. Now, there is a promise of railroads and iron furnaces that will, it is hoped, bring prosperity. I visited to-day the colored school in a long, rickety room, with more than 100 pupils under the care of a young man, Prof. Richards, late a clerk in the government service at Washington, with a salary of $1200 per year. Now he gets $35 per month. He is a young man of excellent promise.

Among the many institutions of learning in East Tennessee is Grant Memorial University. It was chartered in 1867 as East Tennessee Wesleyan University, and last year its name was changed. It has collegiate, theological, and legal departments. Last year's catalogue contains the names of 303 students, with 100 in the college classes and twenty in the graduating class. I attended the chapel exercises and some of the recitations, and was much pleased with the young ladies and gentlemen that compose the classes. The institution is under the auspices of the M. E. church. Its president cheerfully accepted the anti-secrecy literature that I gave him. He had paid but little attention to the subject, is a prominent Mason, but favors free discussion. There is a Masonic temple here which in a great measure overshadows the churches. The colored people have about their usual quota of secret societies. I have arranged to lecture to-night on prohibition in the A.M. E. Zion church, and preach twice for them on the Sabbath. I then expect to go to Rome, Ga., and then South.

H. H. HINMAN.

MARCHING AGAIN THROUGH GEORGIA.

King Cotton—Prohibition notes from Tennessee—Also in Georgia—Atlanta may yet have time to repent of the Glenn Bill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I cannot say that "I've reached the land of corn and wine," for I am not sure that "Beulah Land" is in Georgia; but I am quite sure that I've reached the land of corn and cotton. I left Athens, Tennessee, on the morning of the 19th inst., and we had gotten but little way from Chattanooga before we struck the cotton fields which are an almost continuous succession to this place. The crop is about average, has suffered somewhat from drought, and is being picked earlier than usual. Large quantities are coming into the market, and there is a constant roar of the steam cotton compress which flattens the bales for foreign shipment.

I lectured on prohibition in the A. M. E. church at Athens, Tennessee, on Friday, the 17th. On Saturday the 18th I went with the editor of the Athenian to Riceville, seven miles, where we each spoke in the evening, and returned to Athens next morning. This paper, which is Republican and prohibition, is the best of all the rural papers I have seen in Tennessee. Its editor, Prof. McCaron, is a hard-working, cultured, Christian gentleman, formerly from Iowa. Like other ambitious men he has seen the inside of the lodge, but has neither time nor inclination to attend to its follies. We had a good meeting at Riceville, where they had just concluded a joint debate on the pending question, and we got back in time for sevice.

At 11 A. M. I preached in the A. M. E. Zion church to a good congregation. At 3:30 P. M. I listened to a most able discourse in the same place from Pres. Bachman of Sweetwater College, who is the acting pastor of the (white) Presbyterian church of Athens. He was an officer in the Confederate service, educated at Hamilton College, New York, after the war, and has been for some years the president of this college. He is an able preacher, labors for and favors the education of the colored people, but thinks mixed schools are impolitic. He expressed his hearty sympathy with the work in which I am engaged, and thought secret societies a great obstacle to the cause of Christianity.

At 7:30 I had a full house in the same church, and lectured on Africa and its missions. The colored people in Tennessee are divided on the question of the amendment. The more intelligent heartily approve of it, but the ignorant are led to think that it is a plan to break up the Republican party. They think it a part of the St. John movement, and that it is responsible for the defeat of Mr. Blaine. Some acknowledged their mistake and promised to support the amendment. The Chattanooga Times, the ablest of the anti-prohibition organs, seems to weaken, and is apologetic instead of aggressive as at first. Col. Bain has done some excellent work in that city.

Here in Rome, where local option was carried by a mighty effort, there is a deep interest felt in the election in Tennessee. Some of the saloons, which were remarkably numerous last spring, have disappeared. Enough remain, but they will gradually drop out as their licenses expire. The colored pastors all worked hard for prohibition.

Much interest is now felt in the approaching contest in Atlanta, which will again have to vote on local option. The law provides for a vote once in two years. Rev. Dr. Ganes, the distinguished colored preacher of that city who did so much to secure prohibition, is now here. He feels fearful of the result, and mainly because the promises made to the colored people have not been kept, and the extreme friendliness has been followed by marked discourtesies. "The Glenn Bill" and the newspaper discussion it has provoked has greatly increased the spirit of race antagonism, which so greatly hinders the progress of all that is good.

Our meetings here last spring had an excellent effect. The colored ministers have been much pleased with the Cynosure, and feel much interest in our movement. Rev. Dr. Watson of Cave Springs, and Dr. Ganes of Atlanta, both Masons, expressed a warm interest in my work. They are now all holding protracted meetings. I heard Dr. Ganes Tuesday night in the A. M. E. church, and was greatly interested. Last night I lectured to a small audience in the same place, and to-day go to Cave Springs, Georgia. May the Lord help.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES IN MISSISSIPPI.

ROME, Ga., Sept. 19, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The following proceedings of the seventeenth session of the Associated Churches of Christ of Mississippi was sent to me at Chicago, followed me to Georgia, and at this late day are sent for publication. H. H. HINMAN.

The Associated Churches convened at Cedar Grove, Loundis Co., Miss., on the last Friday in July. There was a full attendance, much interest, and some excellent speeches. The Divine presence was in a good degree manifested. Much interest was expressed in the proceedings of the Congress of Churches held in Chicago last spring. The best means of opposing secret societies were considered. Some spoke from sad experience of the injury they had sustained in the loss of money, time, etc., by their connection with the lodge. Other obstructions to the kingdom of Christ were considered,—such as want of brotherly love amongst the members of different sects; an evil that this Association was well calculated to remove. It was believed that we are not only taking the stumbling-blocks out of the way, but are casting up a highway for the coming of the Divine kingdom. Others spoke of the duties of parents, how to keep their children out of prison and chain gangs, and also what could be done to mitigate the sufferings of such as were treated with cruelty.

The following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our convention (some two and a half years since) our first secretary, Jeptha M. Feemster, who so faithfully served us in his office for several sessions, and who, when our existence was threatened, had the courage and skill to avert the danger; and

WHEREAS, After his removal to another field he did not cease to labor, pray and contribute to our success; therefore

Resolved, That we as a convention express our high appreciation of his character and his work, and while we humbly ask for grace to say, "Thy will be done," we also pray that other laborers may be raised up of like zeal and efficiency.

Resolved, That we also tender our thanks to our present secretary, M A. Tapley, (who is unavoidably absent) who has for nine sessions been faithful in the same office.

Resolved, That in this, the seventh year of our convention, we thank God and take courage, praying him to make it a Jubilee to us by freeing us from all that obstructs the kingdom of God in our hearts and by establishing the work of our hands.

I. D. FREMSTER,
Sec'y pro tem.

In one division of Liverpool there is a population of over 60,000, but not a single saloon. In all the building leases the sale of liquor is absolutely prohibited.

ARTIST TRAMPS IN THE TYROL.

The Scenery of the Bavarian Highlands—Notes of a crazy king and rash young men—Tyrolean Costumes and filth—Companions afoot—Innsbruck inconveniences—Priest craft and business—An Alpine experience.

"THE HERMIT" ON WALCHEN SEE.
Bavarian Highlands, July 29th, 1887.

I have been out of Munich since last Tuesday. Walchen See is a lake somewhat larger than our Devil's Lake [Wis.] and in some respects like it. The mountains around are really mountains, instead of hills, but are not nearly so wild-looking as those around Devil's Lake. We were the first two days at "The Hunter's" hotel in Urfield on this same lake, but there were too many people there. The view from Urfield is a beautiful one and I must bring a sketch home, though it is not easy to find a place for sketching in a hotel full of people who all want to look on. Urfield is only three houses and two hotels, and the buildings fill all the space between the foot of the mountains and the lake so that there is hardly room for any tramps like us with our sketching materials. Across the lake from there are six ranges of mountains to be seen, one beyond the other. The further range is almost entirely a very light colored stone and looks in the distance precisely like snow.

Here we are really in a kind of a hermitage where only a few people live, but many travelers stop for dinner and occasionally over night. On a mountain near, the "Heryogstand," is one of the last king's many palaces, through which he helped make Bavaria bankrupt. The view is said to be very fine from the mountain top and we intend to go up there on the first day when it is not too warm.

Did you read about the six tourists who tried to ascend the "Jungfrau" Alp in Switzerland without a guide and were all blown over a precipice in a sudden snow storm that came up unexpectedly? Munich was very much excited over it. There has been another similar accident since where several lives were lost; but the young men still continue to go upon the glaciers and mountains where it is dangerous without guides.

MITTENWALD, Bavarian Highlands.

We have made quite a long trip on foot, from Walchen See here through a beatiful part of the country. The road is perfectly level and hard as a floor, but on all sides of us are high mountains of stone and almost entirely bare. We are to-day exactly opposite the highest of the mountains, Mt. Rarwendel. It has a beautiful shape and color and in the foreground are old houses and an old bridge. I am only sorry that I shall have no time to make a sketch of it. We have engaged a room in Gossensass in the Tyrol for next Saturday, and unless we go early to-morrow morning we will not get so far on foot. From here we have nine hours to walk to Yierl, where we come first in the Tyrol; from there two hours to Innsbruck, where we take the train to Oetythal. From there we will go again four days through the Oety valley on foot to Gossensass.

In the Oety valley are said to be many of the Tyrolese costumes and customs, which are generally nearly or quite laid aside in other places. I have yet seen nothing very interesting in the way of dress except the hunter's suit that we often meet. The women wear just such clothes as our German washerwomen at home do, with only the addition of a silk handkerchief over the shoulders,and on Sundays a peculiar felt hat with silver braid and tassels. The men wear hats of the same shape but always dark green and with a bouquet of bright colored flowers on the side.

We had bad weather nearly all the time in Walchen See and I only had a chance to make four sketches. The old houses that are so picturesque for sketching are generally too filthy inside to be endured, and every one has an indescribable heap before it, nicely squared off and surrounded by a pool of water. The further away we keep the better.

GOSSENSASS, Tyrol.

Since I wrote last from Mittenwald we have made a long trip on foot and a short one by rail. From Mittenwald in the Bavarian Alps we walked to Yierl on the boundary of Austria, fifteen or sixteen miles, I think, and the last three miles on a perpetual inclined plane with no break at all in the descent but only a sort of zigzag in another direction. It had not rained for some time and the white lime dust from the road covered us from head to foot until we looked like a pair of female millers.

About half way we were joined by another party on foot—a German minister and his wife and daughter. The "Frau Minister" was rather weighty and out of breath with the descent and had given all her extra clothing to her husband who promenaded down the mountain with her ulster attached conveniently behind and looking like an "old clothes" man. We went together through Yierl, where the hotels looked very unattractive, and where every house had the unnameable heap before the door, to a hotel at the foot of a mountain a mile further on. We were met at the door with the statement that every room was full and we must go back to the village; but after considerable coaxing from Miss E. we were allowed to have the use of the great dining saloon for the night while the poor minister and his wife went sadly back to town. The scenery between Yierl and Mittenwald is very beautiful. It is like a great panorama rather than a single picture.

The next day we went by rail to Innsbruck—a city which is beautiful in its location and buildings, but in which nothing I can imagine would compel me to live. At the end of the principal street one sees mountains covered much of the time with snow, but at the same time the city is burning hot and dusty. When the south wind blows—often in winter, too—the heat and dust become unendurable. Every window and door must be closed tightly and no one attempts going to his business. We were so nearly suffocated that we did not at all enjoy the sights, except in one great church where it had not yet become quite an oven. In this church were twenty-eight bronze statues, more than life size, of various celebrated personages, mostly kings and queens, among them King Arthur of England. They were arranged in a double row through the center passage and gave the church a solemn and rather fantistical appearance. The whole collection was from the hands of the great German artist in bronze, Peter Fischer.

From Innsbruck we went by rail a short distance to Oetythal and again were given the dining saloon as a chamber, an arrangement which suits us both very well because we are sure of fresh beds.

From Oetythal we went on foot through the Oety valley to Ober Gurgle, the highest inhabited land in the Tyrol, and the headquarters of tourists and guides who are bound for the glaciers and highest mountains around. They say that for thirty years between 1882 and 1852 no marriage was allowed there on account of the scarcity of food. It is so cold that no potatoes, grain or fruit will ripen. Except a few garden vegetables and milk all food must be brought over the mountains upon women's shoulders, as we saw it done. The priest is also the hotel keeper and makes it profitable. The rooms are bare boards with one chair and a washstand and two or three beds each—but the prices are first-class. A gentleman who spent several weeks there says that this priest preaches every Sunday in the year the same sermon, the substance of which is this: "My beloved hearers!!! What is the best prayer? Our Father in heaven. What is the best book? The Bible." And so further—all very true but not particularly edifying. We two did not think it would benefit us to hear the old fraud preach.

We went Saturday to the edge of a glacier (the Gaisberg), but a thick fog came on so that we did not dare venture on it, but bought from a boy, who had been and was returning, some Edelweiss and pyrites which were from there. By the way, every child in the Oety valley begs, and half the grown people. Some of them make themselves very disagreeable if refused.

From the Oety valley we were obliged to cross over the mountains with a guide in order to reach Gossensass or any other railway station. We came over a high mountain called the Timbler Joch and over the Snow Mountain. Timbler Joch is 8,440 feet high and Snow Mountain 7,950 feet. We started with a clear sky, but half way up the mountain came fog, then rain, and when we came into the snow part it thundered and lightened, hailed and blew a hurricane. It was so cold too that we could not stop to rest or eat. Without a guide I can imagine that we would not have come through safely. As it was we were drenched through and nearly frozen and had to go to bed in the first tavern at three in the afternoon, after climbing six hours without a single pause. Our dresses were in a fine condition though we both had waterproofs and jackets; and our hats!—mine had a cluster of poppies for trimming with white lace. The last hour of our trip I had a stream of fiery red dye dripping over my face and a second over my shoulders. The hat is now a lovely pink. Miss E.'s was trimmed with black lace and yellow flowers and presents now a most entertaining appearance, something like a tattooed Indian. To finish off the pleasures of mountain climbing we found that our beds had other occupants enough to make us nearly wild and we could not get up because we had nothing wherewithal to array ourselves. I remember hearing it mentioned that the Tyrol "abounds in fleas" but it makes a stronger impression when one makes so near an acquaintance.

I have made one sketch of a peasant family room and am making another in a house said by the village priest to be 2,000 years old. The other authorities put it 800 or 900 years. The house was owned by a princely family in the ages gone by and is very quaint and curious. Its present occupants are a pair of old women who speak such barbarous German that Miss E. herself can scarcely understand them. They invited us to spend the night, but we declined with thanks. R.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON II.—Oct. 9. The Tempest Stilled.—Matt. 8: 18-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?—Matt. 8: 26.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. What is involved in a true following of Christ. vs.18-22. The scribes belonged to the privileged caste. They sat in Moses' seat. The people looked up to them as infallible guides. Under these circumstances we see in our Saviour's reply a sharp probe. Was his devotion a mere passing flame? he who was now proposing to follow one practically an outcast, who was poorer even than beast or bird, not having where to lay his head. If so it would flicker and go out at the first breath of the world's scorn. If it was a real love to Christ and his cause, all the world's obloquy and reproach would only fan it to a whiter heat. Another asks that he may first fulfill the last duties to his aged father before he takes up the calling of a disciple. The answer is an implicit command, "Follow me." Yet we are not to suppose that our Lord, whose last human thought on the cross was about his mother, would speak lightly of the most sacred of earthly ties. We are not sure that the excuse was entirely an honest one, that there was in it no spirit of evasion, no clinging to the world while flattering himself that he was only doing a duty. His first duty plainly was to perform Christ's bidding. The "oughts" of life never clash.

2. Peril in following Christ. vs. 23-27. The disciples were in the way of obedience when the storm met them. The way of duty is sometimes a very perilous one, but whether it be smooth or rough, peaceful or full of dangers, should be with us no matter for concern. The billows covered the ship. So there are times when the Christian can say with David, "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me." And worst of all the Divine Helper often seems to be sleeping. The Church passed through a terrible tempest at the time of the Reformation, but only by passing through it could she reach the calm waters of religious freedom. Luther preached his doctrine of justification by faith because he knew it was God's truth for which souls were starving. He preached it too with full knowledge of what it would entail—a storm that would shake the papacy to its foundations and convulse all Europe. Yet with our free institutions and open Bible who among us is not thankful that he obeyed the call of God and let the storm of papal fury do its worst. But at the present day a pastor who preaches against the false religion of Masonry, a religion which has much in common with popery only that it goes a step farther and denies Christ and his work altogether, is stigmatized as a disturber of Zion, and so many who are convinced of the evil it is doing are afraid of the storm a public discussion of it in the pulpit would raise, and are silent to the detriment of their own spiritual power and the destruction of souls they are set to watch over. For a similar reason some are afraid to boldly preach prohibition doctrines, yet to be fearful is of itself a proof of little faith. What right had the disciples to be fearful while Christ was with them? No matter how fiercely the billows of worldly opposition may dash around us, in heaven if not on earth we shall come into the place of still waters; while so far as spiritual peace is concerned the Christian's soul should be like the calm center at the heart of a whirlwind. The disciples marveled, another proof of little faith. Why are we surprised at answers to our prayers, surprised when God keeps his word with us, surprised when he interposes to deliver us? Let us have at least as much faith as the Roman centurion and believe that the Ruler of earth and heaven can command all natural and spiritual forces and they will obey him.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"And Jesus saith unto him." He would never seek to obtain disciples by hiding the truth. He would have him "count the cost," go forward with open eyes that hi choice might be sincere and from the heart. The scrib was welcome and more than welcome if he came truly t the Lord as his master and teacher.—P.

"Hath not where to lay his head." Has no settled home, no earthly property. Some one always, doubtless, gave him a place to lodge, but he owned none by earthly tenure. The Son of God, the King of kings, the Creator of all things, voluntarily gave up all in order that he might thus best save men.

We do not know whether the scribe accepted Jesus as his teacher when he learned what his act meant, or whether he turned away sorrowfully.—P. Many a man begins a religious life full of warmth and zeal and by and by loses all his first love and turns back again to the world. He liked the new uniform and the bounty money and the name of a Christian soldier, but he never considered the watching and warring and wounds and conflicts which Christian soldiers must endure.—Ryle.

"And let the dead bury their dead." Let the higher duties take precedence over the lower. He should not spend time in useless mourning, as the worldly do; but the best cure of his sorrow was earnest work for the Master.—P. It does not follow that we are to neglect what are called secular duties for those that are termed religious. Nevertheless life presents many occasions in which duty to the living is supreme over respect for the dead.—Abbott.

TEACHINGS.—(1) That no office of love and service to man must be preferred before our duty to God, unto whom we owe our first obedience. (2) That lawful and decent offices become sinful when they hinder greater duties. (3) That such as are called to the work and employment of the ministry must mind that alone, and leave inferior duties to inferior persons. —Burkitt.

THE TRIAL OF FAITH.—He lets the storm rage on unrebuked until he has rebuked the agitation of their souls. And now they perceive that a most precious opportunity of signalizing their faith in Christ had been given and given in vain. The elements had been let loose that their faith might gain a victory and go on to perfection. The progress of ordinary months might have been made in an hour had they been watchful. When will they understand that this matter of the education of faith is the most important thing going on under the sun?—Rev. Geo. Bowen.

OBITUARY.

MARTHA GUNN WALKER, wife of Rev. C. E. Walker, pastor of the United Brethren church of Grey Eagle, Minn., died at her home, Monday, September 12th, 1887, after a few days' severe illness from typhoid fever. Mrs. Walker was at the time of her death somewhat more than 31 years and 8 months old. She was converted to Christ in Indiana early in the year 1884 and united with the United Brethren church of Twin Brooks, Dakota, in December of the same year. In February, 1886, she was married, and leaves in the arms of her stricken husband a little son nine months old. Delirium locked her senses during most of her sickness, but among her last intelligent words was the name of her precious Saviour, on whom her soul was leaning for help and victory in the last struggle with death. She was a woman of sweet spirit, a loving wife and a careful, thoughtful mother. Rev. Peter Scott officiated at the funeral services, and voiced the sympathy of many friends to the bereaved husband.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shorn of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the prurient literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1887.

The Cynosure editor has promised to attend the New Hampshire State meeting at Manchester, October 29th, 30th and 31st. Prof. Kimball is full of hope; Rev. W. F. Davis is out of Boston jail, and will be present; Miss Flagg, the popular and agreeable writer, has promised to speak. St. Johnsbury, Vt., is some 100 miles from Manchester; will Rev. W. R. Laird write us at once whether he and Secretary Stoddard intend to hold meetings in north Vermont, so that we can attend them the first week in November? Please write to the Cynosure at once. And why do we not hear from Solon Burroughs of Vergennes, Vermont?

STRANGE DOCTRINE.

The Religious Telescope for Sept. 21st inst., gives its readers the following strange doctrine on "Law and Government," by a correspondent who frankly preaches what the United Brethren leaders practice. He says: "The church cannot be cumbered with our rule on secrecy, and have a clear sky and a successful sail." "Our efforts should be to focalize the rays of faith in a body of divinity such as the Bible produces, and make this church a power in the world." "Every church that is progressive must adapt itself to a universal equipment of mankind."

When Paul "waited at Athens," there were in that city 30,000 gods, with each his mode of worship; and, at least, one altar "to the unknown God." Instead of "focalizing his faith in a body of divinity," he met them squarely on their errors, disputed daily with such as met him in the market, and told them they ought not to think God was like their idols of silver and gold; and he preached to them the Saviour whose name and person they had left out of their worship, as do the Masons and other secretists, to brother with his enemies. The great majority of Americans are now worshiping at altars of unknown gods. Every secret altar is such; and to go to teaching a "body of divinity" and let these worships alone is to depart from the methods of Paul and of Christ.

SATAN'S "STRONGHOLDS."

"The Christian religion goes forth against all the combined and concentrated powers of resistance of the whole world: the warfare is to be waged against every strongly fortified place of error and of sin."—Albert Barnes on 2 Cor. 10: 4.

In this age, and in the United States, there were three such "strongholds" or forts which devils garrisoned, viz., Slavery, Lodge and Liquor. The cruelties, over-whipping, under-feeding, murders, etc., etc., of slavery, which appealed strongest to popular sympathy, were the least of its evils. The property-ownership of men and women, twelve hundred millions of dollars invested in human beings, was fatal to every principle of morals and religion. The system was inhabited by legions of unclean spirits, and was indeed a "stronghold" against every good movement in church or state. It kept the slaves who tilled the soil from schools, prayer meetings, Christ, and God. It was indeed a "stronghold."

But the secret lodge is a stronger hold than slavery or the saloon. When Satan met Christ, entering on his mission to set up his kingdom and overthrow Satan's, he proposed that Christ should worship him: not purchase slaves, or take a glass of grog with him. He knew these would follow. Every moral evil follows devil worship, as seen around the globe.

Liquor, it is settled, produces ninety per cent. of our poverty and crimes. But its chief evil, the master-mischief of liquor, is, it keeps men from Christ. A single glass of brandy will take a man out of the hands of the Holy Spirit, and stop his religious convictions; and a keg of whisky drunk in a revival will stop it. Satan knew the relative strength of his forts, and seeing Christ had come "to destroy the works of the devil," he entered into his strongest hold. "All these," i. e., all the rest in the world, "will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Satan was sure of everything else if he got this. He knew that the Christian religion underlies everything else. If he could fill the world with devil worship, which is Gentile or Christless religion, he knew that whoever had the semblance of power he would have the substance. In 1832–7, when 1,500 lodges sunk before the truth in popular discussion, Satan gave up slavery and took up the lodge. He even turned Abolitionist, and the Garrisonians cursed the church, ministry, Sabbath, everything but anti-slavery. This one article with him and his followers swallowed all creeds. And to-day the Garrisonians in New England worship the spirits. His "N. E. Anti-slavery Society" in Boston started in 1832, the year that 280,000 votes were cast by Anti-masons. The Anti-masonic party which "went up like a rocket," "went down like a stick," and the slavery question took the field; and the fallen lodge went South and took charge of secession and rebellion.

Satan is now attempting the same game with liquor that he did with slavery. The South is going for prohibition and secret societies. And even good men say, "Let us down liquor and then attack the lodge." But you can no more destroy the saloon with lodgery, than Lincoln could save the Union with slavery! Men sworn to have their throats cut or keep secret oaths, will shield distillers and brewers who administered those oaths to them, while they regard the oaths, and keep the secret; as McClellan, McDowell and others shielded the slave-holders and prolonged the war, till Grant took command. Let us not be humbugged by the devil twice.

THE CATHOLIC REVIEW.

This able paper reminds us of the council of heaven in which "a lying spirit" was permitted to mingle, in the days of Micaiah the son of Imlah. The number for September 24 gives columns to the Pittsburgh Catholic Total Abstinence societies, in which is given the Pope's "Satisfaction with the rapid growth of the Catholic Total Abstinence societies," and states that Pope Leo XIII. has several times given his apostolic benediction "to the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America," and sent a brief to Bishop Ireland commanding opposition to "the monster evil of intemperance, which is a great source of crime, poverty and inhumanity."

The Pittsburg gathering was a great one. It required four heavy trains to carry away the convention from Pittsburgh and Allegheny. Some of the speaking done by priests was good; and some very bad. Father McTighe said, "I don't want you to think I am a prohibition crank." "I believe prohibition an absurdity and a useless thing. The ideas of the Prohibitionists I believe to be heretical; and the principles they teach contain false doctrines."

At a late meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinence societies in Boston, Father Byrne said, "I am a believer in total abstinence for a large number of our people, I might say a majority of our people, although do not understand me that I mean to include all." Such priests no doubt drink liquor habitually. We know one such in a prohibition town who drinks and makes no secret of it. He also carries his sign in his face. Such priests confirm the statements of the ex-priests who have come out from Rome, all of whom testify to the drinking and debauchery of many priests when met in their secret places.

It is painful to suspect that the mass of Romish priests are hypocrites, including their head; and that they go for temperance as a sheer matter of policy, and lest their church should sink in the esteem of enlightened American Catholics. But we know that while Christ was here, he denounced in the mass as "hypocrites" those church leaders who preferred the "mint, anise and cummin" of their church to the welfare of the people. Let us rejoice that there has been a Father Matthew, and that his spirit still lives in this strange mixture of truth and falsehood, light and darkness, good and evil—the Roman Catholic church.

THE PHILADELPHIA PARTY.

We are not yet willing Dr. Kirby and company should rob us of our American name and wave it over a platform that but half expresses the real issues that should interest the American voter.

The convention at Philadelphia was well-timed. The 16th and 17th ult. was the high tide of the Centennial celebration, and Philadelphia was crowded by scores of thousands of strangers. About 150 were enrolled and Hepburn and Munyon, officers of the committee which developed the movement, were quickly elected chairman and secretary. A gag-rule was adopted for the resolutions which began a split, but the objector being out-voted he was alone in leaving the meeting.

The platform reported on the second day attacks, in the preamble, the present immigration system, as multitudes who have come to us from Europe are unfit subjects for American citizenship, "becoming the political and social agitators of every cause looking to the destruction of private rights, heading and encouraging all disturbance of labor, seeking to array labor against capital, setting themselves up as the judges of the rights of the American people, committing murder, arson, and other crimes by means of secret organizations, thrusting aside the American citizen and wage-worker to make place for themselves, preventing by threats the children of American citizens from apprenticeship to trades—the enemies of all free government by the people." The sentiment "America for Americans" must be perpetuated; a pledge is taken to the restriction and regulation of immigration; a department of immigration demanded with a Cabinet officer at its head; also fourteen years' residence for naturalization, all communists, socialists, paupers, criminals, etc., to be excluded; free schools to be protected; American lands for our own citizens, and landed monopolies condemned; the treasury surplus to be squandered in navies, fortifications, etc., freedom of worship, separation of church and state; the organization of labor endorsed; a vigorous foreign policy and reassertion of the "Monroe doctrine;" "no North, no South, no East, no West."

The effort of a few for a prohibition plank was promptly voted down. Senator Pomeroy was present the first day and made a speech which was roundly applauded, but we fear made no deep impression, as his views are ignored in the platform. It was promised, however, that his address should be printed, which will be partial atonement, since thinking men will find the platform to compare unfavorably with the fundamental principles which he maintained.

Without a particular review of the platform, which does not rise to the dignity of a great moral principle, but grovels in selfishness, it is yet to be said that good may grow out of this, and other like movements. They will help to disintegrate the old and worn-out party systems that seem determined to prevent moral issues coming to the front, and will thus serve as ladders by which prohibition, the national recognition of God, and rejection of the lodge, may yet be made successful issues.

A NEEDED ADMONITION.

The Michigan Wesleyan Conference, lately met at Rives Junction, adopted the following minute respecting the late efforts to draw the W. C. T. U. and Prohibition party into complicity with the lodge. The Michigan Conference is one of the largest and most influential of the annual conferences of that church, and its wise and Christian reproof indicates the judgment of the whole denomination. There are thousands of Prohibition voters connected with the churches which abjure secret societies. They know well enough the iniquity of secretism, and cannot easily be persuaded that it is necessary to embrace a greater evil that a less may be cured. The Michigan brethren deserve the thanks of all true-hearted temperance people for their protest:

Since the cause of temperance is of great and growing interest, and woman a principal sufferer from the effects or intemperance, we hail with delight her rising abilities and spreading power as displaayed in her work through the W. C. T. U.s which have spread through the centers of population and influence in every State and Territory of the American Union, in Mexico, Canada, Alaska and every civilized nation on the globe.

We as a conference and as individuals feel called upon to go to the extent of our abilities in strengthening the hands and supplying from our means "the sinews of war" to the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions within our reach.

We deplore the fact that the saintly, eloquent and queenly Frances E. Willard should give her voice and influence in favor of the secret labor unions of the country; they not making temperance an issue, the personal habits of many of their number being opposed to the principles of temperance, she is thus, as president of the noble Woman's Christian Temperance Union, degrading the high mission of her society to a lower grade of morals and manners than belongs by nature or grace to the grand host of women of which she is a leader and president.

—After the Belvidere convention Secretary Stoddard with his wife spent the Sabbath at Kingston, where he spoke several times, and returned home to Wheaton Monday. Bro. Stoddard is this week at the Wisconsin meeting.

—Bro. M. N. Butler has ably assisted Secretary Stoddard during the past few weeks. He is this week making the Wisconsin meeting a success by every effort, and after the State convention season is over some of the Illinois friends hope to give him a call to their State lecture work.

—Special Sunday trains for the G. A. R. meeting in St. Louis were run by every road leading to that city. The G. A. R. is a religious order, as is proved by its chaplains and various religious services: but of what nature is that religion? Would these roads run Sunday specials for a missionary conference or a W. C. T. U. meeting?

—Our friend Clark the singer once sent out his son as cavalry lieutenant after Jeff. Davis. He was successful, for he was one of the officers of the Michigan regiment that gathered in the rebel chief. But when it comes to a moral conflict like the prohibition issue Father Clark takes up the battle-axe himself. Every reader of his article on another page will confess that he is yet a champion.

—Rev. J. F. Avery, pastor of the Baptist Mission in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and editor of the excellent home monthly, Buds and Blossoms, has accepted a call to a wider field in New York City, at the Temple Mission, corner Henry and Oliver streets, near Chatham Square. He begins this new work October 1st, and the prayers of many readers of the Cynosure who have been profited by his contributions in these columns will follow him.

—The Ohio agent in the midst of a busy week finds only time to add a word to a business letter enclosing fifteen names for the Cynosure list. Rev. C. H. Rohe of one of the Lutheran churches of Columbus has projected a meeting of all the churches of that denomination in the city, whom Bro. Stoddard is to address. This proposition shows a very hopeful improvement in the work in Ohio. The State convention will probably be held during the last week of the present month.

—The expulsion of McGarigle, Ochs and Bipper, three of the Chicago "boodlers," by St. Bernard Knight Templar Commandery, was reported last Wednesday by the Chicago dailies. The details of the case we have not very complete, however, and hope to give them at length next week. It is a satisfaction to know that Masonry has begun to turn out its base characters. When through, we can count those that are left in a few minutes. It will be a fine thing to see the majority voted out of the lodge.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold closed his illustrated lectures at Belvidere Friday night, and this week accepts an urgent invitation to visit Milton, Wisconsin, and give one or two evenings to the State Convention there. The big tent will fold its broad wings for the season and hibernate in the new barn of Bro. M. L. Worcester at Kingston, the biggest in DeKalb county. Bro. Arnold and his interesting family will continue their good work in halls for a few weeks longer, when they return to Wheaton and he will continue alone.

WESTERN SOUDAN MISSION AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—Having received contributions through the Cynosure, and letters from friends wishing to know our movements about the Western Soudan Mission, I deem it necessary to write this for their information. The whole arrangement of the work is now in the hands of the Missionary Board of the Wesleyan Methodist church. We have obtained seven missionaries who have offered to start for the field the coming spring. Two of these were formerly students of Wheaton College; one is a graduate of a medical college in Cleveland, Ohio; one is from the Training School in Philadelphia; one a blacksmith from Fillmore, N. Y., and one a farmer from Hillsboro, Penn. We made no appeal for these men who have so willingly joined their lot with us. "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes."

I have had much encouragement in all places that I have visited. I believe God can touch both hearts and purses. My two addresses in Wheaton amounted to $57. I am greatly indebted to our Wheaton friends; may the Lord prosper their efforts.

We have secured the co-operation of all the Wesleyan Methodist conferences, and each has given liberally and according to their abilities. Still we need more means. As some of our friends in the last Congress of Churches promised me their assistance from their congregations, I shall be glad to hear from them now that the work is being started. A contribution forwarded to the Cynosure, or an invitation to lecture and receive donations from their people, will be cordially welcomed. I will be happy to hear from them early, as I have to sail for England on my way to Africa in a few months more, to start our work. Friends sending invitations will please address me care Wesleyan Methodist, 52 and 54 East Onondaga St., Syracuse, New York. Your brother in Christ, J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19, 1887.

It was a singular coincidence that the two sister republics of North America should both be jubilating at the same moment over great events in their history—the United States celebrating the centennial of the Constitution, and Mexico commemorating the anniversary of her independence and the birthday of her present President, Diaz. What more is needed to demonstrate the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, or that the New World, at least, is the permanent abode and the strong, safe guardian of the blessed boon of freedom so gloriously won by the blood and brawn of the fathers of the republic? The great pageant at Philadelphia marks an important milestone in our country's history and progress, that will only be less memorable in the annals of the republic than the celebration of the centennial of the Declaration of Independence. As educators of the people such events are as worthy of consideration as in the light of the patriotic sentiments that hallow them, for, during several weeks past those who are familiar with the circulating literature of our public libraries have observed the great and growing demand for works upon both the history and the Constitution of the United States.

There was an occurrence in the Treasury a day or two since that illustrated the practical working and benefit of true civil service reform—the discovery by paying-teller Gibson of a fraudulent check that had been raised from $2 to $2,450, which had passed unchallenged through the hands of several banks—having been issued two years ago. If this trained expert had been turned out for political reasons, the probability is that the United States Treasurer would be out over $2,000.

The Senate select committee, whose duty it is to investigate the methods of conducting the departmental business of the Government, has received the desired information, together with much other useful and interesting matter, from the Interior and Postoffice Departments. The report shows that there are a little over 9,000 employes of the former department, of which number the Secretary appoints 3,189, the remainder being Presidential appointees; that 94,790 persons are employed in the postal service, divided as follows: 600 are employed in the Postoffice Department proper, 75 are postmasters of the first class, 400 of the second class, 1,884 of the third class, and 52,415 of the fourth class; the railway mail clerks number 4,744; and the inland mail routes 27,264—covering 370,854 miles. The former report makes 460 pages of closely printed matter in octavo form—the latter 412 pages, and both volumes will be very valuable as books of reference.

It is thought that Secretary Bayard desires an Eastern man to fill the vacancy in the office of his First Assistant, and among those prominently discussed for the position is the Hon. Perry Belmont, the young Congressman from New York, who was Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the last Congress; but I hardly think it probable that, great as is the Empire State, it is entitled to a third place—in the Cabinet, I had almost said, though it is nearly as important as that. Such an appointment would be sure to increase the prejudice of the Southern States against the commercial monopoly of New York, which influence is selfish and partial as they believe, and hostile to the growing trade of the Gulf. The lately published interviews of Senator Pomeroy present clearly what are likely to be some effects of this growing complaint in respect to the old parties.

The project to connect the capital with the tomb of Washington by means of a great roadway, to be called Mt. Vernon Avenue, is assuming definite shape—a public meeting having taken all the necessary preliminary steps to put the enterprise on a successful footing, and it is quite probable that the work will be ultimately pushed to completion, as it has excited widespread interest that will materialize in a substantial manner.

It is intimated that President Cleveland's visit to the Western and Southern States will cost him more than $10,000. He has engaged a special train for the entire distance, consisting of an engine, a baggage and supply car and two palace cars. This train will convey him for about forty-five hundred miles in stages divided a follows: Washington to Baltimore, Baltimore to Harrisburg, Harrisburg to Pittsburg, Pittsburg to Indianapolis, Indianapolis to St. Louis, St. Louis to Chicago, Chicago to Milwaukee, Milwaukee to Madison, Madison to St. Paul, St. Paul to Minneapolis, Minneapolis to Omaha, Omaha to Kansas City, Kansas City to Memphis, Memphis to Nashville, Nashville to Atlanta, Atlanta to Montgomery, Montgomery to Morristown, Morristown to Salisbury, Salisbury to Danville, Danville to Washington, total, 4,436 miles. The journey will occupy twenty-two days, and during this time Mr. Cleveland will have to meet a demand for at least fifty speeches. As he is attended by his wife we do not fear such scenes of drunkenness as attended Johnson's swing around the circle, or as were charged to Gen. Grant's account during his first term. Neither must we expect the versatility of Blaine or the good moral sense of Hayes in like circumstances.

NOTICES.

HO! MINNESOTIANS!!

The "Minnesota Christian Association" will meet in convention in Minneapolis, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 4, 5and 6, 1887, in Chestnut Hall.

The convention will open Tuesday evening with an address by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Secretary of the N. C. A.

Rev. C. F. Hawley, lecturer for the Iowa Christian Association, will be present.

If any friend of the cause, man or woman, in Minnesota, Iowa, or Wisconsin, has aught to say on any phase of this great reform, he is hereby invited to be present and speak. Prepare yourselves well enough to speak briefly, and report to the undersigned at the convention.

The afternoon sessions will be devoted to these speeches, the morning sessions to business. The evening sessions will be occupied by brethren Stoddard and Hawley.

The local committee of arrangements, Bro. Elwood Hanson, says that either free or very cheap homes will be provided for all who come and report at his office, 15 Fourth Street, South.

N. B.—Will friendly pastors please announce to their congregations.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE N. H. C. A.

The Eleventh Annual Meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held in Arcanum Hall, No. 939 Elm street, Manchester, October 29, 30, 31, 1887, commencing Saturday at 2 o'clock P. M., and closing Monday evening; entertainment free. Reduced railroad fare expected from the following stations: Rochester, Dover, Newmarket Junction, Portsmouth, North Weare, Laconia, and Concord. Horse cars from depot to hall. Addresses, sermons and essays are expected from the following persons: Rev. J. Blanchard of Illinois, Rev. E. W. Oakes, Manchester, Elders A. Kidder, C. L. Baker, Isaac Hyatt, S. C. Kimball, Mrs. C. W. Bixby, Miss Annie M. Ray, Miss E. E. Flagg, and Miss I. D. Haines, evangelist of Maine. Miss Haines will preach the annual sermon and direct the devotional services. Holiness, Divine Healing, the Near Coming of our Lord, Temperance, the Evils of Organized Secrecy, and other important topics will be prayerfully considered, and explained by consecrated speakers. We look for a large attendance and a special blessing from the Lord. Isolated toilers in the vineyard need the help and encouragement which such meetings afford. Let us plan to attend, and pray for the blessing we so much need.

S. C. KIMBALL, Sec'y N. H. C. A.

Who will preach a revival among the Episcopalians of New York and turn their thoughts away from their cathedral project? The idea of spending $10,000,000 in such a building in this day of missions and charities is like giving up our railroads for sedan chairs and the saddle. A church professing to be of Christ, that has no nobler work, is nigh to the cursings which of old fell in woes from the lips of the prophets. A thousand years ago men knew no better than to spend themselves, by generations, upon such buildings, attractive and noble to be sure, but for what value to those who look for the coming of the Lord?

—Mrs. Angie F. Newman, at Lincoln, Neb., Friday, was unanimously elected a delegate to the General Conference of the M. E. church, to be held at Brooklyn, N. Y., next May. She is the first lady on whom that honor has been conferred.

One of the most spiritually minded Christians whom we have ever known was in the habit of saying: "I am willing to be governed by God's laws, and to be saved by his grace." This is a most excellent statement of the condition of a truly Christian heart.

All the American missions in Burmah have incorporated total abstinence in their work.

THE HOME.

FOOTPRINTS OF JESUS.

Look not for the Saviour's footprints
Near the royal palace gate;
Seek them not in halls of grandeur,
Gilded domes, and regal state;
Seek them not in grand cathedrals,
Nor in learning's temple fair,
Where proud piety, on cushions,
Seeks repose from every care.

Seek them by the humble dwelling,
Seek them by the widow's cot,
Seek them in the prison dungeons,
Where misfortune mourns her lot
Down beneath the lowest strata
Of degraded human woe,
Marked with blood, and wet with teardrops,
Trace them onward as they go!

Here he paused to feed the hungry,
Here forgave a woman's sin;
Here a blind man's eyes were opened,
Here the lame came bounding in;
Here in gory perspiration
Wept o'er Juda's holy hill;
Here poured out his blood and Spirit
To redeem—"Whoever will!"

There is not one human being Sunk so low in dark despair,
But beneath its tears and anguish,
Jesus left his footprints there.
And if I would be a Christian,
I must follow where he led;
Raise the fallen, clothe the naked,
Cause the hungry to be fed.

Fearing no contamination,
Swerving not for scorn or pride,
Where a soul may yet be ransomed,
If the labor be applied;
Down beneath all human wanderings,
Down beneath all woe and care,
There I'll find my Saviour's footprints,
Fresh as when he placed them there.

Jesus, I will trace thy pathway
Down among the lost of earth,
And rehearse the glad, glad tidings
Of thy boundless love and worth;
I have not the gift of healing,
I may not forgive their sins,
I can point them to thy kingdom,
Bid them cleanse, and enter in.

SWEETNESS IN THE HOME.

BY REV. H. A. DAY.

Probably one of the most difficult places in which to exemplify the Christian religion "day in and day out," as the expression goes, is in the home life, with its multitudinous vexations and annoyances. It may not be so in every instance. There may be some who have their severest tests entirely outside of home life. But we are speaking now of the everyday troubles and trials which come to all who have a place they call home; not of the occasional and very severe tests which come in business affairs, or in contact with society outside of the home. All persons have these bitter outside trials and perplexities, and under those peculiar circumstances home becomes an asylum of refuge and peace. But is it not true that there is no home in which there is not, every day, more or less friction in the running of its machinery, more or less grating among the cogs and pinions, which go to make the home the effectual working power that it is? Blessed be that person, whether it be father, with his mind and hand in active exercise for the well-being of his family, or mother, with anxious face and loving heart, or brother or sister, with all their brotherly or sisterly feeling for each other, and their undying love for father and mother. Blessed, thrice blessed, I say, be that one who can and does, each day, under every circumstance, and to every one in that home, bear a constant love, and preserve a cheerful demeanor, and exercise a constant patience, remaining unmoved, and preserving a steady sweetness under the most trying circumstances. And blessed they are. From such a home influence, a child thrown out upon the world will not go far astray. A demon could not sin very deeply trained in such an atmosphere, without an effort.

We are well aware that the picture, as presented here, is drawn in very bright colors. But are such homes impossibilities? Can we not, at least, come a little nearer to this ideal home? How touching are the words of the song, "There's no place like home." And of such a home as is here presented we may say, there is no better, no grander, no pleasanter, no more glorious place this side of heaven self. We are painfully aware of the multitude of real or imaginary hindrances which will throng the mind at this point. But while one may present this barrier, and another that, as obstacles in our way, let us ever remember the abounding grace of God, and the power of a trained will, as forces in the accomplishment of this grand work in all our homes. Who can not now see some place where, in the future, a great advance can be made in making our individual homes more healthful, more pleasant, more cheerful, and more glorious than heretofore. Smooth out that frown, wipe away those wrinkles, take off that sad expression, and plant in its place with God's help a smile. Choke back that harsh expression, and speak a word of cheer.

In how many ways may we improve our homes by care in what is generally termed "little things." It may cost an effort. When a feeling of irritation comes over us, it will be by a mighty effort, not unaided by the grace of God, to hold it back from being manifested in any degree in the home. Yet it will be best. Of all places the home circle will receive the greatest blessing by this restraint, and it is equally true, probably, that there is no place where indulgence in an irritation of temper would do more real harm than at home. For Jesus' sake, and for our family's sake, and for the whole world's sake, let us keep the home sweet. Solomon said: "It is better to dwell in a corner of the housetop, than with a brawling woman in a wide house." Let us think this matter over as individuals, and begin at once with ourselves, to sweeten and beautify our homes.

Williamston, Mich.

FAMILY RELIGION.

We must not be allowed to forget that the family is the school and nurture of piety; that the young lives born in the family are to be molded by home influence for Christ; that if we are not religious at home, we are not religious anywhere.

The influence of the Christian should be positively pious—dubiety in religion is not only feeble, but positively vicious. The religious life which is uncertain and tepid has no efficacy, like the salt which has lost its savor—tasteless and hurtful. Happy and sunny the Christian home-life should be, but the tincture and colorings of strong religious principle should tinge and blend with all its rays of happiness. The chief interest, the reigning purpose of the home should be religion, not in drapery or cypress, but in sunlight and fragrance; the light coming from the Son of Righteousness, the fragrance distilled from the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley.

To make up this religious home influence the parents must be distinctly religious. This is the main element. Religion in them should be authoritative and conspicuous—not in name but in reality. Religion must be to them a real thing, a thing of experience, practice and of transcendent importance; first in importance, in interest and obligation. With them it must be more than religion in the way of church membership, church activity, church devotion—a mere tincture of Christ and the world and business in solid form. Parents must have much of trueness to God, not only for themselves, but of profound and ceaseless interest that their children should have Christ formed within them. One of the crying needs of the day is religious fathers and mothers—fathers who will not sell their sons to mammon, mothers who prefer God for their daughters to the world; parents who have a conscience, and a purpose, and a business, to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

The Christian home must be a training school, not only by the silent forces of example and faith, but positive instruction, instilling and fixing the facts and truths of religion in the memory and hearts of the children, here a little and there a little, by all arts and methods, until the young minds are filled and impregnated with revealed truth—that it may grow with their growth and strengthen with their strength. This soil is not filled with the heavenly seed by chance; there must be application and set purpose; occasions must be sought and made; the lessons must be put in the young mind; 'tis their salvation. Time, patience, conviction, application, are requisite to implant the imperishable seed which liveth and abideth forever in young hearts. The world, the flesh, and the devil are sowing their seed with sly and diligent hands by day and by night. Shall we not be as earnest to save as they are to ruin? as industrious for heaven as they are for hell?

A well-selected library is helpful in this training; one book helps to form and shape character; one book had much to do with shaping the religious characters of John Bunyan and John Wesley. Many a young mind has received its virtuous impulses from a good book. Parents are guilty of a grievous wrong who do not have some good books for their children. They pre-occupy, keep out bad tenants, save from idleness, form taste, instruct and inspire. A library is a great help in the religious training of a family.

Family worship is a potent agent in impressing religiously the home—the stated season, the reading and singing, the prayer, are all disciplinary and sanctifying. The worship should be an institution night and morning; attended by all, strictly enjoined, no excuses allowed; performed in the spirit of Christ, not loosely, irregularly, hastily, but with promptness, regularity and devotion. The servants should be present; these are shamefully neglected.

Our homes must become more distinctly schools for Christ, not schools to nurture family pride—to promote worldliness; but sanctuaries into which the children are born with the sweet, fresh air of a joyous holiness pressing in upon their young lives at every pore, as gentle, as light, as ponderous and penetrating as the air—as attractive, as beautiful, as searching as the light. Our children for Christ! let this be the motto, the inspiration, the aim, the end of every home.—Southern Advocate.

HOME HAPPINESS.

Probably nineteen-twentieths of the happiness you will ever have you will get at home. The independence that comes to a man when his work is over, and he feels that he has run out of the storm into the quiet harbor of home, where he can rest in peace with his family, is something real. It does not make much difference whether you own your house, or have one little room in that house, you can make that litile room a true home to you. You can people it with such moods, you can turn to it with such sweet fancies, that it will be fairly luminous with their presence, and will be to you the very perfection of a home. Against this home none of you should ever transgress. You should always treat each other with courtesy. It is often not so difficult to love a person as it is to be courteous to him. Courtesy is of greater value and a more royal grace than some people seem to think. If you will but be courteous to each other you will soon learn to love each other more wisely, profoundly, not to say lastingly, than you ever did before.—Selected.

THE TRUEST HOMES.

The truest homes are often in houses not especially well kept, according to the ideas of the very fastidious, where the comfort and happiness of the inmates rather than the preservation of the furniture are first considered. They are not like the home where the father and sons were obliged to always come in by the kitchen door, and then had to take off their boots and walk in their stocking feet. That home is a thing of the past; the sons did not stay any longer than they could help under that roof.—Atlanta Constitution.

DISHONESTY BEGINS AT HOME.

The crying sin of the day is dishonesty. One hears so much of it in public life; but as we have said, there is too much of it altogether in private life. And its cause is to be found in the want of self-control in the indulgence of tastes and appetites. Reckless, extravagant living is at the bottom of it all. If this living had any true foundation in any hearty desire for any desirable things, there would be more hope of amendment. But when one comes to see what things ill-gotten gains are spent upon, the outlook is a sad one. Dress, display, amusement, costly things bought just because they are costly; wealth won evilly, merely that it may be wasted foolishly; these are the signs of a time which is not a pleasant time to contemplate. If a man loves any one thing, say rare books, or pictures, or objects of art of any kind, or music or science, so well that for the sake of the one thing in which he would be rich, he is willing to be poor in every thing else, no matter though his choice be an unwise one according to the best standards of choice, he will yet have a motive which will help to keep him upright. But for those who love none of these things, but simply desire them because it is the habit of the time; because like pampered children they must needs cry for whatsoever they see just out of their reach, for them is needed the wholesome self-discipline which shall teach them to let alone whatever is not theirs.

And the beginning of this self-discipline is in the home. Parents must teach their boys and girls the great lesson of doing without whatever cannot be fitly theirs. There need be no niggardly restraint, but in some way the first lesson for childhood should be that of earning its pleasure. To get whatever it craves as soon as it asks for it, is the worst training a child can have.—Churchman.

THE STORY OF A WEEK.

Little battles thou hast won;
Little masteries achieved;
Little wants with care relieved;
Little words in love expressed;
Little wrongs at once confessed;
Little favors kindly done;
Little toils thou didst not shun;
Little graces meekly worn;
Little slights with patience borne;—
These shall crown thy pillowed head,
Holy light upon thee shed;
These are treasures that shall rise
Far beyond the smiling skies.

HOW BESS MANAGED TOM.

Tom's sister Nell was pretty, and being a year older than Tom, wanted to show her authority over him. Tom was rough and awkward, and just at the age when a boy resents all meddling with his "rights." He would put his hands in his pockets, his chair on Nell's dress, and his feet on the window-sill. Of course they often quarreled.

"For pity's sake, Tom, do take your hands out of your pockets," Nell would say in her most vexing manner.

"What are pockets for, I'd like to know, if not to put one's hands in?" And Tom would whistle and march off.

"Tom, I don't believe you've combed your hair for a week!"

"Well, what's the use? It would be all roughed up again in less than an hour."

"I do wish, Tom, you would take your great boots off from the window-sill!"

"Oh, don't bother me, I'm reading," Tom would say, and the boots refused to stir an inch, which, of course, was very naughty. And so it would go on from morning till night.

But little Bess had a different way with somewhat stubborn Tom. Bess seemed to understand that coaxing was better than driving; and sometimes when he sat with both hands in his pockets, she, with a book or picture, would nestle down beside him, and almost before he knew it, one hand would be patting her curls, while the other turned the leaves or held the pictures. If she chanced to see his feet on the window-sill, she would say,—

"Just try my ottomon, Tom, dear, and see how comfortable it is to the feet;" and though Tom occasionally growled in a "good-natured way about its being too low, the boots always came down. Whenever his hair looked rough, she would steal behind him and smooth it out in a way Tom liked so well that it was a temptation to let it go rough, just for the pleasure of having her comb it. Yet, for the next three days at least, he would take special pains to keep every hair in its place simply to please little Bess.

As they grew older, Bess, in the same quiet, loving way, helped him to grow wise and manly. If she had an interesting book, she always wanted Tom to enjoy it with her; if she were going to call on any of her young friends, Tom was always invited to go with her.

"I can't understand," said lady Nell, "why you should always want that boy forever at your heels. He's rough and awkward as a bear."

"Some bears are as gentle as kittens," said Bess, slipping her arm through his, with a loving hug, while the "bear" felt a great warm glow at his heart as he walked away with Bess, and determined to try harder to be "gentle as a kitten," for her sake.—The Advance.

AN ELEPHANT'S TRICK.

The elephant of the Jardin des Plantes, at Paris, used to play his visitors a trick which could not have been thought of but by an animal of much intelligence. His house opened upon an enclosure called the elephant's park, containing a pond, in which he would lay himself under the water, concealing every part of him except the very end of his trunk—a mere speck that would hardly be noticed by a stranger to the animal's habits. A crowd would often assemble around the enclosure, and, not seeing him in it, would watch in expectation that he would soon issue from the house. But, while they were gazing about, a copious sprinkling of water would fall upon them; and ladies and gentlemen, with their fine bonnets and coats, would run for shelter under the tree, looking up at the clear sky, and wondering whence such a shower could come. Immediately afterward, however, they would see the elephant rising slowly from his bath, evincing, as it seemed, an awkward joy at the trick he had played.

In the course of time his amusement became generally known, and the moment the water began to rise from his trunk, the spectators would take flight, at which he appeared exceedingly delighted, getting up as fast as he could to see the bustle he had caused.

Strange as it may seem, a huge animal like the elephant has a ridiculous fear of certain small objects. The keeper of the Zo-ological Garden in Philadelphia says that he has seen an elephant nearly scared into a fit at the sight of a mouse. And one warm day, for the amusement of the spectators, a dozen inflated bladders were thrown into the pond when the animals went in to swim. At first they were greatly frightened. Then Empress struck at one with her trunk, and when it bounded into the air, both she and her companion trumpeted and scrambled out of the pond. Finally, she gently fished one of the bladders out of the water and kicked at it with her hind feet. No serious results following, the sport was continued until Empress happened to step on the bladder. It exploded with a loud report, and the elephants scampered home.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DIRECT ROUTE.

"You can't make a man sober by act of Parliament." So they said. I thought it over. It didn't seem to me a self-evident proposition.

"Why not?" said I. Then came a crusher.

"You might as well try to cure the toothache by act of Parliament."

This made me reflect. I had been troubled with the toothache; worried by it; maddened by it; kept off work, my meals, my happiness by it. My health was failing in consequence. My temper was gone. My mind was going. I was invited to try various remedies.

"Stop it," said some.

"But how?" I inquired.

"Fill the tooth with gold," they explained. The tooth was thus primed, but the toothache went on.

"Clear it out," said others.

"How—how?" was my agonized exclamation.

"Cleanse the blessed thing out," they told me. I did. I got it inspected, illuminated, syringed, fumigated, made beautiful with camphorated chalk, bath brick, tale powder, and floriline. No good.

"Give it a rest on Sunday," said a clerical friend. I tried this. Even on Sundays there were some bona fide twinges; on Monday it was a bad as ever. What was I to do?

"Be extra careful what you let into it," said a civic functionary. Nothing could exceed my care. Three magistrates certified the good, harmless, excellent character of all I put into my tooth. I felt safe. Not for long. I soon felt sold. The results were disappointing, distressing, excrutiating. Somehow the certified application lost its virtue the moment it got inside.

"Hold a drink of water in your mouth and sit on the fire till it boils," urged a knowing one. I began to think this was the only remedy. At last I took counsel of a fanatic.

"Try the parliamentary cure," said he.

"What's that?" said I.

"Have the tooth out; a short act will do it." This seemed drastic. It would leave a gap in my social system. I should miss an old friend. The tooth had a vested interest. I took courage.

"Let the operation cost what it may, it must come," I cried. So I summoned the dentist.

"I am ready for the parliamentary cure," said I.

It took a strong pull. It was done. The tooth was gone. So was the toothache. I was happy.

Once more I reflected. Extraction cures toothache. I had never realized this before. No tooth, no toothache. This is strange, but true. And yet you can't make a man sober by act of Parliament?

Let us see. No tooth, no toothache. Granted. No drink traffic, no drink. Eh, what! Is that a fact? No drink traffic, no drink? I never thought of that. No drink, no drunkenness. I see. A mule with no hind legs doesn't kick. He is quiet. If a man can get nothing to drink, he doesn't drink. He is sober. An act of Parliament can make him so. By white-washing the public house? Not quite. Sanctifying it on Sundays, in big places only? What, then, do you want Parliament to enact? Prohibition.—Irish Temperance League Journal.

A LETTER FROM JEFF DAVIS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 14.—[Special.]—To-morrow's papers will contain an open letter from Jefferson Davis to Bishop Charles B. Galloway of the Methodist church South. The Confederate chieftain is very severe in his handling of the prohibition bishop. He says: "I grieve that a dignitary of the Methodist church South should have left the pulpit and Bible to mount the political rostrum and plead the law of prohibitionism, the substitution of force for free-will moral responsibilities, the obligation to do unto others as we would be done by, and the brotherly love taught by the meek and lowly Jesus whom we adore. In this I see the forbidden union of church and state, and my grief is real and relates to both. This reply, it may be proper here to remark, is not made to you in your character of a dignitary of the church, but in that which for that occasion you have assumed—as a political partisan. I regret that you did not acknowledge that your strictures were appropriate to what others had said or done, and were not justified by the text of my letter for which you arraign me."

One hundred and eighty million dollars' worth of five-cent cigars were smoked in this country last year, and still thousands cry hard times.

Eighteen thousand dollars is an enormous price to pay for a small peach-blow vase, that's a fact; but look at the man who squanders $30,000 on the flowing bowl, and all he has to show for it is a peach-blow nose, not one-fourth the size of the vase aforesaid.

Texas may vote for whisky by 100,000 majority, but it will not fatten their starving cattle or bring peace into Texas homes. Texas may not like "to go dry," but wetting down with whisky by such a majority will keep thousands of the best class of people from making the State their home. Men and women who raise families prefer school-houses to saloons.—Inter Ocean.

In the Supreme Court at Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 10, the opinion was filed in the case of Pearson and Linghran against the International Distillery, in which the lower courts of this county held that the sale of intoxicating liquors for export for general purposes was illegal, and closed the distillery as a nuisance. The court affirms this decision.

The people of Atlanta, Ga., do not seem to have become dissatisfied with their prohibition ordinance, though there are those who would have us believe that all kinds of evils resulted therefrom. A few days ago an election for judge in a place of him who has been foremost and most thorough in the execution of the law, resulted in his re-election by a large majority. The people want the law enforced, and are ready to sustain the man who does most for its enforcement.

Dalton county, Ga., is one of many counties in the South that have freed themselves from the curse of alcohol. Before prohibition was secured the Superior Court sat twice a year, and four or five weeks at each session at a cost of $7,560 per annum. Since prohibition it takes but two weeks to dispatch all the business of the court, and the attendant expense is $1,980. Before prohibition the jail fees averaged over $150 per month; now they are less than $25 per month, and for months the jail has been empty.

A volume of interesting statistics in regard to the liquor traffic in the United States is contained in a recent report from the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington. In round numbers the consumption of distilled spirits, domestic and imported, in this country is shown to have increased from 43,000,000 gallons in 1840 to 72,000,000 in 1886; of wines, from 4,800,000 gallons to 22,000,000; and of malt liquors, from 23,000,000 to 642,000,000. A statement made by the editor of the American Grocer is given which sets forth, among other things, that the present average expenditure in this country per annum for malt and spirituous liquors and beer at retail is $700,000,000. The drinking population is estimated to be (in 1886) 14,925,417, making the average expenditure per capita $45.90. On the same authority it is shown by tables, covering the five years from 1882 to 1886, inclusive, that the consumption of spirits is decreasing while that of beer is increasing, and that there is a reduced use of wine as a beverage. It is added that the wholesale cost of the liquors for which the retailers receive $700,000,000 is not more than $300,000,000, leaving 400,000,000 as the retailers' share of profits. A statement is made to the effect that only ten per cent of the distilled spirits consumed in this country are used for medicine and manufacturing purposes, ninety per cent being used as a beverage.—N. Y. Observer.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Veiled Prophets' parade at St. Louis this year will represent prominent events and scenes taken from the Bible. This has stirred up a good deal of feeling among the Protestant ministers, and Rev. Dr. Nichols has made a somewhat sweeping condemnation of the whole affair from his pulpit. He took special exception to the invitation to the ball, which is contained in a miniature representation of the ark of the covenant and is written side by side with the Ten Commandments. He thought this a sacrilegious blunder and a shocking prostitution of things sacred. He especially denounced the floats which will appear, one representing Moses receiving the law and the other the transfiguration of Elijah. Several other ministers sustain Dr. Nichols, and the matter has produced something of a sensation, but it is said on the authority of prominent prophets that the parade will not be changed, and that no floats will be taken from the procession.

—At the Lutheran General Council meeting in Greenville, Penn., the report of the Swedish home missionaries was heard with much interest. The large and important mission of Pastor Telleen on Mission Street, between Eighth and Ninth, has, after much struggle on his part, been made self-supporting. There has been great pressure of the lodge against Pastor Telleen's work, and his success is very encouraging.

—The statistical report of the General Synod of the Lutheran church shows the body to be composed of twenty-three synods, 1,246 churches, 134,710 communicant members, 1,248 Sunday-schools with 129,370 scholars; its total benevolence amounted during the last year to $146,312.98. The Augustana Synod of Swedish churches is connected with this body, and reports some 70,000 members.

—At the thirty-third convention of this General Synod at Omaha, June 1–13, 1887, they adopted the following: "Resolved, That the right, and therefore the wisest and most efficient method in dealing with the traffic in alcoholic liquors for drinking purposes, is its suppression, and that we therefore also urge those who comprise the church which we represent to endeavor to secure in every State the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

—The committee of the Evangelical Missionary Society of Paris has declined the invitation of the Government to send missionaries to Madagascar. It finds the field already occupied by the London Society, and will not introduce division into it. Hence it answers, that French Evangelical missionaries will be sent to Madagascar only when the churches there invite them.

—The Bremen Mission on the Slave coast returned more than a hundred baptisms of natives during 1886, sixty-nine of which were of adults. In the ten years from 1876 to 1886 the number of Christians has risen from 175 to 556. The Directory of the Deaconesses' House at Hamburg has decided to send deaconesses to this mission.

—Reports from the Western Indiana yearly meeting of Friends at Plainfield, state that action was taken on the use of tobacco by members, and also against the secret orders. The General Conference of Friends called to meet in Richmond, Indiana, gathered last Friday. Among the delegates is Calvin W. Pritchard, editor of the Christian Worker of this city, and member of the N. C. A. Board.

—The bishop's address at the opening of the nineteenth General Conference of the Evangelical Association, recently in session at Buffalo, N. Y., contains the following interesting statistics: Membership, 138,130; churches, 1,839; Sunday-schools, 2,306; scholars, 182,037. The receipts of the missionary society increased in the past four years $99,978.43, the total receipts for the last quadrennium being $484,065.10, as against $384,086.67 for the four years ending in 1883. The debt of the society amounts to $44,000. The publishing house of the denomination is at Cleveland, Ohio, and is reported to be worth $500,000. It has no debt.

—The fortieth anniversary of the settlement of Hollanders at Pella, Iowa, was celebrated on August 31st, and was a grand success. Rev. Wm. Moerdyk, well known for his efforts to instruct the Hollanders upon the lodge, is pastor here. Henry Hospers, Esq., of Orange City, Iowa, among others, delivered an eloquent address; Rev. E. Winter, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who was for eighteen years pastor of the First Church of Pella, sent a letter of congratulation; J. Van 't Lindenhout, of the orphanage at Neerbosch, Netherlands, sent a cablegram of kind wishes. There are six Reformed churches in the settlement of Pella. From this settlement the colony of Hollanders in Sioux county, Iowa, went out, where they have nine churches. From Sioux county, Iowa, went forth the colony of Douglas county, Dakota, where they have two churches.

—Dr. R. R. Meredith of Boston, who succeeds Dr. Pentecost in the pastorate of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn, is a native of Ireland, was educated in this country, was a captain in the war, and was in the Methodist ministry until 1878, when he accepted a call to the Phillips Congregational church of Boston, which he left in 1883 for the pastorate of the Union church in the same city. He received a salary of $7,000 from this church and $2,500 from his famous Bible class. His salary in Brooklyn will be $7,000.

—The colored Baptists of Georgia will celebrate in June, 1888, the centenary of the founding of their first church, January 20, 1787, in that State. The celebration is postponed till June in order, we suppose, that it may be held in a tent. It is to last two weeks, and will take place in Savannah. A historical volume is to be issued. There are, as the result of the century's work, 1,400 colored Baptist churches, 500 ministers, 2,000 licentiates, and 160,000 members.

—The immigration of Finns has been unusually large the past summer. They have settled in various places in New England, the West and the Northwest. A new Finnish church (Lutheran) was recently dedicated for these people in Ishpeming, Mich. At the dedicatory service selections of Scripture were read in Finnish, Norwegian, Swedish, German, English and Syrio-Chaldaic. The sermon was in English.

—William Taylor, who is determined to establish a line of mission posts clear across Africa, from west to east, has established a new line of missions extending seventy miles from the coast on the Cavalla River. They are seventeen in number, and the principal ones are at Eulileky, Yawki, Beaboo; Tobo, Tatepa, Gerrobo, Wamleka, Nahleky, Baraka, Garaway, and Grand Sess. White men and women are asked by the natives as teachers in preference to natives. He has negotiated with the inland kings and chiefs for the establishment of industrial schools and missions along the banks of this river, and calls for workers to aid him. To each missionary and his wife a good-sized dwelling, ground and agricultural implements will be given. The missionaries have been well received, and many requests for missions have been set aside for want of workers.

—The Thirty-fourth annual report of the Board Missions of the American branch of the United Brethren in Christ (Moravians), shows that in 1886 more than $18,000 was expended on missions at home and in Africa and Europe. The collections were greater than in the year before, and an effort is to be made to raise $60,000 during the present year. Among the gifts in 1886 was one of $5,000 from Mr. Rufus Clark of Denver, Colorado, to build a theological training school at Shaingay, in Africa, to be named after him and his wife. The school was opened last February with three students, besides five boys in the primary department. The African work has proceeded to the satisfaction of the secretary, the net increase in members at the sixteen stations having been 1,311 for the year making 3,940 in all. As compared with the results reported by the missionary societies of far more numerous communions, these are certainly very remarkable.

—On the 7th of August, in Ahuacuatilan, State of Guerrero, Mexico, Rev. Abraham Gomez, Miguel Cipriano and the wife of Felipe Zaragoza, all Presbyterian missionaries, were cruelly murdered by a Roman Catholic mob, at the instigation of a rabid priest, and with the tacit permission of the authorities.

—During the eight years closing March 1, 1887, the American Sabbath-school Union established 173 Sabbath-schools in the Indian Territory, containing 973 teachers and 6,931 scholars. One missionary reports his work last year as having been among eleven tribes, speaking as many different dialects; namely, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Pottawotomies, Caddoes, Wichitas, Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches.

—The Spanish governor came to Ponape, the largest of the Canary Islands, last March with fifty soldiers, six priests, and twenty-five convicts, and almost immediately began to encroach upon the premises and interfere with the missionrry work. Mr. Doane, American Missionary, after several ineffectual interviews, sent him a written protest complaining of this action, and describing it as arbitrary. At this the governor took offense, arrested Doane, and put him in close confinement on board a Spanish man-of-war in the harbor. All this was within a month of the arrival of the Spaniards. After three days the governor came to Mr. Doane, and, without the form of a trial, sentenced him to fifteen days' imprisonment because of the protest. At the end of fifteen days the governor informed him that he was to remain in confinement on other charges, but did not state what they were. For six weeks the governor paid no attention to the inquiries of Mr. Doane or of his American associates on the island as to the cause of such treatment. Then he sent word to Mr. Doane that within three days he was to be sent to Manilla, 2,000 miles away, to be tried, but gave him no opportunity to look after his personal property on shore, to find witnesses, or to confer with his associates. Dr. Smith, the Secretary of the American Board, says: "It seems this is Spanish justice to an American citizen. But this fact, with other things that have happened since the Spanish came to Ponape, the closing of some of the churches, and of all but one of the fifteen or twenty schools on the island, the silencing of some of the native preachers, the stealing and abuse of the native girls, the free flow of intoxicants, and we begin to see what the Spanish occupation of the Caroline Islands means for Christianity and civilization there."

LITERATURE.

ENTERING ON LIFE. A book for young men. By Cunningham Giekie, D. D., author of the "Life and Words of Christ," "Hours with the Bible," etc. Pp. 224. Price 40 cts. John B. Alden, New York.

It is long since we have taken up a volume dedicated to young men and noted with such pleasure its purpose and execution. Dr. Giekie is one of the very ablest writers on Bible history, and naturally he has put the chapter on Christianity in the very center of the volume. Chapters on "Youth," "Character," "Companions," "Success," lead up to it; and the titles "Helps," "Reading," "Dreams," "Farewell" follow. Unlike some American volumes, attractively written yet of little depth and merit, this volume does not boast that it gives the rules for success in life; yet it gives them most reliably. The style is peculiar and a study. It is rare to find a work of such epigrammatic character. Each sentence may be taken out of its setting and studied like an axiom. In the chapter on "Character" we read:

"Character, if well-nigh alone, still commands our respect and love, in spite of many defects or weaknesses. Intellect, like ice, is colorless; no one has more of it than the devil. Power, eloquence, exact morals, so far as the world sees, knowledge, and Ahithophel's wisdom, may dazzle or awe, but may after all count for little in our estimate of their possessors; but goodness has our homage and our hearts. It makes up for many wants. All the world loves my Uncle Toby; and what is it that makes us reverence little children? The image of God is the same whatever reflects it, and nothing can make up for its absence.

"A good name is one of the few honors which all men alike desire. Flattery cannot court a monarch with anything beyond it, and the humblest think themselves still rich if they retain it. Hypocrisy is the homage that worthlessness pays it. Vice makes a mask of the skin of Virtue, and whitens its sepulchres laboriously. There is no sin but seeks to cheat the world by an alias, and hardly a sinner who does not cheat himself by apologies and mitigations. We are all saints by daylight and in public. Men who seem insensible to shame in youth, often affect severity in later life; meanness often gives way in age to the love of praise, and seeks, if not sooner, at least in dying, to gain the poor consolation of a posthumous character.

The book is full of beauties and excellencies. We most heartily recommend our young readers to forego some trifling luxury and buy this book. Read it again and again.

In the October number of Scribner's Magazine Professor N. S. Shaler contributes another paper in his series relating to the surface of the earth and allied topics entitled "Caverns and Cavern Life." Professor Shaler describes the various groups of caverns, clearly explaining how each variety has been produced. He also gives some useful hints about explorations, and discusses the modifications of animal structure produced by living in caves. The many illustrations show picturesque views of noted caverns, grottos, lava caves, and sea chasms. The number contains a timely and thoughtful paper on "Municipal Governments," by Gamaliel Bradford, which traces the causes of existing evils in the government of our cities, and suggests some remedies. "The Paris School of Fine Arts" is the most richly illustrated article; and a paper describing the additions which are being all the while unconsciously made to our colloquial language from the ranchmen's dialect closes the number.

LODGE NOTES.

The grand session of the SelectKnights Ancient Order United Workmen met in Springfield, Ill. A "military" bill was adopted by a majority of three votes after a heated debate. It provides that the entire military authority shall be vested in the Supreme Legion.

A meeting under the auspices of the Sons of Ireland, a new dynamite society, was held at Cooper Union Sept. 21. About 400 people were present. Violent speeches were made by Professor Mezzeroff, the Russian nihilist, and others, and an address was circulated declaring constitutional agitation and appealing for funds to support Mezzeroff's Dynamite College, whose object is to prepare young Irishmen to free Ireland by blowing up London and other English cities.

The Supreme Legion of the A. O. U. W. of the world convened in biennial session in Knights of Pythias hall, St. Paul. This body represents the military branch of the order of United Workmen, and extends over the greater part of the United States and Canada. All members of this branch of the order are eligible to sit in the deliberations of the body, though the business is transacted by the Supreme Legion proper, which consists of the supreme officers. During the year the order has been extended into Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, Tennessee, and Florida. The twenty-three new legions added 539 members. The total number of legions July, 1887, was 473. The total membership was 12,317.

The Chinese residents of San Francisco, Cal., had a remarkable parade Friday in honor of their idol, Tan Wong, recently brought from China The parade was of oriental magnificence, but was confined to the streets and alleys of Chinatown. The costumes, banners and oriental weapons incident to the march were brought from China especially for this occasion. There were 1,000 Chinamen and numerous Chinese women on richly caparisoned horses in line. The women wore long silken gowns, and at their side walked attendants, holding high over their heads banners of gold. The men in the procession carried antique war implements, long gilt maces elaborately carved, and swords or spears, around whose points were coiled gilt lizards, snakes and flaming dragons. A number of tall banners that floated twenty feet in the air preceded another heavily armed battalion of Celestials attired in brightest yellow and carrying weapons, no two of which were alike. Immediately preceding the mighty Joss, Tan Wong, was a band of musicians sounding huge gongs and kettle drums, while a body of cannoniers kept up a constant fusilade of fire crackers. Twelve worshipers clad in light yellow carried Tan Wong in a huge chair. About the idol and behind trod attendant priests in long black satin robes. They were accompanied by bearers, whose censers were hung from the ends of long red poles. Following Tan Wong was a dragon 175 feet long, the most gorgeous ever seen in America. This was supported by sixty worshipers. The monster opened its mouth, writhed its body, and, by appliances known only to Chinese, kept up an appearance of life. The idol was placed in the joss house today to be worshiped.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

FARM NOTES.

CARE IN FEEDING HORSES.

The study of the subject of food elements, and their relation to the animal system has been greatly neglected. Of late years science has been doing much in this line of work, but there is a great deal to be done yet. Although the animal body is so complex in structure, yet chemistry has divided it in a general way into nitrogenous, non-nitrogenous and mineral matters. Since these substances are continually being destroyed in the body in forming materials for growth, in generating heat and in producing force, it is necessary that the animal should receive substances similar to those destroyed, so that these may be assimilated by the tissues and fluids of the body to replace those lost and to enable the vital actions to continue.

Relatively to size, the horse has a smaller stomach than any other of our domestic animals. This makes it necessary that he must feed frequently, digest promptly, and have a rich material in a small bulk, thus adapting him especially to perform rapid work. In a state of nature he is under no necessity of eating too much at any one time, but replenishes the stomach lightly and at frequent intervals throughout the day. There is no overloading, nor overtasking the organ, and no extreme exertion upon a full stomach which so often takes place in the domesticated condition. Even in domestication a horse will maintain excellent health on the natural grasses, fresh or made into hay; but when he is placed under the saddle or in the harness and subjected to work, we take him from his natural state and the same feeding will not longer meet the demands of the system.—American Agriculturist.

BE KIND TO YOUR HORSE.

Kindness with the family horse is of the utmost importance. Always cultivate an acquaintance, and be on social and friendly terms with him. If he is tired and worn out it is astonishing how these little attentions will encourage and cheer him up. When not in use he should be given a reasonable amount of daily exercise. No animal will do well without exercise. It promotes a good action of their limbs, and assists digestion. The harness should be made to fit, thus avoiding chafes and bruises. In cold weather the lips and tongue of the horse may be made very sore by contact with the frozen bit. The bit should always be warmed before being placed in the horse's mouth. Flies are very annoying to horses, and the use of the net or some preparation that will keep flies away is well repaid.

Care in driving is of the greatest importance. How often do we see an animal driven until wet with perspiration and dotted with foam standing without blanket or protection of any kind from the cold northern winds. When in such condition, he evidently suffers intensely; besides the danger of contracting diseases, from which he will never recover. If any law on our statute book should be more rigidly enforced than another, it is the one against fast driving. When in use blankets should always be provided in cold weather, so that they will dry without chilling. Protect them from drafts when warm, and either rub down or let them stand in a stable where cold air cannot strike them.—American Agriculturist.

A HORSE THAT WEARS GOGGLES.

A horse with goggles was one of the attractions of the Clinton Square market place Saturday afternoon. The Manlius farmer who owned him said he discovered recently that the animal was near-sighted, and an oculist took the necessary measurements, and sending to New York, had a pair of concave spectacles made expressly for Dobbin. When the farmer tried them for the first time the horse appeared to be startled, but recovering from his surprise manifested every symptom of pleasure. They are made so as to be firmly fastened in the headstall, and can not be worn without that piece of harness. "When I turn him out to pasture," said the farmer, "he feels uneasy and uncomfortable without his goggles, and last Sunday he hung around the barn and whinnied so plaintive like that I took out the bit and put the headstall and goggles on him, and he was so glad that he rubbed my shoulder with his nose. Then he kicked up his heels and danced down to the pasture. You ought to have seen him. I hate to let him wear specs all the time though, for fear he will break them."—Bridgeport Standard.

KEEP POULTRY AT HOME.

Mr. Stephen Beale, an English authority on poultry has this to say about keeping poultry that depredate on neighbors:

"It will be conceded at once that whilst every one has a right to keep fowls, no one has a right to do so at the expense of the comfort or health of others. And as soon as it is found that they become a nuisance in any way, then the law at once steps in and says that this must not be, nor is it fair to expect that it should be so. Poultry keeping in towns is a luxury, and even if the law permits the carrying on of a business though it is annoying to neighbors, it does not go so far as to defend luxuries in this way. Therefore we may only keep fowls so long as our doing so does not intrude upon the comfort or rights of our neighbors, and if it can be be proved that by our doing so either one or the other is infringed, then if they like to defend themselves they can compel us to put a stop to what is a nuisance to them. In a country district this would be somewhat difficut to do, but in a town both reason and truth can soon be worked upon, and several cases show that the law is as we have stated."

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

IN THE COILS; — OR — The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

HOME AND HEALTH.

SLEEP A PREVENTIVE OF HEADACHE.

Sleep, if taken at the right moment, will prevent an attack of nervous headache. If the subjects of such headaches will watch the symptoms of its coming they will notice it begins with a feeling of weariness or heaviness. This is the time when a sleep of an hour, or even two, as nature guides, will effectually prevent headache. If not taken just then it will be too late; for after the attack is fairly under way, it is impossible to get to sleep till far into the night, perhaps. It has become so common in these days for doctors to object to their patients being awakened to take medicine if they are asleep when the hour comes around, that people have learnt the lesson pretty well, and they generally know that sleep is better than medicine. Sleep is also a wonderful preventive of disease—better than tonic regulators and stimulants.

ANTIDOTES FOR POISON.

"More than two-thirds of the deaths from poison could be avoided if men and women would only acquaint themselves with the simple remedies always at hand in every well regulated household."

The speaker was a house surgeon at a city hospital. "I see the names of six persons on this record of mine whom I know might have been saved had their friends or the police known what to do," he continued. "All six died because too much time was lost in notifying the police, calling an ambulance, and in getting the sufferers to the hospital. Paris green, rough on rats and laudanum seem to be the favorite poisons for suicide. For each of these poisons an antidote can be found in almost every household. The chief points in cases of poisoning are to encourage vomiting and thus get rid of the substance; to counteract the poisons by antidotes, and to check death by the use of stimulants and artificial respiration.

"Rough on rats is simply arsenic. Hardly a day passes but some one suicides by its use. If on discovering that this poison has been taken the sufferer is given one or two raw eggs, and the eggs are followed up with large draughts of tepid water into which a tablespoonful of salt or mustard has been thrown, the stomach will usually throw the poison off. These, supplemented by a dose of castor oil, sweet oil or milk to offset the action of the poison, will usually save the life of the patient. The same treatment is the one to be followed when Paris green, opium, morphine, paregoric or laudanum is the poison used. When opium, morphine, paregoric or laudanum is swallowed it is well to give a cup of strong black coffee after the emetic, to apply cold water to the head and neck, and to prevent sleep. These poisons represent the majority of those taken by accident or by persons intent on suicide. When tartar emetic is taken, after encouraging vomiting, it is well to give milk and strong tea to drink. When poisons like mineral acids are used—such as aqua fortis and oil of vitrol—after an emetic solutions of soda, magnesia, and even of plaster scraped from the wall can be used with good effect. Oxalic and carbolic acid calls for the same treatment after using a little flour and water, the white of an egg, or castor oil in order to protect the gullet and walls of the stomach. When poison like caustic potash, soda or lime is used, administer vinegar, lemon or orange juice in water, emetics and oil. If phosphorus is taken, like the ends of matches, for instance, keep up the vomiting and administer big doses of magnesia in water. Oils in such cases must not be used. For corrosive sublimate administer the white of an egg, flour and water, or milk, and then the emetic. In poisoning from chloroform or illuminating gas, let the patient have fresh air, loosen the clothing and dash cold water about the face and neck.

"All of these antidotes are, as a rule, always at hand, and if used will almost every time save the life of the patient and greatly facilitate the work of the physician when the case comes under his care."—N. Y. Evening Sun.

The remarkable thing about the discovery is that the gas pours forth in powerful currents without visible diminution of volume from wells only 120 to 165 feet in depth.

MASON & HAMLIN PIANOS.

Mason & Hamlin bid fair to become as famous for their upright pianos as they have long been for their world-renowned cabinet organs. The distinguishing feature about the Mason & Hamlin Upright is an important improvement in the method of holding the strings of the piano, which originated in their own factory. The strings are secured by metallic fastenings, instead of by the friction of pins set in wood as has been the case, and the advantages resulting are numerous and highly important. Among them are the following: Wonderful beauty and musical quality of tone, far less liability of getting out of tune, greater reliability in trying climates, and greater solidity of construction and durability.

The exclusion of thirty-three secret society members from the United Brethren church at Hicksville, Ohio, is so unusual an event that it excites wonder from some and enrages more. It is not denied that these members were violating the discipline of the church, which they had vowed before God to maintain in righteousness; and if the rule of the church is right, their condemnation stands. The popular view is, that the next General Conference will practically abolish the rule, which the treachery of the leaders has already made almost a dead letter, and, therefore, there was no good reason for this unusual and apparently severe action. Had the United Brethren been honest before God they would have followed the example of the godly fathers of the church, and would have condemned lodge membership as a wicked complicity with the world which must not be allowed in the church. Such discipline would then have been unusual because it would seldom be called for.

St. Bernard Knight Templar Commandery of this city expelled three of its boodler members Sept. 21st and gave two others a respite. McGarigle, Ochs, and Bipper were the culprits. Van Pelt was shortly before brought before his lodge, with probably the same result. The final decision goes of course to the Grand Lodge which meets in this city this week. A funny incident took place in the meeting of the County Commissioners the other day—the body to which the chief boodlers once belonged. Commissioner Hemmelgarn in a warm attack on Sheriff Matson for improperly feeding prisoners in the jail said, vehemently: "You have a sheriff, who allowed a prisoner [McGarigle] to sit in Fisher's Garden without a deputy, after I had notified him not to do so. He is either a fool or a knave—" "Hold on!" "Out of order!" were the cries that choked the rest of the sentence, and the chairman put the speaker down before he could tell the public any further of the connivance of the sheriff with the McGarigle runaway. The lodge claims that the boodler violated his word of honor to Matson. Is it the custom of the Sheriff to pledge or swear his prisoners that they will not run off? Or is it necessary for him to do so with his Masonic charges, to thereby prevent their throwing him a sign of distress which he has sworn in the lodge to heed?

The lower house of the Georgia legislature has anticipated Bro. Hinman's argument on the Glenn bill, and voted last week to fine Atlanta University at the rate of $8,000 per year, by refusing to appropriate the usual sum so long as white and colored students are taught together. This providential defeat of the Senate substitute will keep the matter under agitation until its authors themselves are ashamed of their work. If the Senate should agree, it will yet be a blessing to the institution, making it independent of a political body of low principles, and giving it an opportunity to "live by faith." Doubtless the loss will be made up to it thrice over, and the principle for which it stands will be more firmly established, until the vicious rule of caste shall be overthrown.

The apt imitation of the whites by the colored lodges does not stop with titles, degrees, funerals, oaths and ceremonies. They have learned that under the cloak of secretism darkest infamy may be plotted and concealed. A dispatch the other day from Greenwood, Mississippi, says that some two months ago a black man named Taylor killed another black, and colored Masons attempted to lynch him, but were prevented by a Mr. Stancil, who took Taylor home for a time. Since then both he and his wife have disappeared. His body was found a few days since in the Tallahatchee river and the belief of the people is that a Masonic murder has been committed. On July 27th at Greenwood another negro was found lynched by a black mob, and it is understood that colored Masons thus avenged the death of one of their order. The belief is strong in that neighborhood that the colored Masons take an oath in their secret organizations to avenge the death of a brother member.

Bishop Ireland, popish prelate in the district where the Knights of Labor are meeting this week, was lately interviewed in Washington and thus expressed his view of the relation between the order and the Romish church: "The church has withdrawn its disapproval of the organization, holding that its secret work is harmless so long as it does not foment riots, immorality or irreligion. While the church is opposed to secret societies of all kinds, it holds that the society of the Knights of Labor is of a political and business nature such as all men are entitled to have regarding their business affairs. The organization has shown no disposition to foment riots, and under the management of Powderly I do not think it is likely to, although we can not tell what would happen should any other man be elected to Powderly's place. Under these circumstances the church has tolerated the association." The shrewd bishop does not conjecture what would happen should a devoted son of Rome be lost from the leadership of the order. Should a non-Catholic succeed him it would soon be seen whether the Knights of Labor were an order to be prohibited or no. Its principles, objects and constitution would hardly save it.

A dispatch from the capital of the State to the Daily News of this city tells of the activity of the political hacks in that city with reference to the election for governor next year. It is generally admitted, says this authority, that John C. Smith, present Lieutenant Governor, is the strongest candidate "by reason of his wide acquaintance and great popularity." This is but another case of lodge boosting Aside from his activity as a Freemason and Odd-fellow he has nothing to recommend him to popularity. He has no record for any great action or wisdom in public affairs. Outside the lodge circles he was indeed almost unkown when a few years ago the Republicans made him State Treasurer and then Lieutenant Governor. In the meantime he has been holding several of the highest offices among the Odd-fellows of Illinois, and has been "strengthening his political fences" by organizing lodges of this order and of their military "Patriarch's Militant;" he has been Knight Templar "Grand Commander," and is now, we believe, "Deputy Grand Master" of Illinois Freemasons, and as Alexander T. Darrah is now completing his second term, Smith will probasucceed him according to custom. Thus the people of Illinois have before them the interesting possibility of a Grand Master for governor. God forbid they should ever be so derelict as to allow such a lodge plot to succeed.

THE OVERGROWN HEDGE AT GETTYSBURG.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

Among the many charming beauties which elicit expressions of admiration from the visitors to the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, not the least is the smoothly-shaven hedge separating it from the "Evergreen Cemetery" (citizens') on the east. The watchful and competent wounded soldier, who, with his veteran subordinates, has charge of the cemetery and keeps everything in such charming order and loveliness, explained to the writer the reason, in answer to his question, why the hedge fence was so exceedingly high, that it was owing to the mistaken notion of letting it grow too much before it was shorn. He said the hedge is now so large and strong in stock that it is not possible to cut it down and back so as to reduce it to a proper height. As it is, it cuts off the view between the two cemeteries, and, when standing close, the more distant landscape and far-off horizon. It is a fine fence, impenetrable and imperishable, but it is too high for beauty, utility or intercommunication. But there it is, with roots as densely interlaced underground as its matted branches are above. To reduce it or remove it, were the latter found necessary, would be nearly equally difficult. But as it runs between two cemeteries, and as the village is never likely, as is often the case with growing cities, to encroach upon the quiet sleepers in these two apartments, it is not ever, probably, to become a practical question, What shall we do with the hedge?

Some hundreds of years ago our fathers planted hedge rows between the churches. Long, deep-rooted and closely matted are the fences which run between Geneva and Wittenburg and Oxford and the rest. Nor is the hedge between the churches always like the one here between the two cemeteries, thornless; nor are the thorns always turned in or clipt back. If the churches were cemeteries for the quiet and protection of the Lord's sainted dead, and the entombment of their books and deeds and other evidences of their wisdom and valor, it need not be much regretted that the hedge were matted and thorny and high which separates the different apartments of the sleepers. But what if its apartments are the Good Shepherd's green pastures for the one flock, shepherded, in his wisdom for the while, in different folds, yet all having one Shepherd? Is it well to have the hedge too high, or barbed with untrimmed, sharp thorns to ward off or punish too near approach? Blood stains and torn fleeces mark the long green lines as history turns her optics down the denominational hedgerows of the past. She finds sad proof that the separating lines are neither thornless nor safely passable for the too simple and unsuspecting sheep.

Or suppose the field thus divided is the world, and that the many laborers in it are servants of the one Master, to whom each one stands or falls, is it well for these servants to divide themselves and their work by thorny, high grown and impenetrable hedgerows? Or if the hedge-row be necessary for some inscrutable reason, is it not desireable that it shall be low enough to see over, talk over, and shake hands over? At all events and in any case, is it worth while to spend all one's time, or any considerable part of it, in an attempt to thicken, heighten or sharpen the old ancestral hedge-lines? Many a fruitful furrow might be drawn where they encumber, and the time spent in strengthening these lines might, if devoted directly to the culture of the field, yield many a golden sheaf for the Master's garner. Well, when the promised time shall come that, "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off," then the hedge shall yield to the furrow and the thorn to the sheaf. The Lord hasten the day!

But why not go to work and dig up or burn away the hedge-rows at once? That were easier than to grow the fir tree and myrtle tree instead. Destruction is the easier and inferior part. It is also well to remember that as the matter now stands, much that is lovely and of good report is interlaced with, and supported by, these very hedge-rows. How many institutions, boards, fellowships, etc., full of mercy and good fruits, would be disorganized if not destroyed, and all their benefactions lost, if the old lines were too rudely and suddenly destroyed! Growth must keep pace with destruction; conservatism and reproduction must replace the changes of radicalism and revolution, or the last state shall be worse than the first.

Let the living, growing church crowd upon the cemeteries of dead and buried issues, and the hedge will have to yield to the furrow and the thorn to the sheaf.

GEORGIA BARBARISM.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

"The agony is over. The Senate on yesterday passed the substitute for what is known as the Glenn bill."—Atlanta Constitution, Sept. 23d.

No; the agony has but just begun. The horrible proposal to send Christian women to the chain-gang for teaching their own children in their own schools has been withdrawn, for even Georgia can be made to feel the power of the outraged moral sense of mankind. But the act as it has passed the Senate is even meaner and more cruel than the original bill. Meaner, because its victims are not to be the well-to-do, cultured, college professors,who could command money and influence for their defence,but is,instead, the poor colored students who have had the fortune to be educated in a Christian college that offers instruction to all. More cruel because it is easy of execution and because it deprives a great multitude of excellent young men and women of their almost only means of making a livelihood. The following is the full text of the bill:

To be entitled an act to regulate the manner of conducting public educational institutions in this State, and to protect the rights of colored and white people, and for other purposes.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Georgia, That from and after the passage of this act, that no school, college or educational institution in this State that is now, or may hereafter be supported in whole or in part by the public funds of the State or public funds of any county, municipality or any other subdivision of this State, shall matriculate or receive under any pretext whatever, as pupils, both white and colored persons—such white and colored persons shall be taught in separate schools.

Sec 2 Be it further enacted, That any school, college or educational institution, or teacher, manager or controller thereof, who shall violate the provisions of the preceding section shall not be entitled to participate, directly or indirectly, in the distribution of any public funds now appropriated, or hereafter to be appropriated, for educational purposes in this State, either by the State, the several counties thereof, the municipalities or other subdivisions in this State.

Sec. 3 Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no person who hereafter becomes a pupil in any college, school or educational institution where the co education of the races is permitted or allowed shall hereafter be competent to teach in any school, college, or educational institution of this State, that is supported in whole or in part by the public funds of the State, or the several counties thereof, municipalities or other subdivisions of this State.

Sec. 4 Repeals conflicting laws.

The first section, except as an explanatory clause, will be of no force whatever. It simply affirms that people shall not do what they may know to be not only a natural right but a moral obligation. But as it provides no penalty it will be regarded as simply an ebullition of the spirit of race prejudice and will be treated accordingly.

The second section, which proposes to withdraw all State aid from those institutions that have been planted and sustained by Christian benevolence, which have contributed greatly to the cause of education, good government and the prosperity of the State, and which are so important for the supply of the teachers of which Georgia has most pressing need, was most unjust and most suicidal.

Considered either as a threat or an attempted bribe it will be powerless. An institution that for the sake of $8,000 would yield to un-christian demands would justly forfeit the confidence of those benevolent contributions that have been far greater. It would be the worst possible policy for Atlanta University to cheerfully obey the unholy edict.

The third section comes with crushing weight on the students of Atlanta and Clark Universities. It proposes to punish them for obeying their parents in getting the best possible education at the smallest possible expense. The commendable efforts of both parents and children, who, amidst abounding difficulties, have sought and obtained the advantages of these schools is regarded and treated as a misdemeanor, and the source of supply for the best teachers the State ever had is cut off. Should the substitute bill become a law it will practically offer a premium on ignorance and inefficiency. It will alienate the sympathies of the warmest and best friends the South has ever had, and do much to raise sectional and race animosities.

And all this was merely for "buncomb." Practically there was no co-education. No negro had applied for admission into a white school and the white children in colored schools could be counted on one's fingers. It is an ebullition of barbarism—the last expiring kick of the spirit of slavery.

WEEK DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

One of the sublimest answers ever made by human lips, always seemed to me to be that of Martin Luther when he replied to the papal emissary, Serra Longa, who asked him where he should take refuge in the event of being forsaken by the elector and all his earthly friends: "Under heaven." The whole wide universe he could claim for his city of refuge, and in the weariest desert land he could never go where the shadow of a protecting sanctuary did not fall.

I believe that the human mind naturally responds to the heroic, and the Bible in nothing shows its inspiration more than by its constant appeals to cast away unmanly fears. I believe, too, that Christians are by far the bravest men and women in the world; and they ought to be,—they, the symbol of whose Captain and Redeemer is the Rock, the constant, age-enduring Rock, clothed with strength and beauty as with a garment; the tender grace of the windflower, the emerald green of the lichen. And not only the everlasting Rock, but the living Rock, for so close did the old Hebrew poet and seer come to the heart of Nature that she whispered to him the secret which modern science has but lately discovered, that by some mysterious aggregation of their crystalline particles, rocks actually grow.

I admit all this, gladly, joyfully, even in the face of one fact which would seem to contradict it; that spell of fear which falls on religious meetings and makes the clergy but "dumb dogs" as soon as any mention is made of the secret empire. Nobody impugns the courage of the bee—less than half a second would suffice to change their opinion if they did—but there is a species of gigantic moth, a soft, harmless thing, formidable in no respect, which sometimes gains entrance into a hive; but instead of striking their sharp stings into the intruder at once, as they could easily do, it is said that its presence will inspire a whole colony with a strange, nameless terror, so that they will even leave their home, as tenants leave a haunted house. And when I hear it asked, Why are ministers who hate Masonry so afraid to speak their minds about it? I am reminded of this curious fact in natural history. Now there was reason why men should fear Rome. She was a palpable enemy, and she made war on the saints with such very palpable engines as the dungeon, the stake and the torture chambers of the Inquisition; but why should that which is but her image, a shadowy, unsubstantial, spectral image, voicing obscure threats out of its cloudy curtain of mystery, have such power to dismay? Why, it takes a thousand times more courage, and courage of a finer and higher kind, too, to fight a ghost than to fight an army.

What these evil and perilous times need is a bold and fearless setting forth of the everlasting truths of the Bible in opposition to the prevailing corruption in social, political and religious circles, to secret societyism, and to the rapidly increasing influence of Romanism in this great republic of ours,the latter two of which are the chief weapons employed by Satan in his warfare against the Son of God, our dear Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The influence which secret societies of all descriptions are exerting on the present generation throughout this broad land are detrimental to the cause of the Christian religion. It cannot be otherwise, since secret societies are not of divine origin but belong to the category of human institutions. But there are two kinds of human institutions: in the first place, such as are in harmony with God's Word, which is the case, for instance, with organized Christian congregations; and secondly, such as are purely human and at variance with divine revelation, which two things characterize secret societies. For, talk piously as they will concerning God, he, nevertheless, has no more to do with them than he had to do with Grecian or Roman mythology.—Denver Correspondence Lutheran Witness.

A SOLILOQUY ON THE MASONIC CREED.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Webb's Monitor, page 284: "The religious tenets of Masonry are few, simple, but fundamental. The candidate must profess a belief in deity before initiation." Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 100: "Creed of a Mason. The creed of a Mason is brief, unentangled with scholastic subtleties, or with theological difficulties. It is a creed that demands and receives the universal consent of all men, which admits of no doubt, and defies schism."

Is this the sum and substance of the Masonic faith? Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, page 44: "A Belief in God. This constitutes the sole creed of a Mason—at least, the only creed that he is required to profess." Also Mackey's Jurisprudence, page 94: "Though in ancient times Masons were charged in every country to be of the religion of that country or nation, whatever it was, yet it is now thought more expedient only to oblige them to that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves."—Charges of 1722, No. 1.

Then to simply profess a belief in God is the test of Masonic fellowship, and they oblige every Mason to that religion in which all men agree, and in so doing oblige them from those religions in which all do not agree. That is logical, but there may be cases where a closer test is applied than a bare belief in a God. We turn to the great book of decisions, Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, in which every Masonic Grand Lodge in America is represented, and there read once for all, on page 206: "It is anti-masonic to require any religious test other than the candidate should believe in a God, the Creator and Governor of the Universe." And on the same page: "In our opinion, any other religious test is not necessary; and to require that a candidate profess a belief in the divine authenticity of the Bible, or in a state of future rewards and punishments, is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry." That certainly is a new theology, at least a new theory. "Ye believe in God. Ye do well; the devils also believe and tremble."

Mackey's Jurisprudence of Masonry, page 95, explains: "Under the shelter of this wise provision, the Christian and the Jew, the Mohammedan and the Brahmin, are permitted to unite around our common altar, and Masonry becomes, in practice as well as in theory, universal." Then Webb's Freemasons' Monitor, page 285, declares: "So broad is the religion of Masonry, and so carefully are all sectarian tenets excluded from the system, that the Christian, the Jew, and the Mohammedan, in all their numberless sects and divisions, may and do harmoniously combine in its moral and intellectual work, with the Buddhist, the Parsee, the Confucian, and the worshiper of Deity under every form." The devil could subscribe to that test; so could the heathen that worship deity in the form of a loathsome snake, a stock or a stone. We read of a broad religion in an old book that mother keeps on her table at home, which has our family record in it. Why, this strange religion, and what do Masons mean by "morality?" It would trouble friend Harper, the Mason, to define morality. If he knows the rudiments he never confesses it. He never speaks of the church, or anything good, except with a scoff and a sneer. Father says, If you don't believe in total depravity, just study old Harper awhile. Pages 502 and 503 of Mackey's Jurisprudence defines: "Every Mason, says the old charges of 1722, is obliged, by his tenure, to obey the moral law. Now this moral law is not to be considered as confined to the Decalogue of Moses, within which narrow limits the ecclesiastical writers technically restrain it, but rather as alluding to what is called the lex naturæ, or the law of nature." Father says old Joe Harper is a "rough diamond." It would be rather hard to narrow his proclivities and propensities down to the Ten Commandments.

We further read: "This is the moral law, to which the old charge already cited refers, and which it declares to be the law of Masonry. And this was wisely done, for it is evident that no law less universal could have been appropriately selected for the government of an institution whose prominent characteristic is its universality. The precepts of Jesus could not have been obligatory on a Jew; a Christian would have denied the sanctions of the Koran; a Mohammedan must have rejected the law of Moses; and a disciple of Zoroaster would have turned from all to the teachings of his Zend Avesta. The universal law of nature, which the authors of the ancient charges have properly called the moral law, because it is, as Conybeare remarks, 'a perfect collection of all those moral doctrines and precepts which have a foundation in the nature and reason of things,' is, therefore, the only law suited, in every respect, to be adopted as the Masonic code."

Why, then, do they carry the Bible? I thought Masonry was founded on the Bible. Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, pages 207–8: "The Jews, the Chinese, the Turks, each reject either the New Testament or the Old, or both, and yet we see no good reason why they should not be made Masons. In fact, Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was it would not be Masonry, it would be something else."

Christianity and the Bible do not seem, then, to harmonize theoretically or practically with Masonic religion. It cuts the Bible in two to please the Jew, and rejects it altogether to please the Mohammedan. What is Masonic religion? Let the Masonic General Grand High Priest, Albert G. Mackey, name it. Lexicon of Freemasonry, page 402: "The religion, then, of Freemasonry, is pure theism, on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge, or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry."

If I join the lodge, then, I must subscribe to pure theism. That settles it. That cuts Christ out, and no man can approach God without a Mediator. "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." "He that climbeth up any other way, the same is a thief and a robber." I'll trust to the religion that holds to the Bible and to Christ, and I hope to be a better man.

TWO JUGGERNAUTS OF DEATH.

Before subjugation by the British, and under sanction of custom and government, an idol of India was borne in procession in a huge vehicle, called the car of Juggernaut, to impress idolaters with the grandeur of their god. Impelled by fanaticism misguided devotees cast themselves beneath its wheels, and were crushed into indistinguishable masses. The humanity of the conqueror suppressed the sacrifice of adults beneath Juggernaut, of widows on the pyre and of infants in the Ganges, and thousands of lives are annually saved, and unblunted sensibilities spared from the horror of incessant bloodshed.

Also under sanction of government in a Christian land, we have our Juggernaut of death, but unlike the first it shuns the day and seeks the night—a seventh plague in manner and effect. Like the first its victims are numbered by thousands, though not a willing sacrifice to superstition, but an exacted pledge for the security of wrong. Our Juggernaut is Freemasonry, a science of crime and iniquity copied from the sun-worship of Eleusis and Baal-peor, protected and disseminated, veiled and popularized with the condensed chicanery of ages, that, as an example of subterfuges, first feigned and proclaimed itself a charitable institution in 1788 (Dictionary of Dates, Hayden, who deplores the Masonic origin of its history), according to creditable writers 71, according to others 5792 years after inception, but still retains the prejudice against cripples of Egypt (Josephus on Apion), and against the poorer class of Greece (Rollins); therefore, an unchangeable landmark—a charity and humanity for self and a precedent for thieves.

Our country runs with its secret bloodshed, is beset with its hidden graves. If any doubt, let them read, "My Experiences with Secret Societies by a Traveler," advertised in the Cynosure, a demonstration by actual occurrences of the prevalence and cause of murder, illustrated from real life, corroborated by historical sketches, and supplemented by satires in verse, original in matter and treatment, and combined to interest and convince every class as book or tract.

AN IMPORTANT SOCIETY FORGOTTEN.

"John, I would like to invite my friend, Mrs. Smalley, this evening. Will you be able to be in?"

"No, my dear, I must attend the meeting of the Ancient Order of Foresters to-night."

"Well, to-morrow evening?"

"I have the Royal Arcanum, and you know—"

"What about Wednesday evening?"

"Oh, the Odd-fellows meet that night; on Thursday I have a meeting of the Knights of Labor to attend; on Friday the Royal Templars of Temperance; on Saturday there is a special meeting of the Masonic lodge, and I couldn't miss that; and then Sunday night—let me see—what is there on Sunday night, my dear?"

"The Grand and Ancient Order of Christian Fellowship."

"Why, I had forgotten. Am I a member of that?—let me see—"

"But you have forgotten another society, John, of which you used to be a member."

"What's that?"

"Your wife's."—The Candidate.

SOME ERRORS CONNECTED WITH THE HOLINESS WORK.

It is an error to undertake to sever holiness from the practical work of a Christian life. Holiness that does not visit the sick, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and preach the Gospel to the poor is a sham. It is an error to confound holiness with moral cowardice. Holiness that does nothing to stay the flood of intemperance, that is afraid to vote, that is afraid to name the worst popular sins lest the devil's boycott hinder sheckles from falling into the sacred till, is not akin to that of Stephen who was "full of the Holy Ghost." It is an error to cover up certain sins because some holiness professors have been guilty of them, and have not confessed. At one of the largest New England Holiness Conventions of the season the question was asked, "Can a Freemason enjoy sanctification?" The answer was, "I don't know." Another searching question to find out the position of the holiness teacher on lodgism was dodged by the reply, that each person must follow the light he has. Such dissimulation and cowardice seems to us a disgrace to the holiness cause, and tending to bring it into contempt. Not thus did Paul teach in reference to the secret societies of his day. That Christian giant did not whine out, "I don't know anything about them," but said with a ring that shall sound to the end of the world, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

NOT A SECRET SOCIETY.

The distinguishing features of a secret society are ritualistic worship, an obligation of secrecy, a promise to assist brethren socially, publicly, and financially, regalia and trappings, a fettered conscience, and a burial service.

Occasionally the devil throws out a mild form of secrecy as a bait, and to make it take, he labels it "not secret," just as the saloonist sets out his light drinks to bait the innocent and unwary, and labels it "not intoxicating." In such cases the chemist subjects the mixture to a chemical test to see if there is any alcohol in it. If he finds alcohol, the drink is branded intoxicating.

Now, we propose to show you why we have unhesitatingly pronounced the G. A. R. a secret society. First, the G. A. R. resembles all secret societies in the fact that it has a ritual of worship, not very much, yet just a little to give it tone—chaplain, prayers, and the like. Second, it has an obligation of secrecy. Some have disputed this in an indefinite manner, but any sane man knows that they would not open their doors to an old soldier, be he the bravest his country ever knew, without a pledge of secrecy from him. Here we make a challenge to any who may read this who are not persuaded we are right. Bring us a member of the G. A. R. who will go before a magistrate and swear, 1st. That the G. A. R. have no oath. 2nd. That that oath has not been published. 3rd. That they have no obligation of secrecy whatever, and we will undertake the task of proving that man a perjurer.

That they promise to help each other politically and financially; that they have regalia and trappings and a burial service, all know. It only remains to be shown that it fetters the conscience in order to settle the fact that it partakes of the spirit of Masonry.

A minister being asked to join the G. A. R., replied that he was opposed to secret societies. "But the G. A. R. is not a secret society," they replied. "We only have a password," etc. The minister was most persuaded to join, but asked again, "If your order is not a secret society I suppose that I can join, and if at any time I find anything in your order that I cannot conscientiously indorse, I am at liberty to speak freely concerning it to my church?" The reply was an emphatic "no." Freedom of conscience could not be tolerated even in the G. A. R.

Ritualistic worship and the binding of the conscience being the principal ingredients of the Baalistic lodge, and these ingredients being found not only in the G. A. R., but also in the Good Templars and other minor lodges, we fight as decidedly the introducing of these baits as snares into the community, as we would the baiting of men with light wines, beer, and also under the plea that they are not intoxicating.—Western Crank.

THE NORTHUP MURDER AND THE G. A. R.

The following special correspondence to the daily Ohio State Journal of August 3d, 1887, shows how secret societies that are professedly patriotic may be used by bad men to pervert justice.

Dr. Northup, of Portsmouth, Ohio, was deliberately murdered by a saloon-keeper, by the name of Alf. McCoy, because he was active in prosecuting saloon-keepers. The murder was malicious and cold-blooded. The jury before which he was tried brought in a verdict of murder in the second degree. This verdict has been severely condemned by the press of the State. The following statement explains how the prisoner escaped a verdict of hanging:

"Special to the Ohio State Journal:

"Portsmouth, O., Aug. 2.—Since the discharge of the jury which tried Alf McCoy, for the murder of Dr. Northup, there has been considerable speculation as to the causes which prompted the finding of a verdict so totally incommensurate with the crime. There seems now to be an easy solution of the perplexing question. Seven of the jurymen who tried McCoy are members of the G. A. R. McCoy is also a member of that organization, and, during his trial, wore a new G. A. R. uniform, kept his eyes closely upon the jury, and whenever he could do so, as he thought, with safety to himself and them, threw out G. A. R. signals of distress. It is also learned that two of the jurymen, although admitting that the evidence pointed to a deliberate murder, yet for political reasons would agree to nothing but a verdict for manslaughter. Of the seven who stood out for hanging five are Democrats, and McCoy himself is a Democrat. The people, after summing up all these things, think they smell a very large-sized rat, and protest that the verdict was anything but an honest one."—H. R. Smith in the Wesleyan Methodist.

MASONIC HARMONY.

The writer, in a Masonic experience of twenty-six years, has sat in lodges and chapters in the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri, and in Canada, and has never yet seen the work of "Blue Lodge" or "Chapter" given in the same manner in any of these States. This fact needs no substantiation, as any craftsman or companion can fully corroborate it. True, the Ancient Landmarks are the same in all, but the wording of the "lectures" and much of the "unwritten work" is in each case vastly dissimilar.

In musing over this "confusion among the workmen," one is led to ask, Why this unaccountable diversity of ritualistic work? The reply is found in what may be termed "Masonic egotism." The teachings of Masonry all tend to a careful conservation in strictly following the tenets of the craft, especially where the lectures and unwritten work is concerned. Thus each Grand Lodge in America has a separate work, and each stands ready to swear by the "three great lights" that their "work" is the only true and original "Simon pure," handed down from the "three," when the temple approached completion, and to fully establish the superiority of their "work" over that of all others, each stands ready to sneer at the "work" of the others as being composed of interpolations and innovations upon the ritual of Masonry.

Thus, our Michigan work is termed "skeleton Masonry," and to "work his way," a Michigan Mason has frequently not only to show his right angles, perpendiculars and horizontals, but also his "papers." Now the writer stands ready to admit that much of the above stands true concerning Michigan "work," and where the framers of our ritual found their authority for the changes so noticeable is a question. We are charged with having "cut, carved and hewn" at the original ashlar till we have left but little of what came up from the ancient quarry, "bearing the mark of the craft upon it." Any traveled Michigan Mason knows my statement to be a fact, and while we can "work our way," we find a vast dissimilarity between our work and that of foreign lodges and chapters. And yet our grand officers and lecturers tell us that "ours is the only true work. No two States work alike, and each insists upon its work being correct.—J. W. Fitzmaurice in the Detroit Freemason.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

In labors oft—Before and after the Illinois Convention—Friends by the way.

JANESVILLE, Wis., Sept. 28, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A brief sketch of our trip to DeKalb and Boone counties in Illinois may interest your readers. Mrs. S. and myself left home with our horse and carriage on the afternoon of the 9th inst., and made our first stop at the Patrol office in Geneva. Bro. Wheeler was absent, but his competent lady assistant gave us a cordial greeting, and looking over the appointments we decided that Bro. W. was entitled to his claim of having a model newspaper "plant."

At "Grey Willow" we were entertained at the commodious farm-house of Ansel Lake, who is familiar with Batavia, N. Y., and the regions round about, and who has long been known as a warm and liberal supporter of the anti-secrecy cause. That region has suffered seriously from drouth, and the father was absent in Iowa in search of hay to fill the empty barn and feed the scores of blooded horses and cattle with which his large farm is stocked; but nothing was lacking on the part of his son and family to make our stay every way enjoyable.

We reached Kingston at 12 M. on the 10th, and were met by Bro. M. L. Worcester, and, after dinner with Dr. Cowell and wife, we drove out three miles in the country to Bro. Worcester's, where every true reformer is sure not only of a hearty welcome, but of "a helping hand." Sabbath, the 11th, I preached in the morning in the M. E. church, afternoon to the Baptists, and in the evening at an Evangelical Association church four miles north of town.

Monday, the 12th, we drove eleven miles to Cherry Valley to call on pastor St. Clair, and if practicable arrange for meetings there. We found Bro. St. Clair in hearty sympathy, but three-fifths of his male members were secret-order men, and he felt hampered under the circumstances. Returning, we were favored with a fair audience in the Associate church on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

On the 14th we visited Belvidere, where we met Bro. Arnold and Bro. Butler, and arranged local details about the State convention. Thursday and Friday evenings I lectured to fair audiences in the hall at Kingston, where we were the guests of Dr. Cowell and wife, who are fearless and firm for the truth. My remarks called out a reply from a Mr. Scott, chaplain of the lodge, on the following evening, which I did not hear, but was told that his remarks were largely personal, and not very complimentary to me.

On Saturday I preached for the Adventist brethren in Belvidere, who keep the seventh day, and was glad to find them a spiritual and, apparently, a very devoted people. Sabbath morning we attended at the M. E. church, and listened to a most radical and excellent discourse by the pastor, Bro. Swartz, who is opposed to all shams in religion, and not afraid to say so in his pulpit, and is of course an Anti-mason. The evening was occupied with a Gospel meeting "in the big tent." Monday was devoted to visitation, as was also Tuesday, with meetings in the tent at night. Wednesday morning the convention proper opened, which has already been reported.

Our stay in Belvidere was rendered doubly pleasant by the free hospitality of brother and sister Reynolds, who could not have shown more solicitude for our comfort had we been their own children.

On Friday we returned to Bro. White's, near Kingston, where no pains were spared to make us feel at home. On Saturday sister White accompanied Mrs. S. to visit two outlying districts, where arrangements were made for Sabbath services with the children. On the 25th Mrs. Stoddard, assisted by Mrs. White, addressed the Sabbath-school at the Evangelical Association church in the morning, and a like gathering at the Davis school-house in the afternoon, on the subject of prohibition. I preached at the M. E. church in the morning, and at the Baptist hall in Kingston in the afternoon. On Monday, the 26th, we started homeward, and after a long and steady pull of over fifty miles, reached that brightest, dearest spot on earth, about 7 P. M. in a drenching rain. Tuesday was a rainy and busy day in the city, and a night ride to this city of Janesville was a weariness to the flesh, but I remember the admonition, "whoso putteth his hand to the plow and looketh back is not fit for the kingdom of heaven."

THE IOWA FRIENDS YEARLY MEETING DISCUSS A MASONIC OUTRAGE.

The Iowa Agent at the Yearly Meeting—An urgent message from Dakota—A shameful scene at a funeral—The Masons routed—Friends and subscribers—Jubelum exemplifies the Masonic use of a dictionary.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I went to Oskaloosa to attend the Iowa Yearly Meeting of the Friends church. A Dakota quarterly meeting had sent up a minute of their action, which led to the appointment of a large committee on secret societies. I was invited by one of the committee to meet with them at their first session. There was a general expression of sentiment in the form of a conference meeting, by the members of the committee, and all but two were radical anti-secret society men. One of them, John F. Hanson, a minister in the Dakota quarterly meeting, spoke of an audacious effort on the part of some Masons to capture a funeral service he was conducting and turn it into a Masonic parade.

A man had died who was a Mason, but had expressed no desire to be buried with Masonic honors. His widow applied to Friend Hanson to give her deceased husband a Christian burial. Bro. Hanson consented to do so, provided there should be no Masonic ceremonies at the funeral. The widow said she did not wish any, but wanted her husband to have a Christian burial. Acordingly they proceeded with the funeral, as the Friends custom is, when a company of Masons, from outside of the community, appeared, and insisted upon taking charge of the funeral and turning what was meant to be a Christian, into a heathen burial service.

Bro. Hanson remonstrated, and appealed to the widow. She reaffirmed her desire that her husband should have a strictly Christian burial, and that all Masonic ceremonies should be excluded. But the Masons insisted that the deceased was their "brother," and that it was their right and privilege to bury him with Masonic honors.

But Friend Hanson was equal to the emergency. With a courage born of conscientious convictions, which characterize the honest Quaker, he said, "Gentlemen, if you insist upon intermeddling with this burial service, I will send men to fill up the grave, and there will be no burial here to-day." Quiet, Quaker grit, born of conscientious scruples, against mixing Christian with Baal worship, triumphed over Masonic bluster, and the deceased received a Christian burial, as his widow desired.

The report of the committee was followed by a lively discussion, in which Friends Hanson, Douglas, and Pres. Trueblood, of Penn College, were the principal speakers. Friend Hanson urged that more determined effort should be made to withstand the encroachments of the lodge upon the church; and that the church should more actively labor to withstand and remove the secret lodge system. Friend Douglas thought that much had been done to resist the encroachments of the lodge upon the church. Pres. Trueblood said that for two hundred years the Friends had stood opposed to secret societies. That opposition was an established principle of the Friends church. That the policy of the church towards secret societies was not an open question to be discussed and determined, but a question that had been settled, and a policy that had been established.

It was refreshing to hear Pres. Trueblood's remarks; and I think we may look for a rising tide of Christian zeal and effort in the Friends church, to withstand and counteract the conspiracy of Satan to revive heathenism and spread infidelity through the secret lodge system.

A vast multitude gathered on the Sabbath at the yearly meeting; as many as eight or ten thousand persons were there. In the evening, meetings were held in most, if not all of the city churches, by the Friends. I was appointed, in company with one of their ministers, to the Free Methodist church of Oskaloosa.

I distributed some literature among the Friends, and conferred with Bro. Hanson in regard to the outlook in Dakota. I think the way will open for Secretary Stoddard to hold a convention in Dakota, and revive the Dakota State auxiliary to the N. C. A.

I conferred with the Friends in regard to future reform work in their localities, and as to how we could best spread reform literature through the State, and took my departure before the annual meeting adjourned, and came to Henry county. I went to Wyman and called on Mr. Dodds, a staunch reformer of the Covenanter church. He subscribed for a second year's reform work, and furnished me a horse to ride. He also paid me $7.50 that he had collected on last year's subscription to the State Association. I called upon Rev. Mr. Black, the pastor of the Covenanter church of Wyman. Here I met Rev. Acheson, pastor of the Covenanter church of Hopkinton, Delaware county, and enjoyed a very pleasant interview. Rev. Black renewed his subscription to the Cynosure; and he and Rev. Acheson expressed their sympathy with the reform work. T. G. Dunn, J. H. Graham, T. G. Graham, J. K. Canon, L M. Sampson, and O. L. Sampson gave subscriptions or donations to the Iowa work.

Saturday and Sabbath I spent with Rev. Geo. Fry, assisting him in his quarterly meeting services. On Monday I went to Swedesburgh, and on my return I found Mr. John Robison of the Ainsworth United Presbyterian congregation. By invitation I went home with him, two miles south of Ainsworth, and spent the night. The next morning he took me to Ainsworth, and introduced me to several of the brethren of the church. The question of having a lecture against the secret society system in the future was favorably considered. Among the rest he introduced me to Mr. Thompson, a seceding Mason of three degrees. He manifested a warm interest in having the lodge system discussed in Ainsworth. I asked him if he had examined the revelations of Freemasonry. He said he had carefully examined Mr. Ronayne's Handbook, and he found it very accurate. He said he had witnessed some thrilling scenes in the lodge. He spoke of one candidate who, alarmed and angered by the savage threats of the three ruffians, determined to defend himself against their attempts to take his life. But in vain did the poor blind candidate struggle to avert his coming doom. The ruffian, Jubelum, had broken his setting maul, so that his declaration, "I hold in my hand an instrument of death," seemed an idle threat. But, alas, the poor, blind candidate could not, therefore, escape his vengeance. Instead of his setting maul, the ruffian grasped an unabridged dictionary and struck the candidate in the forehead, and if he did not literally break his skull, he did knock him senseless into the canvas. But he was not killed, as the man in the Geneva Lodge was, and so after he had been in the canvas, or been Masonically buried, long enough to revive, they could play at resurrecting him.

But will Christians play at MURDER, and then blasphemously assume to resurrect their victims? Will Christians submit to, and join in, the ceremonies of ancient craft Masonry, when they know that they are a revival of the ceremonies of the ancient heathen Baal worship? Will Christians join in these ceremonies, when they know that they are processes of regeneration according to the religion of Freemasonry, as taught by the authority of the Grand Lodges? Will Christians, I repeat, endorse and sanction a religion that assumes to regenerate by heathen ceremonies, and to sanctify by the strict observance of obligations that bind to sin, and that practices a deistical worship? Can a man practice a religion that binds to sin, that ignores Christ, and that is pagan in its ceremonies, and not be a friend, yea, a worshiper of Satan? And can a man be a friend of Christ who is also a friend of Satan? One query more: Will Christ accept the worship of that man who is also a worshiper of devils?

May the omnipotent Christ, by the power of the Holy Ghost, break the mesmeric spell of Satan, and give these lodge worshipers to see that they cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; that they cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils. Oh, my brethren, what concord hath Christ with Belial? and what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? Will you not, then, come out and be separate? Will you not so heartily renounce this abomination as not to touch the unclean thing? Yours in Jesus, C. F. Hawley.

THE WISCONSIN MEETING.

Milton, Wis., Sept. 30, 1887.

The annual convention of the Wisconsin State Christian Association for 1887 is an event of the past, and those attending pronounced it a time of refreshing and inspiration for renewed effort. In the absence of the president, J. W. Wood, vice-president Rev. Isaiah Faris took the chair, and Mrs. W. W. Ames ably and acceptably performed the duties of her husband as secretary. Bro. Arnold's illustrated lectures on the two evenings preceding had awakened a good deal of interest, and assured a full house and attentive evening audience. The day sessions were largely devotional, interspersed with personal experiences, brief speeches and necessary business. Bro. Faris's address on secrecy as a basis of organization was able, original, and justly deserving of the undivided attention it received from every thoughtful person present. Bro. F. has promised the substance of his address for the readers of the Cynosure, and I am confident that it will be read with marked interest and profit by all. A Bible reading lead by Bro. Butler occupied most of the forenoon of the second day, and as this is a community of Bible readers, the exercises were intelligent and characterized by great thoroughness.

Bro. Faris was obliged to leave on the 1 o'clock P. M. train to meet previous engagements, and vice-president Elder N. Wardner took the chair. The minor secret orders were discussed at some length, and several instances given showing the identity of the whole system of secretism. Delegates were appointed to the National Prohibition Conference in Chicago,and appropriate resolutions reported by the committee considered and adopted, all of which will be reported with the proceedings of the convention by the secretary. J. P. Stoddard.

UP AND DOWN IN ALABAMA.

Dear Cynosure:—I left Rome, Ga., on the 22nd and came South to Cave Springs, Ga., a pleasant, quiet village of 1,000 inhabitants and the seat of the Deaf Mute Schools for the State. The town owes its name to a magnificent spring and is in the midst of beautiful hills and a fair farming country. It has two hotels and no saloon. The school building for white mutes is commodious and surrounded with beautiful grounds. That for the colored is newer and there have been no pains taken for adornment. It illustrates the power of Southern prejudice that these mutes, who work together in the same shops, should have to be, at great additional expense, educated separately. These schools can only include but a fraction of this unfortunate class. There are but eighteen colored and about thirty-six white pupils, though I was told that later in the season the number would be increased.

The superintendent of the colored school, Rev. M. M. Alston, gave me much information and showed me much kindness. He, with three other colored ministers, has been caught in the lodge net. They are all Freemasons, Odd-fellows, or both. All admitted that the lodges worked much evil to the churches, but the Baptist brother was strongly in the belief that Masonry was founded on the Bible and was fully recognized and endorsed by it, though, as usual, he failed to find the passages. Others had never heard that there were any objections to the system, but all treated me most kindly and gladly received our literature.

From there I came to Anniston, Ala. This, like Cave Springs, is a "dry town." In both cases the absence of the dram shops is most noticeable. But Anniston is essentially a New England village. Large factories keep up a constant hum and roar. Long rows of tenement houses exactly alike show where are the homes of the operatives, while great quantities of pig and rolled iron and bales of cotton and cotton goods tell what is being accomplished. One of the largest and finest hotels of the South is known as "The Inn." There are several others and all seem well patronized. New blocks of buildings are going up in every direction. They are all large and substantial brick structures and this town promises to rival Birmingham as a manufacturing city.

The Congregational church (colored) has a large new house of worship, about the finest in the city. Its pastor was holding a series of meetings, assisted by Rev. Snell of Birmingham. The Knights of Labor, both white and colored, are numerous and strong, but other secret societies seem not to have obtained much foothold.

The field was not promising and I left Saturday, the 24th, on the narrow-guage road for Talladega, where I found the school had not yet opened. The term commences Oct. 1st. Pres. DeForest is still North, though his family are here. I was most kindly received by the treasurer, Prof. Silsber, and was assigned a most pleasant room at Stone Hall, and I take my meals at Foster Hall, which is under the care of the new matron, Miss Topping, from Olivet, Mich. Every one connected with this school that I have met is thoroughly in sympathy with our reform, and nowhere have I received greater personal kindness. The past year was a good one and the prospects of the school are excellent. A large addition is being made to the primary department. The new building is not yet completed. The sleepy old town is waking and putting on new life. The corn and cotton crops have been fairly good and there is not so much want and distress among the poor. The college farm under the management of Mr. Bishop, who is enthusiastic in his profession, is fairly successful and a good object lesson to the old-time farmers around.

Yesterday forenoon I listened to a carefully prepared sermon from Bro. Sims, a theological student. At 3 P. M. I preached to a full house in the Second Baptist church (colored) and at night in the A. M. E. Zion church. In both cases I dwelt at some length on the unchristian character of the lodge, and I think had the sympathies of most that heard me. The pastors of these two churches were formerly students in this school, and are in sympathy with its objects and teachings. Rev. Barton, the Baptist pastor, told me six years ago that he was a Mason and saw no evil in Masonry. Now he says he has long been suspended for non-payment of dues and has no desire ever to see the inside again. Rev. Carter has never joined any lodge, though he says his bishop has often urged him to become a Mason. Both gladly accepted tracts and papers and heartily endorsed what I said to their people.

I expect to go from here to Selma, Ala., and to remain some time in that part of the State. The cool northern winds are bringing back the energy that was well nigh exhausted by the long summer heat. The mountains loom up grandly in the distance and I feel like singing,

> "Thus far the Lord hath led me on,
> Thus far his power prolongs my days,
> And every evening shall make known
> Some fresh memorial of his grace."

NOTES OF A NATIONAL REFORMER.

On the bank of the Fox river, nine miles north of Portage, Wis., I found a psalm-singing U. P. minister's family, who take the Cynosure, Statesman, Voice, Prohibitionist and Instructor. His four boys, Thurlow, Everett, John and Willie, and the mother are good singers and make the house ring with the melody of the old Psalms at morning and evening worship. They are saturated with the ideas of these reform papers, and the boys, with their old reform horse "Prince," took me out to three meetings and around the congregation, talking up our work. The father, Bro R. G. Campbell, was away preaching in Iowa. He says the great danger threatening the destruction of the church as well as the nation is the influence of secret organizations. In most towns he visits these secret orders lead young men away from the church and absorb their interest; they educate them to desecrate the Sabbath by their Sunday parades and excursions.

At Janesville I preached in two of the leading churches on Sabbath, and found a pleasant home with Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, the only Cynosure readers in town. Those Cynosure people always have their latch strings out for reform pilgrims. Bro. W. F. Brown, the scholarly pastor of the Presbyterian church, took me home for dinner. He never saw the Cynosure or heard the Blanchards. How true that half the world know not how the other half live. I said to an intelligent Janesville lady, "Do you know where the early home of Frances E Willard was? She replied, "Francis E. Willard? Who was he?"

After two days spent in riding over Rock Prairie and addressing two meetings in the U. P. church, I ran down to Belvidere, Ill., to meet with the State anti-secret convention. Though the rain fell all afternoon and evening, yet the attendance was encouraging. It was pleasant to meet so many of the veterans in the war with secrecy. The church most strongly represented was the Wesleyan Methodist. I am satisfied that this denomination stands more squarely on the anti-secret issue than any church in the United States. There are few of their ministers who do not read the Cynosure. They are also a unit on the National Reform question. I have often thought if the old Covenanter church ever cuts loose and drifts with the tide, I will apply for a ticket on board the old Wesleyan Methodist. Bro. John Harper, of the U. P. church, Smithville, Ill., who is as much interested in the anti-secret reform as any pastor in his denomination,told me once that if the old U. P. church ever drifted from its moorings, and the gang plank of the Covenanter church was out, he would embark on it; if not, he would try for a passage on board the Wesleyan Methodist. The Covenanters, next to the Wesleyans, are the most interested in the anti-secret work, but I was sorry that neither they nor the United Presbyterians were represented at this convention except by the writer. I know that Dr. Kennedy of the U. P. church at Somonauk and Bro. Harper of Smithville, and Bro. White of Hanover are deeply interested in this reform. Bro. Harper once purchased $40 worth of N. C. A. literature at his own expense to distribute among his people. But these brethren are so educated as to regard the truth as a unit; they can't maintain one part at the expense of putting down another. They have so strongly imbibed Dr. Blanchard's idea of the tremendous seducing power of false worships that they will not countenance the singing of anything in worship but the divinely-inspired Psalms. They believe it matters little who makes the laws of a church, if "Tom, Dick and Harry" make their songs. Now I verily believe these good brethren do not feel at home in N. C. A. meetings, because none of their inspired Bible Psalms are sung. Bro. J. D. Smith of Lodi, Wis., is at work selecting a dozen or more of the best National Reform and anti-secret Psalms, in order to have them printed on slips to be used in reform meetings. And who would object to giving them a trial,selecting some of the old familiar tunes that all may sing? M. A. Gault.

W. B. STODDARD AT MANSFIELD, O.

A few evenings ago we had the pleasure of hearing W. B. Stoddard, the State agent of the Ohio Christian Association. About two hundred persons assembled in the United Presbyterian church at the appointed time. This was Mr. Stoddard's first appearance before a Mansfield audience, but as he is not particularly timid,that did not seem to affect him any, and for an hour and a half he spoke with ease and power, showing the anti-Christian character of the lodge,and pleading with the young men to weigh well his words and closely examine from the outside before they sought entrance into the dark places.

As usual there were some who said the speaker did not know what he was talking about, and tried to turn it off with a jest; otherwise his lecture was well received. Mr. Stoddard is an indefatigable worker and is sowing the seed throughout the State in a lively manner. He is doing a good work and we are glad to encourage him on his way. He is now working up the State meeting, which will convene in a month or six weeks. We ask for him the support of all who love this cause.

BRO. BUTLER'S BIBLE READING.

Milton Junction, Wis., Sept. 26, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—Yesterday morning Mr. M. N. Butler put in an appearance at the regular church services at East Fulton. He gave a short account of the Belvidere meeting, also the notice of the coming State convention and requested the privilege of holding a Bible reading in the evening, which was readily granted, I am told. I don't know what kind of a punishment he is deserving of, for he did not inform the audience what the subject would be, and of course the unsuspecting, innocent, Bible-loving people of East Fulton did not dream that any harm could come from a Bible-reading; but how they were disappointed!

The first part of his reading being on temperance was pleasing and highly appreciated,as far as I could judge; but the last part reminded me very strongly of the old darkey's revival meeting, when a brother minister came to see him and was invited to preach with the injunction that he "mustn't say anything about stealin' as it would throw a coldness over the meetin'." So when Mr. Butler read the words, "In secret have I said nothing," so severe a chill seized upon a part of the congregation that even a very large dose of quinine could not have removed it.

Now we do not want the Cynosure to get a wrong impression of the East Fulton anti-secrecy workers. They are very strongly opposed to secrecy,but don't believe in talking about it all the time, and as it has only been nine years since we had a lecture on the subject, they consider Mr. Butler's talk entirely out of place. The people of this place have been warned enough, and if they choose to go on in the wrong way we should throw no stumbling stones in their path. It is distinctly understood that we are an anti-secrecy people, and that is all that is sufficient. So say some. However,there are anti-secrecy people here that can't be killed. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

Some of us enjoyed Mr. Butler's talk very much for it came in answer to the prayers of years, and from the very depths of our hearts we sang:"Praise God from whom all blessings flow," that once more on the shore of time and in that dear old church we were permitted to hear, flashing from the earnest mind of one standing on the rock Christ Jesus,the words of God's eternal truth on one of the eading topics of the day.

On looking the ground over and hearing the remarks made by different ones I am convinced that Mr. Butler's reading has done good and that the anti-secrecy cause is in a more favorable condition in our place than ever before. If this proves to be true we must follow it up in some way.

And now we are standing on the eve of our annual meeting and our hearts are lifted to God as never before for success in our work. Oh, may we all be united and lay firm hold on the promises that never fail, is the earnest prayer of your co-laborer in the vineyard of the Master, Mattie S. Harvey.

Correspondence.

MASONIC FRUIT.

DeKalb, Iowa.

Many of the Cynosure readers will doubtless remember of a Dr. Quigley, who tried to burn up a dead body along with his office in Redding, Iowa, to procure life insurance money. He absconded, but was captured and brought back to Ringgold county for trial, when he took a change to Decatur county, where he was convicted and sentenced to a term in the penitentiary. I am informed by a man who has taken twenty-two degrees in Freemasonry that the money of the lodges caused the sheriff to sleep while on the cars guarding the prisoner to his supposed and lawful destination; the train also ran slow while the conductor turned his back,and the doctor stepped off the cars and made good his escape. He never arrived at the prison.

This summer there was a crime committed on the person, I am informed, of a Mason's wife. The supposed criminal was easily captured and lodged in jail at Leon. The man was taken from prison in the night and hanged without judge or jury, because he could not give the grand hailing sign. It is claimed by many, and I think generally believed, that the mob that performed the lynching was composed of Masons and Odd-fellows. Public opinion is divided as to the man's innocence or guilt. If the man was guilty or innocent he would get justice in the courts and the law vindicated, if it was not for lodgery. It is time that the voters of this country should wake up to the fact that "something rotten"is holding the offices of trust and honor, for "Justice is turned away back and Equity has fallen in our streets."

SHALL WE DO EVIL THAT GOOD MAY COME?

Beloit, Kans.

In reading different reports from Lake Bluff, as well as other instances where the right hand of fellowship has been given by the leaders of the W. C. T. U. to organizations that savor so much of a mixture of evil with the good, I have been so filled with fear lest great harm might come to our dear Union through affiliation with these associations that I shall not be uncondemned unless I speak out on the subject.

From quite a retired standpoint I have been looking out upon the great moral battlefield, and watching with a very jealous eye the wooings of artful enemies. The cunning of the arch fiend forbids any bold attack on the White Ribbon Army, therefore he transforms himself into an angel of light, and with fawning advances seeks to decoy this enemy of his into a snare that will surely bring defeat. It will not do for the W. C. T. U. to lay her head in the lap of the Delilah of secretism in any form, nor her hand in the paw of papacy, or nod gracefully to that institution that has "no prayers nor religious services." The chief end of man is to glorify God, and we have no right to any "business" that is not religious service and needs prayer without ceasing. God help us to watch as well as pray.

THE NEW IBERIA SCHOOL.

New Iberia, La., Sept., 24th, 1887.

Dear Editor:—Since I wrote you last Mr. Peter Howe sent word to Mr. Gunner to have the school building put in good repair and furnished with proper seats and desks, stating that he would pay the bills. Mr. G. went right to work and ordered material and set carpenters and painters to work, and the place is now undergoing a rapid transformation. Books and papers for a library and a piano are among the things very much needed for present use. School will open in October.

This community has met with a great loss in the death of Miss Kate Gunner, sister of Rev. Byron Gunner. She was an intelligent young lady, and a graduate of Straight University, New Orleans. She had taught a private school here for a year,and did a great amount of good by her teaching and quiet Christian example, and was to be one of the teachers in "Howe Institute." She went home to Marion, Ala.,this summer to see her father and other friends, and after a pleasant visit of three or four weeks she took sick,and after suffering very patiently for about a month with heart disease she died on the 3rd of this month. She is greatly lamented by old and young.

Bible Lesson.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON III.—Oct. 16.—Power to Forgive Sins.—Matt. 9: 1-8.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins.—Matt. 9: 6.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jesus, the Great Physician. vs. 1-8. This case is unique in the fact that reference is made entirely, not to the faith of the sick man, but to the faith of those who brought him. We are told by Mark and Luke that unable to make a passage through the crowd, they uncovered the roof where he was and let him down into the midst before Jesus. They were not to be turned back in this purpose by any difficulty or any obstacle. Theirs was the kind of faith which removes mountains. That is not faith which always sees its path clear, which no walls of Jericho stretch before, no lion in the way seeks to daunt. We are not told that the sick man had no faith, but unquestionably it was that exercised by his four friends which brought him the blessing. We may not limit the Lord's power, or say how far faith must be personal and individual. He who has taught us to pray for others will surely honor faith for others. The risk is always in exercising too little, not too much. Christ began the work of cure by forgiving his sins. Bodily healing must follow soul healing. The whole man must be changed, made one with God, and then he will keep those divine laws of health which are written in his being. A great physiologist has said, "Nature is kind; she always meets the repentant half way." And when a man is made spir itually whole, natural law and spiritual law work together for his healing. In forgiveness of sins we have the guarantee of all lesser blessings. That the power of Christ can make a drunken sot, pure and honored and respected; that he can make a frivolous, ease-loving soul earnest and self-sacrificing, is the real test of his divinity. And at the same time let us not lose sight of one of the most important lessons which the story of this miracle is intended to convey: not to divorce what the Psalmist so beautifully joins together, "Who forgiveth all thy sins, who healeth all thy diseases."

2. The Calling of Matthew. v. 9. Matthew is careful to mention what the other evangelists omit—his obnoxious calling, as if to give special prominence to the fact that his Lord was no respecter of persons. There is a sense in which all who are not following Christ are like Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom. They are looking out for all the world can give them, whether of pleasure or gain. They are trying to make the world tributary to their own selfishness. No Christian ever says, "The world owes me a living." The world is not his master and there cannot be between them any account either of debt or credit.

3. Differences between Christ's religion and the Pharisees'. vs. 10-18. Doctrines so new would naturally arouse caviling; and when Christ went publicly to dine with the publican, Matthew, the offended Pharisees ask the disciples, "Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?"—a question which was probably at this early stage of their discipleship too hard for them. But it is not them that are whole or who think themselves whole that need a physician, but they who are sick. To think one's self good enough already is to stand outside the pale of Christ's mission. This is the great evil of the lodge system taken at its best. It teaches that the practice of certain virtues, certain duties, have in themselves a saving power, and thus inculcate a selfish, utterly Christless morality that keeps its deluded votaries from ever seeking the true Light. The disciples of the ascetic John have another question to ask, why Christ's disciples neglect fasting. They did not understand that the whole genus of the new dispensation is opposed to the eld; that one was narrow, the other broad as the universe; that one made much of the Spirit, the other of the mere letter. While religion always remains the same, the forms of religion vary with human needs. The monastic, mystical type of Kempis and Madame Guyon have passed away, with what we may call the theological type of the last century. We have instead an era when religion takes the form of great personal activity. Mission, evangelical and reform work have taken the place of abstract meditation and theological subtleties. It is not so much literal fasting as plain and abstemious living which is now the duty of Christian laborers. In the words of Lowell.

"New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still and onward who would keep abreast of Truth."

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Thy sins be forgiven thee." This forgiveness was doubtless the very boon which, above all others, the young man needed and desired. Jesus was reading his heart. His affliction had been blessed to him. It had led him first to thoughtfulness; then to repentance; and now to the Saviour of sinners, who assured him of the forgiveness of his sins. Possibly, too, there may have been in this case a peculiar connection between the youth's sins and his sickness. The one may have been cause, the other effect. If so, his penitence would probably be all the deeper; and his joy would be all the greater, when the loving Saviour looked into his eyes, and said into his ears, and to his heart, Thy sins are forgiven. Take note, says Luther, of the thy.—Morison.

"Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?" Your minds. Why do you judge me thus unkindly? Why do you charge me with blasphemy? (1) Their thoughts were evil in themselves, because they regarded the highest life as a blasphemy, and also, (2) because they expressed not openly their scruples.—Lange. And (3) because they exercised a malevolent spirit and unkind judgment. Chrysostom notes the gentleness of Christ's rebuke: "He said not, O accursed and sorcerers, as ye are; O ye envious and enemies of men's salvation, but, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?" And he applies Christ's example to the modern teacher: "We must, you see, use gentleness, to eradicate the disease; since he who has become better through the fear of man, will quickly return to wickedness again."—Abbott.

"For whether is easier to say," etc. In our Lord's argument it must be carefully noted that he does not ask which is easier, to forgive sins, or to raise a sick man—for it could not be affirmed that that of forgiving was easier than this of healing—but, which is easier, to claim this power or that; to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee,or to say, Arise and walk? That (i. e., the former) is easier; and I will now prove my right to say it by saying it with effect, and with an outward consequence setting its seal to my truth, the harder word, Arise and walk. By doing that which is capable of being put to the proof, I will vindicate my right and power to do that which in its very nature is incapable of being proved. It would be easier for a man equally ignorant of the French and Chinese languages to claim to know the last than the first. Not that the language itself is easier, but that in the one case multitudes could disprove his claim, in the other hardly a scholar or two in the land.—Trench.

Healing of the Body.—1. Christ came to undo the evil which Satan had done, to counteract all the works of the devil. 2. Diseases of the body are the result of the diseases of the soul, and must be cured. 3. Christ proved that he could heal the soul of sin, by healing the body of disease. 4. He proved that he could heal all the evils of mankind. His healings foreshadowed the effect of his religion upon the world. He makes the dead in sin to be alive, and reveals the resurrection and the life. He opens the eyes of the spiritually blind: he is the light of the world. He casts out the devils of sin from the heart and from the community. He calms the tempest of sorrow with his 'Peace, be still." He delivers the soul from all its imperfections. 5. He heals the body usually by the means he has prepared in nature, by the general influences for good in the Christian religion, just as he usually heals men's souls by the ordinary means of grace.—P.

A Parable of Redemption.—This miracle may be regarded as an enacted parable of sin and redemption. The paralytic typifies (1) the sinner by his original helplessness (Isa. 40: 30; John 6: 44); (2) faith, by his earnestness to come to Christ in spite of obstacles (Ps. 25: 15; 86: 2, 7); (3) a common Christian experience, by the delay he suffers between his repentance and faith and his cure (Jas. 5: 7, 8); and (4) the power of divine grace, in the ability to obey Christ's command, received in the very attempt to comply with it (Phil. 4: 13).—Abbott.

The estimated number of acres restored to the public domain during August is 21,323,600, exclusive of 1,513,000 acres within the limits of the Indian reservations.

A ship has brought intelligence to San Francisco that the population of Pitcairn Island has increased to 107, of whom 57 are women, and that but three deaths have occurred in the past three years. This is the island on which the mutinous crew of the ship Bounty took refuge in 1789.

A granite shaft recently quarried by the Bodwell Granite company in Vinalhaven, Me., is the largest piece of stone ever quarried on earth, and if erected will be the highest, largest, and heaviest single piece of stone now standing or that ever stood, so far as there is any record. It considerably exceeds in length any of the Egyptian obelisks. The shaft is 115 feet long. 10 feet square at the base, and weighs 850 tons.

Miss Alice Fletcher, the student of Indian household customs, says that among the Sioux, when one family borrows a kettle from another, it is expected that when the kettle is returned a small portion of the food that has been cooked in it will be left in the bottom. The language has a particular word to designate this remnant. "Should this custom be disregarded by any one, that person would never be able to borrow again, as the owner must always know what was cooked in her kettle." A white woman, on one occasion, returned a scoured kettle, intended to teach a lesson in cleanliness; but her act became the talk of the camp as a fresh example of the meanness of the whites.

"While practicing law a number of years ago," said Judge Tourgee, "I had a peculiar will case. An old lady who was a slave holder, dying, bequeathed her colored man, John, and her dusky maid, Jane, who sustained to each other the relation of husband and wife, to the trustees of the church, 'to be used as far as possible for the glory of God.' I was curious to know what course was taken, and upon investigation found that after meditation and prayer, the trustees sold their legacy at auction, and with the proceeds sent a missionary to China."

The public school system of East St. Louis is said to be the most thoroughly demoralized system in the State. Owing to the plundering of the municipal treasury for the last five years the county could not find the means to build schoolhouses, and therefore four of the large schools are held in buildings controlled by as many denominations of the Christian religion. These are the Lutheran, Catholic, Methodist, and German Catholic. Heretofore the School Board has appointed the teachers to these schools at the dictation of the pastors of these churches. The teachers in the building owned by the Lutherans would be teaching that religion in the public school, the same with the Catholics and the others, until the schools became almost wholly sectarian. Monday, however, the board did not consult the pastors, and this so enraged them that they locked up the rooms and refused to allow the schools to open unless they could name the teachers. The board says it will not be dictated to, and is looking for other quarters.

A 9 year-old son of Hiram Taylor of Wilmington, O., mysteriously disappeared about thirteen months ago. He was an unusually bright child, not worse than the average boy. He hoarded up his money, read books of travel, and was passionately fond of horses. Search was made, but all traces of the child appeared lost. One day last week a letter was rereceived by Mr. Taylor from the lost boy. It bore the date of Cape Town, Africa, and recited that, having $30, the boy had resolved to "go around the world." He had left Wilmington on a freight-train, stolen his way to Columbus, paid his fare to Philadelphia, and beat his passage to New York, where he found no difficulty in getting on board of a ship. He said he was in fine health, had been well treated, and was about to sail for Hong Kong. Thence he would go to San Francisco, then come home. He neglected, purposely perhaps, to give the names of the vessels on which he had sailed. Mr. Taylor is a contracting painter and well known.—N. Y. World.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY OCTOBER 6, 1887

The Iowa State Christian Association met at College Springs, October 18–20. The Free Methodist Conference has appointed its delegates and provided for their expenses by assessing the amount in trifling sums to each local conference. This is a charming plan, and worthy of being followed by other Christian denominations. Will not this practically efficient conference take in hand to establish, for once a month, a special concert of prayer for the overthrow of the lodge? or else cause it to be understood that this is a leading object in every prayer meeting?

A Sabbath Convention.—This convention is to meet in the large and beautiful Baptist church in Elgin, Ill., November 8th and 9th. The convention has been called by a committee appointed at a special meeting of Elgin Association, called for another purpose, but seemingly led to this work by the Spirit and providence of God.

Palestine was once a populous grain-growing, grazing country, but now it "lieth desolate" according to the word of God, Lev. 26: 34–43: "Then shall the land enjoy her Sabbaths as long as it lieth desolate, because it rested not while ye were upon it." It takes but one generation to turn a Christian into a heathen nation when it has no Sabbath, which is the only teaching day for the other commandments of God. The various denominations unite in this Sabbath convention; the speaking will be good and the meeting interesting and very profitable if made the object of continuous, fervent prayer.

Our excellent Mr. Callender, with seven associates in Northern Pennsylvania, has addressed a printed circular to the Pennsylvania State Baptist Convention, asking a discussion of secret societies, and giving sound reasons for such a discussion. The Northern Baptists have been called on by their leading clergymen, and have paid immense sums of money to benefit the colored population of the South, where there are now 800,000 colored Baptists. Within a few weeks past the St. Marion (local) Baptist Association in Arkansas, and the entire State colored Baptist Association in Louisiana, have voted unanimously against secret societies in their churches, and the subject is being discussed in other States and localities. If the Northern Baptist Associations refuse then to consider the subject when requested by their respectable ministers and members, they will bring reproach on the entire denomination. The spirits of their holy dead, Bernard, Colver, Stearns and others, will refuse to be "ministering spirits" to men so recreant to their duty as ministers of Christ.

THE CHICAGO "TIMES" AND MASONRY.

Last week we noticed briefly that the Chicago Times thinks that the expulsion of McGarigle, who is a Mason, by his lodge, is proof that Masons do not shield each other from penalties due to their crimes. As this opinion is not peculiar to the times, it is worth considering more at length.

We have heretofore entertained a better opinion of the Times than that its editor would call his fellow citizens, who support the Cynosure, "fanatics," unless he believed them to be so; and yet we cannot reconcile the idea that he is ignorant that Masonic oaths bind Masons to conceal each other's crimes, with either common honesty or intelligence. If he publishes us "fanatics" for the favor of the lodges, he is not honest; if because he does not know that Masons do swear to conceal each other's crimes, he is ignorant and unfit to conduct an American journal. And concealing crime is protecting criminals.

The Grand Lodge of Missouri, without pretending to abstinence from liquor, has lately threatened saloon keepers with expulsion for selling it. The obvious explanation is, that saloon keepers are unpopular, and are making the lodge so. Romish priests, who drink liquor freely, attend Catholic total abstinence meetings and protest against their people keeping saloons. The reason is the same; saloon keeping makes their church unpopular. When, as is now the case, the State of Arkansas has no saloons in forty of its seventy-five counties, the priests are stung with the fact that a vast majority of grog shops in the United States are kept by men who go to their confessionals and obtain absolution.

Now, the fact that Masonry, as it is now practiced in America and Europe in the Scottish Rite, is priestism, originally invented by Jesuits and their instruments, may be known by any one who will read any respectable Masonic writer, as Mackey's or McCoy's cyclopedia, or even by glancing at the names of the higher lodges, or at the names of their officers; and priests excommunicate those members who injure their craft.

But if expelling McGarigle, an escaped convict, proves that Masons do not protect their criminals, what is proved by the Masonic sheriff letting him go? and that under circumstances which prove complicity, as the heifer being dead and the butcher standing by with his knife bloody, proves that the butcher killed the heifer. So of the prosecuting attorney and other Masonic court officers. Masons do not protect Masonic criminals, as priests do not burn heretics, when they know they will lose more that they will gain by it.

There is no candid man who has read the history of the Morgan trials, but knows that Masonry requires the protection of its criminals against the law. If there were any good men in the twelve counties of Western New York, there were good men in the Masonic lodges. In large numbers they swore in the civil court that their Masonic oath forbade them to swear to facts which would convict Masons of crime. They were fined and imprisoned for refusing to answer, till Special Justice William L. Marcy exclaimed from the bench, where he sat to try well-known kidnappers, "If men will defy heaven and earth what can human courts do?" Was Marcy a fanatic? If the Chicago Times will give the use of its columns to the editors of the Cynosure, to a reasonable extent, and we do not satisfy the great mass of its readers that Masonry does in theory and practice protect Masonic criminals against the laws, we will consent in silence to wear the odious epithets which that paper sees fit to apply to us. But if that large sheet refuses to give its readers the benefit of a fair and respectful discussion of a subject so momentous, but confines its discussion of a system which covers this country and Europe to a few brief, contemptuous slurs upon gentlemen who are not his inferiors in intelligence or patriotism, we shall submit to the inevitable, and appeal for justice to the American public, which has wiped off similar indignities from those who were called "fanatics" for opposing American slavery, while that institution ruled both church and state.

THE GREAT QUESTION.

The Independent of late reminds us of the London Times years ago, when men spontaneously called it the Thunderer. Its handling of the Andover "New Departure" from reason and the Word of God, of the responsibility of men, of the case of the Chicago anarchists, the saloon pestilence and the Mormon leprosy, sounds like the clear ringing of the old bell on Independence Hall, when the ringer fell dead with overjoy at the Declaration of Independence.

There is another question which underlies all these, viz., the Secret Lodge system, which is bringing into the United States the religions with which the American Board is grappling in the East; the lodge theology, which is organized deism; the oaths of the Endowment House into our court-houses; the anarchy in the church and state, which must follow dispensing with Christ and the Lord's day, as the lodge does both in theory and practice;—the one grand question whether Christ or Satan, God or Baal, shall be worshiped. The Independent, which careened for a time under the weight of the genius of Mr. Beecher, seems now to be thoroughly righted up; and there is no force on earth so fit to deal with the lodge question, as the galaxy of mind now beaming from that wonderful paper. And if the Tappans, who forsook and abhorred the lodge when it was imperfectly understood, as ministering spirits now watch the fortunes of Mr. Bowen and the Independent, we hope that paper will soon turn its batteries on that dark system which is now seeking to bewitch and becraze the colored people, whom the Tappans and their young clerks did so much to emancipate and enfranchise.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN CHINA AND AMERICA.

The report has been circulated that eighty-eight persons were not long since executed in a summary manner near Shanghai, China, for belonging to secret societies. The Cynosure does not advise the suppression of the lodges in this country after that manner, but holds that the conscience of the people should be aroused to cast out the iniquitous system from among men.

Rev. W. C. Pond, manager of the Chinese mission of the American Missionary Association in San Francisco, sends to the magazine of that society a thrilling story of Chinese secretism in this country, which presents some striking contrasts with the Chinese method, which stamps out lodgery as we do the glanders.

In June, among seven Chinese converts received to the mission church, was one girl of fifteen. She was beautiful in her person and interesting in her character. Her father was in China; her mother had pawned the girl for $250, but had partly paid the debt. Little Ah Yung was being harshly treated, and a benevolent Chinaman paid the rest of the debt, took possession of the girl, and placed her in the charge of the mission helper. She was converted and wished to be placed in a safe American family where she would be secure from her mother who might at any time sell her for the basest purposes. The Chinese guardian dared not violate the customs of his people, and Miss Worley, principal of one of the mission schools, had herself appointed legal guardian of the child, and so put her out of the mother's control, but with what result, on the appearnce of the mother, we leave Mr. Pond to say:

"Last Saturday the Chinaman who had befriended Ah Yung appeared at my study. It was with great difficulty that he could maintain his self-control, though he is a man of strong and steady nerves. His lips quivered as he talked and his athletic frame often trembled. The mother had appealed to the Six Companies, and his life was at stake. Since then, as I have been informed, a meeting of the representatives of the Six Companies, has been held, and our friend was summoned to appear before them. He was given till to-day (June 17th) to restore the girl to her mother—an act entirely beyond his power. Meanwhile, the High-Binders were already on his track, and he scarcely feels safe even in Oakland and in his own employer's house. He will probably be obliged to flee, perhaps to some point far east, for he will not be able, even if disposed, to surrender the dear child to the fate to which, in her mother's hands, she would be doomed.

"This brought closer home to me than ever before the fact of an imperium in imperio in our Chinese communities. It stirs one's blood to think that this young man can make no effective appeal to our Government against this secret tyranny. It may very likely be that if he should be murdered, his murderer, if convicted, would be hung; but this is at best a cold and shadowy comfort in the present emergency."

But Mr. Pond, who almost apologized for the lodge in the Congregational ministers' meeting in the Palace Hotel on the 24th of May last year, is disingenuous in his application of this burning story. Instead of applying it to the infamous lodge system, which is a night school of assassination to white, black and yellow races alike, he turns it upon the exclusion of the Chinese from the country. This people have come to a land where similar murders have been again and again unpunished. Shall we expect them to better observe the laws than we? How much better to abolish the lodge and its oaths and assassinations!

—Rev. Robert Loggan, the Kansas State lecturer, has returned to Clifton, Kansas, where he may in the future be addressed.

—Secretary Stoddard went on from the Wisconsin Convention to Minneapolis, hoping to leave behind him damp weather and to find in the north more encouragement and enthusiasm.

—Bro. M. N. Butler returned from Wisconsin last Saturday morning in time to attend a meeting of the Illinois State Executive committee. The committee desire to secure his services for the year, and voted to make a temporary arrangement until former engagements with the N. C. A. are adjusted.

—Elder Rufus Smith and wife of Maryville, Mo., did effectual work last summer holding temperance meetings in their county. She led a band of women at the polls at Maryville and at Barnard, and the Elder had the Salvation Army to help him on the street on election day. Their county said the saloons must go by a majority of over 1,800.

—Bro. M. A. Gault gave two lectures week before last in the United Presbyterian church of Janesville, Wis. He occupied the Presbyterian pulpit at Rochelle, Ill., the following Sabbath; and lectured last week at Byron, and in Bro. E. I. Grinnell's church, near Kishwaukee. His next work is a series of lectures between Baraboo, Wis., and St. Paul.

—The readers of this number of the Cynosure will note with pleasure that Rev. Dr. Swartz has recovered from the effects of a painful accident which for some time prevented the use of his right hand, and has begun again to write for us. After some absence he has returned to the historic city of Gettysburg, and draws an excellent lesson from a familiar object at the National Cemetery.

—Rev. A. W. Parry, last year pastor of the Free Methodist churches at Prospect Park and Melrose, was at the late Illinois conference appointed agent for the seminary at Evansville, Wisconsin, which has urgently applied for his services for some time.

His postoffice will be at Wheaton, and during his visitation of the churches of Illinois and Wisconsin he hopes to lecture frequently on temperance and against the lodge.

—Dr. Kennedy of Sandwich and Dr. William Wishart of Monmouth could not attend the Illinois meeting. The former had a previous appointment which prevented his making any preparation. The latter was closing up a temporary engagement with the United Presbyterian church at Hoopeston, and the special labors involved, particularly the communion service and its preparatory meetings, were of more urgency and kept him away.

—The absence of Rev. John Harper from the Illinois Convention he explains in a letter. He was ready to start for Belvidere when an urgent call came for his presence at the bedside of a sick member of his church, which he could not disregard. By taking the next train he would have arrived quite late at the meeting, and so reluctantly gave it up. He had prepared an address on the "Bible and Secret Societies," showing them to be in opposition. There should be a good meeting somewhere in Peoria county to which this address can be given.

—John Shallcross, P. G. W. P. of the Sons of Temperance, writes of that lodge to the Quill of Philadelphia: "Although neither sectarian nor denominational, the order is nevertheless a religious body, composed largely of earnest Christian men and women from all the evangelical churches." The question Mr. Shallcross and his companions should first answer is, What kind of religion do these earnest Christian men and women practice in which an unlimited number of ungodly men and women are expected by the constitution of the society to join?

—Rev. John Boyes, the English correspondent of the Cynosure, has lately removed from Grimsby to Huddersfield, a more favorable locality for his pastoral labors and for the health of himself and family. The past two years in the east of England have brought much personal and domestic affliction upon his household. Huddersfield is regarded as a healthy city. It is located about twenty-five miles northeast of Manchester in a rich coal district, and is regarded as the chief seat of the trade in fine woolen in the north of England. Its population numbers some 75,000 and it contains several noteworthy churches.

—An inquiry from S. G. Thomas of Olathe, Kansas, is of an unusual nature. He asks if Miss Frances A. Willard is a member of the Knights of Labor. Such a question can have a positive answer only from the lady herself. Her opinion respecting secret societies has several times been given in the Cynosure. She has always expressed herself as averse to secret societies, and always refusing their solicitations to join. But her circular to prohibitionists, to join the Knights of Labor last spring, was a contradiction of this principle. In spite of this bad advice, and her apparent favor of this order and the Good Templars at Lake Bluff, we cannot conceive how she could stifle the convictions of her life and join any one of these societies.

—Rev. J. D. Gehring of Parkville, Missouri, has for some time been compelled to omit his able contributions to the Cynosure because of prolonged ill health. He has been seeking the benefit of a change in Texas, but is again at home, and hopes to resume writing if his strength will permit. His scanty income from a pension he helps out by the sale of orchard and vineyard products. He has this year been putting up the pure and unfermented grape juice which he sells in quart bottles at the rate of $1 each or six for $4. As every one knows, this unfermented wine is most beneficial in many cases of sickness, and for communion purposes it is unsurpassed. We shall be glad if this notice brings patrons to Bro. Gehring. Address him as above.

—When two plump envelopes from brethren Hinman and W. B. Stoddard came in Saturday, we began to ponder Tennyson's familiar lines:

> Too late! too late!
> Ye cannot enter now.

Nevertheless, though our space is well filled, we can hardly stop for regrets when there are two pages of letters from the workers. It is the most hopeful indication of the year when from every quarter these reports come in. We doubt if the church in Jerusalem had many more profitable meetings than when Paul and Barnabas and the others brought in reports of the work of the Lord through their ministry in turning the hearts of men from their idolatries and religious superstitions to Christ. Such work our lecturers are doing. Let us thank God for their efforts and successes. Let us encourage them in every way, but especially in our prayers. The repeated advice of the Illinois State Association about reform prayer meetings is good enough to begin to put in practice.

THE CITY FOUNDED BY PENN.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—A week spent in the "City of Brotherly Love" has given us an opportunity to "take in" some of its points of interest The City Building on Broad and Market Streets is an imposing structure, occupying four squares. The foundation was begun in 1872. No date is set for its completion. Already $13,000,000 have been spent upon it. It will not likely cost less than $25,000,000 when finished. It is built of marble. The tower will be 500 feet high, surmounted by a statue of Franklin thirty-two feet high. The Mercantile Library, on 10th street near Market, is worth seeing. They have 162,000 volumes, the largest number of any in the State. The librarian, Mr. Fogg, has relatives in Cincinnati, and took a great interest in giving us the information desired. The Pennsylvania Library, on Locust street near Broad, is elegant, but not so large.

Girard College, a training school for orphans, must not be missed. There are forty-five acres in the lot, enclosed by a stone wall ten feet high. The trees, flower-beds, and green sward make it a perfect paradise. Work on the buildings began in 1833 and ended in 1847, at a cost of $3,500,000. The main building cost $2,500,000. It is a perfect Grecian temple, built of marble. The roof is of marble, and supported by thirty-four columns, each six feet in diameter and fifty-five feet high, weighing 103 tons and costing $12,994. In 1831, when Steven Girard died, the property left to support the school amounted to $7,500,000. It is worth perhaps $25,000,000 now. Boys are admitted who are over six and under ten years of age. They are allowed to remain until they are eighteen. All their expenses are met while there, even their street-car fare is paid. They have 1,380 boys there at present. There are fifty-five professors and teachers. The heirs of the Girard estate are trying hard to break his will. Hence, the following provision is strictly enforced of late: "I enjoin and require that no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect whatsoever, shall ever hold or exercise any station or duty whatever in the said college; nor shall any such person ever be admitted for any purpose, or as a visitor, within the premises appropriated to the purpose of said college."

The Eastern Pennsylvania Penitentiary is near by, on Fairmount Avenue and 21st Street. It, too, is surrounded by a wall great and high. That wall is to keep in the bad and protect society. They have about 1,380 persons behind those walls. But the walls around Girard College are to keep out the good. The lowest whoremonger in the land can go in; he will not harm the boys. But a minister of the Gospel cannot go in; he might disturb "the tender minds of the orphans" with "clashing doctrines and sectarian controversy." How Mr. Girard expected "to instill into the minds of the scholars the purest principles of morality" while divorcing the institution from the church, the custodian of morality and religion, is a mystery. It is said his object in this provision was to keep out the Jesuits. If that is true he ought to have said so, and not made a clean sweep of all.

The University of Pennsylvania, on Woodland Avenue, between 34th and 37th streets, was chartered in 1791. The original charter was given by "George II., king of Great Britain, France and Ireland," in 1753. The campus is laid off in walks. The buildings are of stone, in Gothic style of architecture, with heavy towers. The College department has thirty-one professors, thirteen instructors, and 361 students. The Department of Medicine has sixty-five professors, lecturers and demonstrators, and 406 students. The Department of Dentistry, twenty-two professors and demonstrators, and 111 students. The Department of Law, seven professors and 129 students. There are also Departments of Philosophy, Biology and Veterinary Medicine. The library is an important item, made up of the Colwell, McCalmont, Carey, Rogers, Wetherill and Allen libraries. William Pepper, M.D., L.L.D., is Provost, and E. Otis Kendall, L.L.D., Vice Provost. The Zoological Garden, the Park, with its long and romantic drive, Music Hall, the U. S. mint, the Postoffice, the Custom House, the benevolent institutions, and Independence Hall are other places of note.

Philadelphia has over 1,000,000 inhabitants. Larger ships can enter her harbor on the Delaware than can get into New York harbor. The streets cross at right angles. Market Street divides the city into the North and South divisions. From Front Street on the Delaware the streets are designated by the ordinals westward to Sixtieth and on. Each square has 100 numbers allotted to it, no matter whether there are one-fourth that many houses or not; so that you can tell the location of a given place at once. For example, 2,102 Race Street is just west of Twenty-first Street, or 706 North Twenty-first Street is seven squares north of Market. This is a city of churches, and they make themselves felt. The saloons are closed on the Sabbath.

It was my privilege to meet with the ministers' union Monday noon at the Presbyterian rooms. It convenes once every three months. It is composed of men from all the evangelical bodies. There were perhaps two hundred present. Rev. W. R. Taylor, D D., read the paper. The subject was, "City Evangelistic Work." It was an able production. The work can be done only by contact of soul with soul. There has been too much stress laid upon method. There must be soul travail. There is no method of incubation by which Christians can be hatched out wholesale. "My little children of whom I travail in birth until Christ be formed in your hearts." When the church is willing to suffer this soul agony for sinners they will be converted. "When Zion travailed she brought forth children." Several members spoke of the work of house to house visiting carried on here last winter. Many congregations were blessed by it with large additions, and all engaged in it experienced a reflex influence of unspeakable value.

The writer had said, "We had too much machinery. No one can estimate the results. But after all we did not move forward. Our sails did not fill." This was questioned, and by many repudiated. A committee was appointed, however, to prepare a plan for a vigorous campaign during the coming winter. It was our privilege to meet Rev. A. T. Pierson, D D., in the Statesman office. He is pastor of the Bethany Presbyterian church, and perhaps the most popular speaker in the city. Saturday afternoon he expounds the Sabbath-school lesson in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, and it is always crowded. He was called to Bethany church at a salary of $5,000. When he learned that $2,000 had been subscribed by Mr. Wanamaker, he refused to take it. He would put himself under obligation to no man. He believes in the freedom of the pulpit. So he accepted the call at $3 000. They give him a collection once a month in addition. J. M. Foster.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

AN ADVENTURE AMONG THE SPIRITS.

[Concluded]

It ever has been my intention to conduct myself with decorum due any place or position in which I might be. Persons who cannot behave themselves in any sanctuary wherein doctrines contrary to their views are expounded, had better remain away. I am conscious that my expressions at this spirit seance may be criticized. Be that as it may, the incidents which I am narrating are facts, and any lack of etiquette on my part cannot depreciate the logic of my remarks, nor offset the manifest deceptions of the occasion. I had not thrust my presence upon them, nor entered their domicile with the intention of controverting anything in any way. Indeed, my attendance was rather compulsory. At the earnest solicitation of one of their strongest devotees, my uncle, and as an act of courtesy to him, I had reluctantly consented to go and "see for myself whether the manifestations were false or not." It had been represented that I should witness for the sum of one dollar, paid in advance, genuine phenomena. A glance at this "phenomena" convinced me that it was not genuine, and that consequently I was being imposed upon.

The next phenomena on the programme, it was announced, would be one of industry, the manufacture of lace from spirit material, in full view of the audience. There were sepulchral squeaks from fifty chairs as their semi-spiritized occupants bent curiously forward. The lace-maker, who resembled in form and motion the medium so generous in the loaning of her fleshly substance to her impoverished spirit acquaintances, conspicuous in phosphorescent effulgence, stepped into the middle of the room, and began the process of manufacturing a piece of lace about two yards in length. How, or what, others present saw I cannot say, but I believe that, at least, most of that audience saw just what I did—the spirit fumble about its waist and finally put out something white, and after turning or twisting it several times cast it upon the lugubrious atmosphere, where it gracefully floated a second, and then fell softly to the floor, when it was carefully examined and pronounced a piece of genuine lace. I, also, agreed that it was genuine. What provoked me was the assertion that it had been something else before we saw it made as claimed. It was without a doubt a piece of real lace. The ejacula-

The Home.

"LO, I AM WITH YOU ALWAYS."

BY MRS. M. A BLANCHARD.

The summer winds are sighing;
The trees, with verdure crowned,
The flowers, in fragrance vieing,
Shed sweetness all around.

Storms in their wrath alarm us;
The thunder crash we hear;
But fear not aught will harm us;
Jesus, our Saviour's near.

In the cold dark hour of sorrow,
Beneath a threat'ning sky,
His word dispels all terror;
"Fear not, for it is I."

Then let our souls embrace him
Each day with deeper love,
Till, in his likeness waking,
We reign with him above.

ENSNARED.

BY I. N. KANAGA.

Satan sets many traps and snares to take our wandering feet. And none so liable to be ensnared as those who are unsuspecting. It is, therefore, of the highest importance that we should ever be found watching. Thus judgment and prudence would dictate that we should use all caution and wisdom where there is danger. "In vain is the snare set in the sight of any bird." Oh, that the children of men were wise and wary as they!

Now, Satan not only goeth about "seeking whom he may devour," as a lion does his prey, but he goeth hither and thither in the earth, walking up and down in it, so that haply he may find the child of God off his watch tower. Then when he succeeds in finding any of God's little ones asleep or careless, how easy is it then for him to gather their feet in his hellish snares, and then such fall a ready prey to his Satanic power.

Seeing then we are encompassed about by such a wily foe, and treading along a way beset with hidden snares, especially for a moment when we wander from the path of life, how greatly wise is it in us to accept evermore the guidance of One "mighty to save and strong to deliver." In him we find a faithful friend, wise to direct, and infinite in his power and resources for our succor and our safety. "Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler," while thus trusting in him. Yea, never while thou art wholly his, will he "suffer thy feet to be taken." If, however, dearly beloved, your soul should ever unwarily be ensnared, flee immediately to God for deliverance. Then will you be constrained to cry out—"My soul is as a bird escaped from the snare of the fowler; the snare is broken and my soul is escaped!" Hallelujah for such a Friend and Helper!

TRUE RICHES.

The best and surest way to have any outward mercy is to be content to want it. When men's desires are over eager after the world—they must have thus much a year, and a house well furnished, and wife and children thus and thus qualified, or else they will not be content—God doth usually break their wills by denying them as one would cross a froward child of his stubborn humor; or else puts a sting into them,that a man had been as good he had been without them,as a man would give a thing to a froppish child, but it may be with a knock on his fingers and a frown to boot.

The best way to get riches is out of doubt to set them lowest in one's desires. Solomon found it so. He did not ask riches, but wisdom and ability to discharge his great trust; but God was so pleased with his prayer that he threw them into the bargain.

If we seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness in the first place,and leave other things to him, God will not stand with us for these outwards; though we never ask them,we shall have them as over measure; God will throw them in as the vantage. Certainly God will never be behindhand with us. Let our care be to build his house and let him alone to build ours.

None ever was or ever shall be a loser by Jesus Christ. Many have lost much for him, but never did, never shall any lose by him. Take this for a certainty: whatsoever of outward comforts we leave, whatsoever outward advantages we balk,that we may glorify him in our services and enjoy him in his ordinances more than others where we could, we shall receive an hundredfold in this life.

'Tis a sad thing to see how little Christ is trusted or believed in the world; men will trust him no further than they can see him, and will leave no work for faith. Hath he not a thousand ways,both outward and inward, to make up a little outward disadvantage to us? What doth our faith serve for? Have any ventured themselves upon him in his way but he made good every word of the promise to them? Let us therefore exercise our faith, and stay ourselves upon the promise, and see if ever we are ashamed of our hope.

What is wanting in the means God will make up in the blessing. This I take for a certain truth, while a man commits himself and his affairs to God and is in a way that God put him into, now if a man have but little income, if he have a great blessing, that's enough to make it up. We must not account mercies by the bulk. What if another have a pound to my ounce; if mine be gold for his silver I will never change with him.

As 'tis not bread that keeps men alive, but the word of blessing that proceedeth out of the mouth of God,so 'tis not the largeness of the means,but the blessing of the Lord that maketh rich. Oh! if men did but believe this they would not grasp so much of the world as they do.

Well, let others take their course, and we will take ours—to wait upon God by faith and prayer, and rest in his promise; and I am confident that is the way to be provided for. Let others toil to enlarge their income (but alas! they will find they go not the right way to work), we will bless God to enlarge our blessing,and I doubt not but we shall prove the gainers.—Joseph Alleine (1655),

GOD'S MEDICINE.

Labor is God's medicine for human pride and rebellion. When man had sinned, in order to prevent the utter demoralization of the race the Lord sent him forth out of Eden to till the ground, saying, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it thou wast taken: for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

It is the ambition of many to"live without work;" but such a life is ruinous. "Pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness,"were the chief causes of Sodom's sin and Sodom's overthrow. Many a man who has gone headlong to perdition might have been living in health and decency to-day if he had been well employed in good, honest work. Under all judicious administration, human and divine,hard labor has been a means of grace and reformation to those who without it go far astray from truth and righteousness. Let persons live in luxury with nothing to do and they are very likely to become conceited, rebellious and ungodly. Let them be placed where they must work or starve, and let their hearts be brought down with labor and they speedily learn lessons of humility, sympathy, and integrity, which can never be learned in idleness and luxury.

More men die of lsziness than of work; more of gluttony than of starvation. Hence the primal curse was a real blessing, and those who try to evade the divine command only multiply sorrows to themselves. Hence the apostle says:

"Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of us. For yourselves know how ye ought to imitate us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you; neither did we eat bread for nought at any man's hand, but in labor and travail, working night and day, that we might not burden any of you; not because we have not the right, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you that ye should imitate us. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any will not work neither let him eat. For we hear of some that walk among you disorderly, that work not at all but are busy-bodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort in the Lord Jesus Christ that with quietness they work and eat their own bread. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well doing. And if any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man that ye have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed. And yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." 2 Thess. 3:6-13.—Armory.

If we duly join faith and works in all our preaching, we shall not fail of a blessing. But of all preaching, what is usually called "Gospel preaching," is the most useless, if not the most mischievous; a dull, yea, or lively harangue on the sufferings of Christ, or salvation by faith, without strongly inculcating holiness. I see, more and more, that this naturally tends to drive holiness out of the world.

SAMUEL, THE CHILD MINISTER.

A SHORT SERMON FOR THE CHILDREN BY REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

I am going to talk to you, boys and girls, about this little minister; and I pray that the Lord may help me to speak so wisely that some of you, like Samuel, may begin to serve him.

First, let us think about the child minister. Samuel ministered before the Lord, being a child. No doubt Eli saw that the child was called of God. But even then he must have been a very kind and a very wise old man to let this little fellow come to help him in the house of the Lord when he was so young. Most people would have said, "What is the good of a little lad like that? What help can he be? He is not strong enough or big enough or wise enough to do anything. Let him stay at home, and let his mother take care of him till he is grown up. Then he will be of some good. But this child, he is too little to know anything about it." I think this story is put in the Bible to teach us that it is very foolish and very wrong to talk in this way. The child Samuel ministered unto the Lord, and so can you. Your little hands can serve him, and your young hearts can love him. Let nobody say you are too young. Jesus said something very different from that. He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And at another time Jesus said, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth,because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." So you see, Jesus would have you to love him now and serve him now. He would not have you wait till you are grown up. He wants children to minister to him. Samuel, though a child, was not too young to love Jesus.

"But what could this little child minister do?" you ask. "It was all very well for him to be with the old man, Eli, learning good lessons, and hearing God's Word, but of course he could not do anything." Oh, but he could. He did many things that were helpful, as we shall see by and by.

Little folks can do very many things. To begin with, nobody doubts that children can do much harm.

The other day there was a robbery near London. The people who lived in the house thought that they had guarded it securely; there were bolts on the doors and bars on the windows. But one morning the servants came down and found that all the silver things were gone. How had the thieves got in? Why, there was just one little tiny window, so small that they thought there was no danger in that; but in through that window the thieves had sent a little boy, and when he got inside he could open the door for the rest, and so all the mischief was done. They found then what harm little folks could do.

And then, too, people know that little things can do much good. Those of you who keep your eyes open—and I hope you all do—must have seen at the railway stations and at other places, a picture of a lion in a net, and a little mouse gnawing at the rope. And this is the story that it represents. A lion who was the great king of the forest had somehow got into a net,—I don't know how, but so it was. All the animals when they heard of it came to his majesty's help. The elephant came and walked round and round as majestically as it could, and looked very sad. The bear came and danced all about. The tiger came and roared very loudly indeed. But all that did not bring the king out of his trouble. Then came the hyænas an jackals and wolves, and they shook their heads very wisely, and said if only this were done, and that. But as no one could possibly do what they talked about, that didn't help very much. So it seemed that the great king of the forest must die thus miserably in a net. Then as the lion was sadly bemoaning his fate there came a little mouse, and said that if he might make so bold he thought he could set his majesty at liberty. It was very absurd in such a little thing to and do what the elephant and the great animals could not do. But the lion thought there could be no harm in his trying. So he crept up to the rope and began to gnaw at it. Strand after strand of the rope was bitten through by the sharp little teeth. It was a long and wearisome task, but the little teeth worked on. At last the rope was loosed, and when once it gave way it was an easy thing for the lion to get out, and the king of the forest was set at liberty by a little mouse. Such good little things can do.

But best of all is this, that little hands can do something for Jesus. Do not be wishing that you had this or that. Do not be waiting until you are grown up to be men and women. The child Samuel ministered unto the Lord. There were many little things that he could do. He could pour the oil into the lamp, he could keep the wick trimmed, he could keep the golden candlestick clean, and his little hands could put out the lights in it every night, and all day long he could wait upon the old man Eli, and he could think what he would want, and could help him in many ways. Are you thinking now, "What can I do for Jesus?" Well, you can always be kind for Jesus—gentle and loving. Kneel down to-day and ask Jesus to help you. Each one of us can always be brave and truthful and generous for him; and we can keep clean thoughts and truthful words and right ways for him. At sunrise Samuel perhaps had to draw aside the covering of the skins, and the sunlight came in flooding all the place with radiant light. So you can let joy and sunshine come into your house by trying to make those about you happy. And in doing that, you, like the child Samuel, will minister unto the Lord.

Here is a story of a child minister that will show you how very much children can do for Jesus. Little Annie Gale had given her heart to Jesus, and now all day long she wanted to be doing his will and pleasing him. But one morning her heart was very much grieved. A gentleman had called at her father's house, and he laughed at the notion of little Annie being converted. "She was always so good that she did not need it to make her any better," he said. "If old Dan Hunter began to love Jesus, now, I should think that there was something in it." Poor little Annie was very grieved; and going away to her room, she knelt down and said, "O Jesus, they won't believe that thou dost love me, because I am so little. O Jesus, help me to get poor old Dan Hunter to love thee, and they will believe that thou dost love me, too." Then little Annie set out for old Dan Hunter's house.

Now, there was no mistake about it, that old Dan was the very crossest and most disagreeable man in the village. He worked away in his wheelwright's yard, grumbling and growling all day long. No poor woman ever came into his yard to get some shavings for the fire, and no boy ever crept in there for a basket of chips. Nobody who could help it ever came to see old Dan. This morning he was at work bending at his saw, when a very pleasant little voice said, "Good morning, Dan."

The voice was so pleasant that Dan looked round and forgot to scowl. "Please, Dan," said little Annie, "I want to speak to you, and I'm sure you won't mind me, will you?"

Now it was so long since anybody had cared to speak to Dan at all that he couldn't understand what this little maiden could have to say, so he sat down his saw and rolled his apron round his waist, and sat down on the trunk of a tree. Really, for old Dan, he was looking quite pleased.

"Well, whatever do you want to say to me, little one," He spoke gruffly—he always did, but it was a good deal for old Dan to speak at all, for he generally only grunted.

Little Annie sat down by his side and looking up into his ragged, wrinkled face, she said, "Well, Dan, you know Jesus does love me, and I do love him. But the gentleman at home says that I am so little, and that I am so good, that he does not believe I know anything about it. But he says that if you would begin to love Jesus, then he would believe in it. Now, Dan, you will, won't you? because Jesus does love you, you know;"—and little Annie took hold of Dan's great rough hand. "He loves you very, very much, Dan. You know he died upon the cross for all of us."

Poor old Dan! Nobody had ever talked to him like that for years and years—never since his mother had gone to heaven. And down those wrinkled cheeks the tears began to come, very big and very fast. "Don't cry, Dan, because God loves us though we have sinned, and he has sent Jesus into the world to save us." Dan's heart was broken. He could only say, "God be merciful to me—the worst of sinners." As little Annie talked with him, he came to see it all,—how that Jesus had died for him, and was able to give him a clean heart and a right spirit. Little Annie left him praising God his heavenly Father for such wonderful love, and went away to tell the gentleman at her home.

"Now, sir," said she, "you must believe that Jesus loves me, because old Dan Hunter has really begun to love him, and he has got converted."

"Nonsense," laughed the gentleman. "Why, Annie, whoever told you that?"

"Well, you'll see." And he did,and so did everybody else in the place. They saw that old nipped, frowning face turned into joy and gladness. They saw the ill-tempered old Dan become so kind that everybody had a friend in him. And when he passed the yard you might be sure to hear a happy old man, as he worked with hammer and saw, cheerily singing about the wondrous love of Jesus.

So little Annie ministered unto the Lord.—Selected.

A TAP AT THE DOOR.

A hand tapped at my door, low down, low down.
I opened it and saw two eyes of brown,
Two lips of cherry red,
A little curly head,
A bonny, fairy sprite, in dress of white,
Who said, with lifted face: "Papa, good night!"

She climbed upon my knee, and kneeling there,
Lisped softly, solemnly, her little prayer;
Her meeting finger tips,
Her pure, sweet baby lips,
Carried my soul with hers, half unaware,
Into some clearer and diviner air.

I tried to lift again, but all in vain,
Of scientific thought the subtle chain;
So small, so small,
My learning all;
Though I could call each star, and tell its place,
My child's "Our Father" bridged the gulf of space.

I sat with folded hands, at rest, at rest,
Turning this solemn thought within my breast:
How faith would fade
If God had made
No children in this world—no baby age—
Only the prudent man or thoughtful sage;

Only the woman wise: no little arms
To clasp around our neck; no baby charms,
No loving care,
No sinless prayer,
No thrill of lisping song, no pattering feet,
No infant heart against our heart to beat.

Then, if a tiny hand, low down,
Tap at thy heart or door, ah! do not frown;
Bend low to meet
The little feet;
To clasp the clinging hand; the child will be Nearer to heaven than thee—nearer than thee.

TEMPERANCE.

FOREIGN INTEMPERANCE IN INDIA.

Miss Maria White, M. D., a medical missionary of the United Presbyterian church in India, sister of the famous temperance worker, Miss Narcissa White, writes an entertaining lecture to the Union Signal, in which she gives this incident:

"A prominent Methodist missionary has said, 'If the English speaking people were removed from India to-day, the most palpable indication of their existence in India would be the excessive drunkenness fastened upon the nation.' So many of the English officers and residents and English speaking travelers use liquor that a constant bad example is before the natives; this, added to the legalized liquor shops opened by the English government, can well account for the increased drunkenness of the people. A rather amusing incident occurred not long ago in connection with the service of an English missionary; or rather, it would be amusing were it not so painfully suggestive.

"The English missionary had been holding a very earnest service for the conversion of the heathen natives, and in the evening he decided to hold a special prayer service among the Christian people. But at the hour of service he discovered they had forgotten to bring with them their candle-sticks, and as a substitute the missionary put the lighted candle in an empty beer bottle. The missionary stood back of the candle and read the prayer, while the people knelt facing him and the beer bottle and gave the responses. At the conclusion it was noticed that a lot of the natives had gathered about the door and were much excited about something. The next day when the missionary attempted to speak to them about putting away their idols and worshiping God, the natives triumphantly replied: 'Last night we saw you worshiping a beer bottle, with lighted candles, just as we worship our gods. Then why ask us to forsake our gods and our form of worship?' And I fear it would be a difficult matter to convince those natives that, even if the English do not worship the beer bottle, some of the so-called Christian people do —worship its contents.

FIRMNESS OF SENATOR WILSON.

Senator Henry Wilson was a self-controlled as well as self-made man. He left his New Hampshire home early in life, and changed his name in order to get out from under the baleful shadow of intemperance. He began on the lowest round of the social ladder, and climbed up, rung by rung, until he became a political power in the nation.

The first step he took in the ascent placed him on the pledge never to drink intoxicating liquors. The second step he took made him an industrious laborer, the third a diligent reader.

He was sent to Washington to carry a petition against the admission of Texas into the Union. John Quincy Adams asked him to a dinner party, where he met with some of the great men of the nation. He was asked to drink wine. The temptation to lay aside his temperance principle for a moment, in order not to seem singular, was a strong one. But he resisted and declined the glass of wine. Mr. Adams commended him for his adherence to his conviction.

After Mr. Wilson was elected to the United States Senate he gave his friends a dinner at a noted Boston hotel. The table was set with not a wine-glass upon it.

"Where are the wine-glasses?" asked several, loud enough to remind their host that some of his guests did not like sitting down to a wineless dinner.

"Gentlemen," said Mr. Wilson, rising and speaking with a great deal of feeling, "you know my friendship for you and my obligations to you. Great as they are, they are not great enough to make me forget 'the rock whence I was hewn and the pit from whence I was dug.' Some of you know how the curse of intemperance overshadowed my youth. That I might escape I fled from my early surroundings and changed my name. For what I am, I am indebted under God to my temperance vow and my adherence to it.

"Call for what you want to eat, and if this hotel can provide it, it shall be forthcoming. But wines and liquors cannot come to this table with my consent because I will not spread in the path of another the snare from which I escaped."

Three rousing cheers showed the brave Senator that men admired the man who has the courage of his convictions.—The Christian.

Mrs. Lucas, of London, Miss Willard, of Chicago, and Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, of Philadelphia, have issued a circular asking Christian women everywhere to observe Nov. 12 and 13 as days of prayer for a divine blessing on every form of temperance work in the world.

The National Bureau of Statistics shows that on the $700,000,000 which annually passes into the tills of the retailers of intoxicating liquors in this country, there is a profit of 133¼ per cent. If poor people had to pay such a tax as that on bread there would be a rebellion. But when a man tosses off a glass of whisky, and pays five cents for the drink and seven or eight cents to the bar-keeper for the trouble of handing it to him, he generally thinks the bar-keeper is an awfully good fellow.—Springfield Union.

Judge Agnew, of Pennsylvania, in a letter on the subject of liquor compensation, writes: "I am personally opposed to a compensation clause. When canals superseded turnpikes, and railroads superseded canals, and hotel warehouses and other places of business on their routes were destroyed, no compensation has ever been made. When inventions and new modes of business have destroyed old trades and modes, compensation was not made. When a curse is destroyed it is difficult to perceive the justice of society's paying for it.

Switzerland has recently adopted by popular vote a new law placing the entire control of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the hands of the government. This measure was necessitated on account of extensive adulteration of spirits and the prevalence of intemperate habits among the people. The effect of the new law will be the production of a pure article, and, better yet, the restriction of its sale to those who will not use it to excess. Heretofore the production of artificial wines had been extensively carried on, and all forms of alcoholic spirits were adulterated. The result was the cheapening of liquors and widespread habits of intoxication among the poorer classes. The effects of the new law will be watched with great interest.

The New York brewers have determined to prevent, if possible, says the N. Y. Tribune, the renomination of all such legislators, either by having an opposition Republican favorable to the saloons nominated or by buying votes for the Democratic candidate. Particular efforts, of course, will be made to carry out this scheme here in New York, and a special effort is to be made to defeat Assemblyman Crosby, whose course at Albany has made him an object of fear and hatred to the beer and rum sellers. The money is to be raised by imposing a tax on every barrel of beer and ale sold in this State from May 1, 1886, to May 1, 1887; on every bushel of malt and bale of hops sold within the same period and a general tax of $100 on all brewers' supply men and kindred trades.

tions of surprise from the majority of the deluded occupants of the room were at the same time, to say the least, pitiable and disgusting. As I witnessed the amazing credulity of the poor souls, I could not resist giving (what I considered was my duty to do) a rational explanation of the pretended modus operandi in the making of that lace, whereupon one woman declared that she had seen them materialize a coat.

"Then," said I, "they would do well to make a lot of them for freezing children about the city."

She immediately collapsed, but the old man on my right, as a sort of reinforcement, savagely accused me of being a medium possessed with the spirit of a devil, who had come in to disturb the meeting.

"Yes," I humbly replied, "I am a medium, but," laying on all the emphasis I could command, "I am a medium of common sense."

Devil or no devil, my remark was responded to by half-suppressed laughter from different parts of the room, and the investigating chap, who seemed to be seriously concerned about my safety, asked in low tones:

"Do you expect to get out of here alive?"

I replied that I didn't know as I should. If they couldn't make me a spiritist, there was a possibility of their making me a spirit, and of the two I would prefer to be the latter, although I was not at all anxious for an opportunity of experimentally testing materialization.

The remarkable patience which my uncle manifested during the first part of the seance, at length began to abate. Doubtless the intervals between his inquiries concerning the presence of his wife grew annoyingly brief to the management. Finally, a spirit named A—— (his wife's name) was announced, and in an instant he was on his feet, striding towards the cabinet. He was doomed to disappointment. It was not his A——, but a friend of other parties in the room. Without a word, he quietly returned to his seat.

This incident, like a flash of lightning in the blackness of night, revealed the whole circumstance of my uncle meeting his wife at this place; and later, dumb acknowledgment on his part confirmed my suspicion. He had gone there with the sincere hope of meeting her, and was in that frame of mind which would lead him to foster and encourage the slightest evidence or indication of her presence. The first time he called at this place a spirit bearing the same name as his wife appeared. On hearing the name, in his impulsive way, probably, he claimed its owner as his wife, and the medium was shrewd enough to allow him to thus deceive himself and the audience even at the expense of disappointment to the real friends of the spirit.

At last, my aunt was announced as being present. This time my uncle remained in his seat, while the spirit of his wife advanced slowly toward him. She stopped just in front of him, and placed both hands on his shoulders, when he arose, embraced and caressed her. The next moment both vanished in the darkness.

When the spirit stopped before my uncle, I rose, and bending slightly forward, surveyed it from head to foot. There was no sign of recognition on her part of either my mother or myself. There was not the slightest resemblance between this spirit and my aunt. The difference, however, in every respect was marked. The spirit was tall and slender (very much like the medium) while my aunt, when living, had been short, under five feet, and exceeding heavy, tipping the scales at nearly two hundred pounds. This undeniable contrast was admitted by my uncle, who declared that we could not expect to recognize spirits by their bodies.

I replied that if it was possible for them to retain in the spirit body the blemishes of the natural, such as moles, etc., an instance of which we had just witnessed in the case of the old gentleman's daughter, I could not understand why they should change so greatly in size and height. He impatiently retorted that he didn't care whether the spirit looked like his wife or not, so long as it was her. Alas, no wonder that these mediums are so successful in their "phenomena," when their patrons are so anxious to see their spirit friends that they are willing to recognize anything. Indeed, any attempt of the spirit, even, to deny identity would meet resentment.

After the ecstasy and excitement of meeting with his wife had somewhat subsided, he remembered that he had noticed that the spirit had failed to recognize his sister, who had been her closest friend. He returned with the spirit on his arm and introduced it to my mother, or rather, mother to it, who, failing of course to identify a single feature or motion, received it somewhat coldly. The spirit intimated that it wished to converse with her nearer the cabinet. Perhaps it is important to add just here that the closer a spirit keeps to the medium the more strength it receives. A spirit which can cross an ordinary room is considered very strong.

Half pulled along by the spirit, mother disappeared in the blackness surrounding the cabinet. In a few seconds she hurriedly reappeared alone, and at the same time it was suddenly announced by the big female that the medium was prostrated because the lady (my mother) had refused to recognize her sister; that the current was broken, and the medium rendered unable to continue the seance.

Had a bomb exploded in our midst, excitement would only have been a few degrees greater. Expressions of chagrin and anger poured forth from every side. In the midst of it I stood up and said: "It is no wonder that the lady refused to recognize the spirit as her sister. It was about as much like her as——"

At this point I was compelled to stop, for my voice was completely drowned by the most unearthly hissing I ever heard. It seemed as though all the dead serpents in the universe were present. I was determined, however, to finish my speech. Waiting until there was a lull, I interjected:

"She looked about as much like my aunt as a stick of wood. Besides, she wouldn't come into such a place; she despised spiritism as she did poison. It was the means of her death, I believe."

The hissing continued, intermingled with threats, but I held my ground and kept on, fearless, or rather heedless, of the result, and I guess they got about all they wanted, at least the medium did, for she cried out:

"He means right! he means right!"

Having obtained this correct acknowledgment of my intentions from headquarters, I concluded to sit down, when the hissing lulled and finally ceased. The lights were turned up, and the seance declared ended.

Without heeding the sullen and sharp looks of the company, with a few remarks of regret that the meeting had so suddenly terminated, followed by my companions, I departed.

As we walked homeward, my mother related what had occurred between her and the spirit, which had so shocked the medium and shattered the connecting current. When they were enveloped in the darkness the spirit stopped, and putting its hands up to her face attempted to kiss her. She, however, declined to receive this expression of endearment, and said sharply, with her mouth close to the spirit's ear:

"You are not my sister. You are a humbug!"

In an instant the spirit vanished, and almost the next the big woman announced the prostration of the medium.

Instead of expressing anger at my spirited participation in the seance, my uncle in really sad tones asserted that I had broken up the meeting. This charge I denied. The sensitiveness of the spirit or the weakness of the medium was really the cause. There had been so many exposures made about that time that, doubtless, they suspected danger of becoming victims.

It may be that some ceased with the first installment to read this article, because its subject was seemingly somewhat foreign to the character of the Cynosure. Spiritism, like secretism, is a fruit of the works of darkness, and in its sphere is doing as much harm. Its sittings, etc., are as paganistic as any secret society initiation. They are conducted on the principle of secrecy, and the Cynosure would not deviate far from its legitimate course in showing up their deceptions occasionally. Fearing I might be crowding out more valuable matter each week from the Cynosure's columns, I have contributed this "Adventure among the Spirits" in small installments, thus, much against my desire, prolonging it beyond the editor's patience, I fear. D. P. Mathews.

Religious News.

—The committee on temperance, in its report to the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Orthodox Friends, at Richmond, referred to the fact that the liquor sellers throughout the country had become greatly disturbed in their minds about the active operations of temperance workers. A circular had been issued by the committee calling upon every friend of temperance to cast his vote for prohibition. It appeared that 134 Friends had used intoxicating beverages during the past year, one had sold liquors, forty-six sold tobacco, 1,009 had used it, and $9,000 had been spent by them for tobacco.

—At the meeting of the lay delegates of the Rock River Methodist Conference at Rockford, Ill., Friday, Miss Frances E. Willard was elected a delegate to the General Assembly, over D. M. Fowler of Chicago. The Chicago delegates, it is said, were not pleased at the result, and state that the election is not legal, as Miss Willard is not a layman. The government for the church does not say laity, but laymen. It is stated that the General Conference will not admit her to a seat in that body. When the conference met Friday, it was announced that Rev. William Augustus Smith, D. D., was dead. He was one of the best known preachers in the conference. He was pastor of Rockford Centennial church. His death was very sudden, and was caused by heart disease.

—The General Conference of the Swedish Evangelical Mission Church of North America met last week in Des Moines, Iowa, and was attended by about fifty pastors and representatives from all parts of the country. Among the prominent members were Rev. C. A. Bjork of Chicago, President of the conference; E G. Hjerpe of Galesburg, Secretary; P. Peterson, Emigrant Missionary of New York. The secretary reported twenty-five ministers engaged in work, over 150 congregations, and twenty-six theological students in the Swedish Department of the Chicago Theological Seminary.

—Rev. Wm. McDonald, the President of the National Holiness Association, has declined the honor of the title of Doctor of Divinity tendered to him by the Upper Iowa University. His chief reason is, as he conceives, its unscriptural character as seen by reference to Christ's injunction: "Be ye not called Rabbi," or Doctor, as scholars say.

—Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt writes that all the American missions in Burmah have incorporated total abstinence in their work.

—Last year the English Methodists spent nearly $200,000 on church property.

—The home Sunday-school of Mr. Spurgeon's church has 108 teachers, all members of the church, and 1,428 scholars. In all the schools connected with the Tabernacle, there are 7,677 scholars.

—The friends of Bishop Taylor's African missions, which are not supported by any missionary society, have, in the past eighteen months, contributed nearly $46,000 to maintain them, besides supplying $25,000 to build the Bishop's steel Congo steamer, which has cost $30,000. Many of the stations in Angola are now raising much of their food supplies and are thus largely self supporting. Seven missionaries have died, but seventy remain in active service. This does not include the children, of whom a considerable number are with their parents. Bishop Taylor is supposed to have joined the last party that left this country in Liberia, and to be now with them on the Congo, which they will leave before long to travel hundreds of miles up the Kassa affluent to the rich Baluba country.

Mechanical Massage. Principles and practice of remedial treatment by imparted motion. By Geo. H Taylor, M D., author of "Health by Exercise," etc. Pp. 173. Price 75 cts. John B. Alden, New York.

This work by the physician who has become justly celebrated as the first to introduce the Swedish Movement cure in this country shows how to use common mechanical power, which is abundant and cheap and everywhere attainable, to remedy the most difficult chronic diseases after other remedies have proved insufficient. Its chapters describe the adaptation of this remedial agent to indigestion in its worst forms, including obstinate constipation; to nervous diseases, neuralgia and paralysis; to rheumatism and to joint affections; to diseases of the kidneys; and the unrivalled remedial power it exercises in all forms of enfeebled vitality in persons of all ages. The work is written in plain language, though philosophical in thought, and is illustrated with cuts, rendering its subject clear and practical.

The American Magazine for October is a popular number, opening with an account of the ascent of Popocatapetl in Mexico, which is full of well-told incident and is happily illustrated. Of equal interest is "American Experiences in China" by C. B. Adams, which without being profound is sketchy, entertaining and puts us in the company with a quick and careful observer of the Chinese people. "The Washington National Monument" is an illustrated history of the erection of the highest artificial structure in the world, without any notice of the Masonic clap trap which was attempted at its beginning and completion. "Some Factors in Social Evolution" tells of the work of woman's clubs in Boston; Grant Allen describes the contents of his house with collections of artistic and literary value; and Z. L. White writes of "Pittsburg's Invisible Fuel."

In the October Words and Weapons Dr. Arthur T. Pierson writes an inspiring sketch of John Knox, the Scottish reformer. A searching sermon by Dr. Pentecost on "Actual Sin," is a feature of the number. Dr. Pentecost addresses a special request to the readers of the magazine for their prayers, thus: "The time is at hand when the fall and winter work is to begin. I venture, therefore, to ask an especial interest in the prayers of all my readers for the blessing of God upon my labors this winter. Even while you are reading these lines I shall have begun a series of union Gospel meetings under the auspices of the churches in Amesbury, Mass., where I expect to remain for six weeks. Thence I shall (D. V) go to Augusta, Me; thence to Lawrence, Mass. It will be a comfort to know that many Christians will be praying for the success of the work. My old friend, brother, and fellow laborer, Mr. Stebbins, also surrenders his position as chorister of my late church to go with me into this blessed work. For more than ten years we have wrought together, preaching Christ and singing the Gospel. I ask for him the same measure of Christian fellowship and prayers that I do for myself."

The American edition of the Illustrated London News for Oct. 1 contains a full page illustration of Miss Mary Anderson as Hermoine in "A Winter's Tale," pictures of the new Chinese naval squadron, and an illustrated article on English Exploration in Egypt, besides other articles of interest and pictures of merit. Dealers now furnish this noted periodical for ten cents a copy, and at the office of publication, 237 Potter Building, New York, subscriptions are received at very favorable rates.

LODGE NOTES.

The Veteran Union League has declined the invitation to parade at the reception of President Cleveland in Chicago.

A poem by Maurice Thompson, presenting an Address by an ex Rebel to the Grand Army of the Republic, is one of the features of the October American Magazine.

General Master Workman Powderly one year ago announced that the Knights of Labor had a grand total membership of 800,000. From a recent estimate about one half that number is reckoned as their actual strength.—Inter Ocean.

The latest compiled statistics of the Order of the Templar in the world show 770 subordinates, with a membership of 77,394 in the United States; and in Canada, England, Ireland, and Scotland 188 subordinates, with a membership of 5,530, or a grand total of 77,924 Knights Templar.

District Assembly No. 49, Knights of Labor, passed a resolution lately asking Governor Oglesby, of Illinois, to commute the sentence of the seven Chicago anarchists. They ordered the committee appointed some weeks ago to get names of sympathizers with the anarchists to hurry up, and also to pick up all the money they could get to aid the condemned men.

A gentleman from New Jersey has organized a temperance order of King's Sons, and calls upon all men, commercial travelers in particular, to show their colors and declare for King Manhood and against King Alcohol. It is formed on the "ten times one is ten" principle, and each member pledges himself "to drink no intoxicating liquors, and to try to get ten others to join the army."

The night of July 30 J. B. Wilson, a farmer of Henry county, Ill., fifteen miles east of Moline, mysteriously disappeared. His clothes, shoes, hat, watch and a small sum of money were found on the bank of Rock river, near Colona. The report was circulated that Wilson had been drowned, and application was made for the amount of his insurance—$3,000—in the Orion Lodge of the Modern Woodmen. By means of photographs detectives have traced Wilson to Canada, where he is now living under an alias.

John G. Jones is a lawyer of good repute, an estimable gentleman and a scholar, and up to Sept. 3 was an honored member of a number of Masonic lodges and orders. He was also exalted to the position of Grand Inspector General of the Thirty third Degree of the Supreme Council of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons This was all prior to Sept. 3. He is now only plain John Jones, without any degree, and the cause of his being shorn of his long and honorable title of G. I. G. of the T. T. D. of the S. C. of A. A. S. R. M was, he says, Joseph W. Moore. Mr. Moore had a longer title even than Mr. Jones, being the Most Worshipful Grand Master of the State Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons for the State of Illinois. He was, besides, the Right Worshipful Grand Secretary of the etc., etc. The ex Grand Inspector General, etc., claims that the Most Worshipful Grand Master, etc., wrongfully suspended him from his office in the lodge, and yesterday he went into the courts to seek reparation for his wounded honor. He instituted an action in the Circuit Court against Mr. Moore to recover $10,000 damages for the alleged uncalled for affront. [The above is from the Chicago Herald of Monday. It is probably part of the history of colored Masonry.]

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time"
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now"
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

Farm Notes.

COWS AND WHAT THEY GIVE US.

Our American dairy interests are startlingly enormous. They represent an investment of nearly five times as much as the entire bank capital of the country—that is to say, the bank capital is a little less than $671,000,000, while the dairy interests amount to more than $3,000,000,000. Of course our readers cannot swallow such frightful figures in a lump, and we will therefore arrange them in several smaller but still heroic doses. The number of milch cows is estimated at 21,000,000. They give each an average of 350 gallons of milk annually. This would make an aggregate milk production of 7,350,000,000 gallons, a miniature ocean, a fair-sized Niagara. Four thousand million gallons are used for butter, 700,000,000 for cheese, and the remaining 2,480,000,000 pass through the adulterating hands of the milkman and grocer, and down the throats of 60,000,000 men, women, and babies in this land of freedom. The quantity of butter manufactured and used is about 1,350,000,000 pounds, and of cheese 6,500,000 pounds. The value of our dairy products for the last twelve months was nearly $500,000,000. This is $20,000,000 more than the value of our annual wheat yield, while it closely approximates that of our corn crop, which is the most valuable of our farm products. To support this immense dairy herd 100,000,000 acres of pasture land are required, worth $2,500,000,000. It is easy enough to see, therefore, that the 400,000,000 farmers in this country are an important element of our national welfare and prosperity.—New York Herald.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

The Vanderbilt University, of Nashville, Tenn., announces a new departure that other colleges of the country would do well to follow. The Dean of the engineering department, Mr. Landreth, has issued circulars announcing that a class in highway construction is to be opened free of charge to one principal or deputy highway commissioner or other official from each county, the beneficiary to be appointed by the County Judge. The course of instruction will extend from Feb. 1 to April 1 and will consist of lectures and work on the economical location of highways to conform to conditions of topography and traffic, principles of construction of new and reconstruction of old roads, methods of drainage, simple highway structures, retaining walls, culverts, simple bridges; also practice in field sketching, platting, draughting, and computing estimates of cost. Tuition in manual technology at the Vanderbilt is free to all students; and now the opening of the class in road engineering to public officials charged with oversight of the highways is a step that is highly to be commended. The offer is not restricted to State lines, but limited only by the capacity of the institution.

The question of improved public roads is one of the most important in the entire realm of public economy. Road making is a science; and though not abstruse, yet some measure of study and practical training are essential to the thorough comprehension of the principles of construction that have been found by experience to be most economical and serviceable.

There is no country in the world, wherein the people are equally wealthy and intelligent, that has such abominably bad public roads as are found in the United States, and especially in the Western States. One reason is we have so much greater mileage to construct; but the principal trouble is cultivated brains and practical skill are not applied to the business of road making.

In some of the European countries the superintendence of public highways is intrusted only to specially trained expert government engineers. The roads are laid out, graded, and worked on a system based on well-established scientific principles. We shall have to adopt in this country some system of official oversight of the highways if we ever improve upon our present execrable wagon tracks.—Inter Ocean.

Start Incubators Early.—A contemporary advises those who are to use incubators next spring to purchase and put them in operation this fall. One cannot learn the methods of operating too soon. Nothing but experience will teach one to run them successfully, and experience comes much cheaper in September and October than five or six months later. If you do not care to raise a lot of fall chicks give them to some one who will care for them.

Renewing Old Trees.—According to the late Ben. Perley Poore—to whom was awarded a prize of $1,000 for the best plantation forest in Massachusetts—old fruit and forest trees can be renovated by digging a trench four feet in width and three feet deep around the tree. A ball of earth is left directly around the trunk of the tree, containing the main roots. In this trench put soil, with liberal allowances of manure, refuse from a blacksmith's forge and some potash, and have them all well mixed together. The effect will be to clothe the tree with the luxuriance and vigor of a young tree.

Dry the Potatoes.—Among the seasonable hints is that, after digging potatoes they should be allowed to dry thoroughly before removing to the storage bins. If dried in the shade it will be better than exposing them to the direct rays of the sun, and they should not be stored too soon after digging them, but be kept spread out for a few days.

Cleaning Wells.—Many farmers are almost criminally careless about cleaning wells, and their families often suffer in consequence from disease caused by the use of impure water. Some one has truly said that it is fortunate for many that the house well sometimes becomes dry, because it gives an opportunity for cleaning it thoroughly. If it has not been cleaned for two or three years, pump it dry and go at it. Any one will be surprised how much sediment a well accumulates even when its top is carefully guarded. Bad water is a great enemy to health and longevity.

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. Home and Health.

HOW TO ACT AT A FIRE.

In a lecture before the Society of Arts, London, Mr. A. W. C. Ghean gave the following concise and simple directions how to act on the occurrence of fires. Fire requires air; therefore, on its appearance every effort should be made to exclude air—shut all doors and windows. By this means fire may be confined to a single room for a sufficient period to enable all the inmates to be aroused and escape; but if the doors and windows are thrown open, the fanning of the wind and the draught will instantly cause the flames to increase with extraordinary rapidity. It must never be forgotten that the most precious moments are at the commencement of a fire, and not a single second of time should be lost in tackling it. In a room, a table cloth can be so used as to smother a large sheet of flame, and a cushion may serve to beat it out; a coat or anything similar may be used with an equally successful result. The great point is presence of mind—calmness in danger, action guided by reason and thought. In all large houses, buckets of water should be placed on every landing, a little salt being put into the water. Always endeavor to attack the bed of a fire; if you cannot extinguish a fire, shut the window, and be sure to shut the door when making good your retreat. A wet silk handkerchief tied over the eyes and nose will make breathing possible in the midst of much smoke, and a blanket wetted and wrapped around the body will enable a person to pass through a sheet of flame in comparative safety. Should a lady's dress catch fire, let the wearer at once lie down. Rolling may extinguish the fire, but if not, anything (woolen preferred) wrapped tightly round will effect the desired purpose. A burn becomes less painful the moment air is excluded from it. For simple burns, oil or the white of an egg can be used. One part of carbolic acid to six parts of olive oil is found to be invaluable in most cases, slight or severe, and the first layer of lint should not be removed till the cure is complete, but saturated by the application of fresh outer layers from time to time. Linen rag soaked in a mixture of equal parts of lime water and linseed oil also forms a good dressing. Common whiting is very good, applied wet and continually dampened with a sponge.

Every one has a cure for sore throat, but simple remedies appear to be most effectual. Salt and water is used by many as a gargle, but a little alum and honey dissolved in sage tea is better. An application of cloths wrung out of hot water and applied to the neck, changing as often as they begin to cool, has the most potency for removing inflammation of anything we ever tried. It should be kept up for a number of hours; during the evening is the usually most convenient time for applying this remedy.

PASTE THAT WILL KEEP A YEAR.

Dissolve a teaspoonful of alum in a quart of warm water. When cold stir in as much flour as will make it the consistency of thick cream, being particular to beat up all the lumps; stir in as much powdered resin as will staud on a dime, and add a few drops of oil of cloves to give it a pleasant odor. Have on the fire a teacupful of boiling water; pour the flour mixture into it, stirring well all the time. In a few minutes it will be like mush. Pour it into an earthen dish; let cool, and keep it in a cool place. When needed for use, take out a portion and soften with warm water.—Selected.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

Willow chairs and other furniture of that kind can be cleaned by scrubbing carefully with salt water, rinsing and rubbing dry.

A bag of hot salt or sand applied to an aching face or limb, is often a great relief. The rubber bags that can be filled with hot water and then the neck screwed up, are also a great convenience, especially in sickness.

Oil cloths will retain their freshness and last much longer if washed in tepid milk and water than if scoured with hot water and soap. A thin coat of varnish once or twice a year will make them more durable.

Keep your clock on time if possible, not too fast nor too slow. If the clock is ten minutes too fast and you are aware of it, the general tendency is to make double allowance for that. Especially is this important when trains are depended upon, where the loss of a minute may derange a day's plans.

FOREIGN.

Berlin dispatches announce a coming conference between Prince Bismarck and Signor Crispi, the Italian Prime Minister. The interview is regarded of supreme importance. It has especial reference to a renewal of the military convention between Italy, Austria and Germany. The alliance of the central powers with Italy on general policy was renewed for five years, but the military convention, for offensive and defensive purposes, covered only six months, from March last to September. Another question of special interest to the Italian Government will be the negotiations with the Vatican on the terms of a reconciliation. The interviews are diplomatic successes of Prince Bismarck, and must gall the French and Russian government.

Some months ago, in some notice of the profit-sharing system and its success in this country and Europe, it was noticed that the firm of Proctor & Gamble of Cincinnati, extensive manufacturers of soap and perfumery, had just adopted the plan. Last Thursday the firm paid its first semi-annual share of profits. It was a great day for the more than 200 employes. They received a 13½ per cent dividend of some $13,200. But they are probably not better pleased with the result than the firm itself.

The progress of President Cleveland from Washington to St. Paul has been an ovation of which a man of nobler record in private life and for great public services might well be proud. Were it not for a few leaders in the G. A. R., who have a reputation to maintain as political partisans, we should hardly know that there were Republicans or Democrats in the great crowds that have everywhere greeted the President's train. St. Louis may have surpassed in enthusiasm, but few cities in the world could have turned out upon their streets so many hundred thousand people as welcomed Mr. Cleveland in Chicago. The young mistress of the White House has everywhere been the chief attraction, though the crowd has several times been disappointed by the good sense which kept her off the streets. The President has undertaken a large task in this trip, and his views of the nation which has chosen him to high office should be dignified and enlarged by his contact with its people.

The election of Rev. Edward Anderson as chaplain of the Grand Army of the Republic at St. Louis does not suggest that the power of secretism is waning in the order. Anderson is a high Mason who, a few years ago, as pastor of a Congregational church in Quincy, preached in favor of this lodge and also attempted a halting eulogy of its three-ruffian theology in the State Congregational Association meeting at Princeton. The reports show that 25,220 members of the G. A. R. left it last year aside from the 3,400 deaths. This defection is hopeful since it is nearly one-third of the new members received (72,000), and the past year has been one of unusual activity in the order.

The total vote for prohibition in Tennessee will probably reach 125,000, the opposition reaching 140,000—much the largest vote ever polled in the State. The official count may slightly change these figures. In Texas also an immense vote was polled. The total figure is 351,207, 129,273 for, and 221,934 against the amendment. Add to the above prohibitory vote Michigan's 178,000, and we have a grand total of 432,000 voters in the three States who have declared for the absolute and perpetual prohibition of the liquor traffic. Ohio's vote a few years ago would put the figure well up toward 800,000. Oregon will decide the question in a few days, and though the result in three States this year will be a discouragement, let us hope for a triumph for the right. The work in Ohio has seemed to be checked by the failure of the amendment campaign. Let the States which have just voted learn a lesson, and never slacken their effort. In two years with determination and energy prohibition may again be taken up and grandly prevail in every one.

John B. Finch, chairman of the National Prohibition Committee, and head of the Good Templar lodges, died suddenly from heart disease last week Monday in Boston. He was accounted by his friends among the ablest speakers for prohibition, and was constantly engaged, his income from this source alone amounting to some $7,000 yearly. His body was brought to Evanston near this city and buried last Sabbath with Good Templar ceremonies. The meeting of the National Committee on the 30th of November next will have a new interest from this unexpected stroke of God, and should, along with the conference of the day following, be a constant subject of prayer, that heaven may overrule in the appointment of a successor, and rescue the reform now thrust into foremost place from the control of unholy and despotic methods of the lodge.

The Knights of Labor Convention in St. Paul last week excluded Joseph R. Buchanan, editor of the Labor Enquirer of this city. The reason given to the public was that he belonged to an assembly of the order which had not paid its dues. This is probably a reason for convenience. Buchanan has been one of the most determined abettors of the condemned anarchists. When in Denver a year or so ago it was said of him by the press there: "Buchanan is one of the worst enemies the laboring men of the West have ever known. His bad advice and selfish greed have cost the Knights of Labor of this State upwards of a million dollars in lost wages. He has openly advocated the use of dynamite as an agent for the coercion or destruction of capital, and of late he has in person and in his paper preached the disastrous doctrine of anarchy. There is no perceptible difference between him and such evil advisers and professional workingmen as Most, Spies, Fielden, Parsons and Schwab."

Dr. Stowe of the Methodist Book Concern, during the session of a conference at Des Moines, Iowa, made a statement of the financial condition of the publishing house and mentioned some of the difficulties which they had to meet and overcome. One of these was the labor lodges. "The printers," said he, "have a faculty of raising the price of composition occasionally, and when they do get ready to do so they simply send a note to the manager stating that they have concluded to make a raise on such a date, and hope it will be satisfactory to all concerned. No tyranny, no autocrat on the face of the earth, holds the grip that the printers' unions do." Dr. Stowe and all the Methodist leaders know that the printers' union and other secret orders of the same class get their inspiration from Freemasonry, and if the despotism of one is to be broken up the Methodist churches must begin to cleanse their altars of the other.

Conventions, clubs and bar associations of all parties in Chicago have one voice in asking for the re-election of Judge Joseph E. Gary, who presided last year in the trial of the anarchists. The Knights of Labor and other workmen's lodges have spoken only indirectly; but they are unanimous in denouncing the trial as unfair whether under Judge Gary or the Supreme Court. After this assumption of superior intelligence in the law, and of stricter integrity in their principles of justice, they will have in the future as in the past only condemnation for the just judge who presided so ably in the most renowned trial the world has for a long time known. The unanimous wish of all other classes for his re-election indicates sufficiently where the line should be drawn between the anarchists and their sympathizers.

The Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church includes the northern part of Illinois, and is always an important meeting. Last year the Conference, after some struggle, adopted a prohibitory resolution on the liquor question. The report of the committee on temperance this year shows a cheering progress, and a resolution was even adopted recommending the summission of a constitutional amendment to the people. With the late experience of Michigan, Texas and Tennessee before us let there be no hasty or rash advice followed in this matter. Illinois is not yet Kansas or Iowa in respect to the saloon. The conference had an animated discussion on the observance of the Sabbath, and adopted a resolution, expressing strong opposition to the running of Sunday trains and the publishing of Sunday newspapers. They are also against having Sunday notices published in such papers by the pastors and laymen who are Methodists, or advertising in them.

RELIGIOUS ACTIVITY IN BRITAIN.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The various denominations of this country have concluded their annual meetings and the prevailing feeling is one of hopefulness respecting the future. The tabulated results are not all that is desirable, but there is a vast amount of quiet, unostentatious, untabulated Christian work which is continually going on, the extent of which cannot be expressed by figures. There is work done in the Sabbath-school, by the temperance and educational institutions of the churches, together with a vast number of other agencies, which eludes the skill of the statistician, but which is of an important and enduring character. The results of true work must be weighed as well as counted before a correct estimate can be made. No religious organization can be said to have failed in the great purpose of its existence, if by means of its varied agencies it has intensified the faith, deepened the character and won human souls to a higher life.

One source of perplexity in this country is seen in the working of the home agencies, which are so numerous that they crowd upon the heels of each other and can hardly be sustained without interfering with each other's prosperity, and so fostering a spirit of proselytism. This is to be deplored, but cannot be helped till a closer bond of union exists between the different governing bodies. This evil has been repeatedly pointed out and lamented. We hope that steps will speedily be taken to remedy this state of things.

In foreign missions, where the agents have room for freedom of action, the work has been wonderfully successful, and the tabulated results are of a most encouraging kind.

Conventions are now being held for the purpose of making arrangements for the winter's work of the churches, and for the promotion of a fuller consecration to God's service. Prayer is being offered that the spirit of wisdom and of hallowed enthusiasm may rest upon the promoters and upon the bands of workers who shall engage in the conflicts of winning men from the degradation of sin to aspirations after purity and nobility of life.

Huddersfield, England, Sept., 1887.

ORGANIZED AND PLEDGED SECRECY, WRONG.

FROM THE ADDRESS OF ISAIAH FARIS, PASTOR OF REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF VERNON, WIS.

[Delivered at the State Association at Milton, Wis., Sept. 28, 1887, and published by request.]

God has endowed man with a capacity for keeping what he knows a secret within his own breast; and some things that we learn are better kept secret. We ought to exercise our reason and our conscience before we speak that we may tell only what will be for the good of others.

But to single out this faculty of concealing any part of our knowledge, and to cultivate it specially, is of dangerous tendency, just as it is to single out the principle of economy and cultivate that until it develops into the character of the miser; or that of self-protection until it transforms a man into a warlike savage. We need rather to cultivate openness, candor and honesty.

Cultivated secrecy gives the advantage to the worse elements of our natures. Organized secrecy gives the advantage to the worse class of men, and is inconsistent with the Christian duty of "walking in the light."

Besides, no one has a right to pledge himself to keep an unknown secret. Yet the very purpose for which, and the principle on which, all secret societies are organized, requires that the pledge to keep their secrets should be given before the secrets are divulged.

This may be illustrated in respect to the fraternity of Freemasons, by what they publish to the world in their own books:

"Declarations to be assented to by a candidate in an adjoining apartment, previous to initiation..... Do you seriously declare, upon your honor, before these gentlemen, that you will cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of the fraternity? I do."—Webb's Monitor.

John C. W. Bailey's "Dictionary of Freemasonry," under the heading of "Affirmation," to prove that an affirmation may not be admitted instead of an oath "in the workings of the lodge," uses this language:

"The Masonic society has no use of persons, who, at the very outset, falsify their declaration made in the ante room, 'that they will cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of the fraternity.' A candidate thus false to his own declarations presents no foundation upon which the society can build 'its future moral and Masonic edifices.'"

It will be seen that this promise must precede all knowledge of the secrets, or even of the character of the oath to be taken. How can a conscientious person pledge himself to what, for all he knows, may be unlawful in itself? So much for Freemasonry in particular.

But the same principle is found in all secret societies. What condemns this principle is that it gives the control of one man's conscience into the power of another. We are personally accountable to God for all that we do. We must, therefore, exercise our individual judgment as to the moral character of everything we propose to do; and we have no right to allow others to judge for us, and blindly follow their judgment. Yet, this we do, when we promise to keep a secret, of the lawfulness of keeping which we can have no other proof than what is derived from our confidence in the person to whom the promise is made.

This objection is not obviated by the assurance usually given in such cases, that, in the obligation to be assumed, "there is nothing that will conflict with the duties that you owe to your God, your country, your neighbor, or yourself." The person who gives such assurance presumes to judge for the other, as much as if he were to say, in so many words: "I know that, as an honest man, you may hesitate to assume an obligation whose moral character you have no opportunity to examine; but I will relieve you of the necessity of exercising your conscience in this case; I decide for you that the obligation you are about to assume is proper."

This objection holds against all secret societies, whether oath-bound or not. We have no right to promise to keep a secret which, for all we know, it may not be proper to keep, much less to swear to keep it.

It is no justification of such pledges that, in many cases, the secrets are found, when divulged, to be harmless in themselves, for this cannot be known till it is too late.

Again, the pledge of permanent secrecy debauches the conscience, and weakens the moral character. This must be evident in regard to the worse class of secret societies, where the fraternal feeling that grows out of the obligation to protect each other, prevents "good men" from exposing the crimes of their bad "brothers."

Not to dwell on the corrupting power of an obligation which, in many cases, compels a man to lie in order to avoid divulging the secrets, the following consideration will show the corrupting tendency of all such obligations: a properly trained conscience always inquires into the propriety and lawfulness of any course before entering on it; and will therefore hesitate about taking a pledge in any form, the full meaning and force of which is not understood at the time; but, if this hesitancy is once overcome, the moral character must be just so far weakened; and, in place of a good conscience, comes a false sense of honor, such as we see in Herod, who, "for his oath's sake, and for their sakes who sat with him," gave the order for the murder of John Baptist.

The less objectionable secret orders are a part of the system; and they are an essential part, to give the system efficiency as a power for debauching the consciences of men; for many tender consciences would be shocked by the obligations of some of the worse orders; but those associations which are organized for ends that are laudable in themselves, and that have only a little more than the name of secrecy, simply serve to grade down the evil, and make it practicable to draw into the secret methods, and hence to secure in the defense of the principle of organized secrecy men of such high character as could never be reached by the more objectionable orders. Thus the edge of the wedge is made very thin, but the wedge is there, and it is the same wedge in all secret organizations; and the person who has relaxed his conscientious scruples so far as to enter the least of them, finds himself logically bound to defend the whole system.

Thus conscience is debauched by degrees. If a person can only be prevailed on to take the first step by entering the least objectionable of the secret orders, finding that the secret amounts to nothing, he is led to say to himself, "How foolish I was to object to pledging myself to keep so harmless a secret!" He is then prepared to take another step; and if, in the second instance, he finds the secret not just so harmless as in the first, his conscience is much less shocked than it would have been if he had taken the second step first. By degrees his conscience becomes so lax that he does not hesitate to make any promise, or to take any oath, accompanied by any penalty which the spirit of lodgery may devise.

It is the natural tendency of the system to increase the objectionable features at every step.

We can keep a secret ourselves, but cannot be sure that another will. Hence, if we reveal it, we want to bind others to keep it. For this reason the promise of secrecy is exacted; and, because a promise is not strong enough, the next step is to confirm it by an oath; and, then, the oath must be fortified by a penalty, which must be increased in every new degree, as the obligation is supposed to be strong in proportion as the penalty is severe. The effect of the whole system, beginning as it does with the barest promise to keep some trifling secret, and developing into an oath-bound order, "protected" by terrible penalties, is to familiarize the mind with what is horrible, and thus to breed crime, as it affords the opportunity also to conceal it. Human depravity needs no such incentives to criminality, and a system that furnishes them ought not to have the encouragement that the fellowship of respectable men gives to secret societies.

There is a remarkable analogy between secretism in the moral world, and the alcoholic principle in the physical. Each has a certain basis in the nature of things as constituted by the Creator, and yet each has some relation to possible evil. Alcohol is a natural development of a process in nature, but it is connected with decay, and seems intended to arrest its progress at a certain stage, and prevent its going too far, or proceeding too rapidly. So God has endowed the human mind with a capacity for secrecy, which would seem to be unnecessary except in view of possible moral evil, as a means of preventing it, or of arresting its progress. But this principle is perverted when, instead of keeping in our own breast things that are calculated to do harm if known, we organize a society for the sake of keeping things secret under pledge, instead of leaving every man to his God-given right of conscientiously deciding for himself what he ought to conceal, and what he may reveal; just as the alcoholic principle in nature is perverted when this substance, that the Creator has provided to arrest the progress of decay at a certain point, is introduced into the stomach so as to cultivate a taste for it, which taste, when once acquired, becomes stronger and stronger and finally swallows up all natural appetite, and becomes the controlling principle in both body and mind. So the principle of secrecy, if cultivated, becomes stronger and stronger, and instead of being a prevention of moral evil, or a means of keeping it in check, becomes, on the contrary, a most powerful means of promoting and fostering all kinds of evil, and an engine of Satan for defending all wickedness. How strange it is that men who are anxious to put down the liquor traffic should be so blind as to undertake to do so by fostering a principle that is so nearly akin to the evil they wish to abolish!

The Scripture texts that are relied on to justify secrecy will be found, upon examination, to fail entirely for that purpose when applied to any organization based on a pledge of permanent secrecy. The usual argument from the "secrets" of the family" is alike unfounded, since the family is not organized as a secret society, nor is any pledge necessary to keeping the secrets of a decent family.

Christians should remember that Christ says of them, "Ye are the light of the world," and of himself, "In secret have I said nothing." And, if Christ seemed to tell to his disciples secrets that he kept from the world, the effect of this as an argument for secrecy on our part is entirely neutralized by his direction to them not to keep them as secrets. Matt. 10: 27: "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops."

DOES FREEMASONRY PROPOSE TO SAVE MEN?

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Does Masonry, without any Bible, without any Christ, propose to save men? If it does, then it is a dangerous foe of Christianity. We may begin with Sickel's Ahiman Rezon or Freemason's Guide, page 71. It says: "Masons are called moral builders. In their rituals they declare emphatically, that a more noble and glorious purpose than squaring stones and hewing timbers is their's—fitting immortal nature for that spiritual building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Then the mission of Masonry seems to be to save its votaries. Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 88: "In the investigation of the true meaning of every Masonic symbol and allegory, we must be governed by the single principle that the whole design of Freemasonry as a speculative science is the investigation of divine truth. To this great object everything is subsidiary. The Mason is, from the moment of his initiation as an Entered Apprentice, to the time at which he receives the full fruition of Masonic light, an investigator—a laborer in the quarry and the Temple—whose reward is to be Truth, and all the ceremonies and traditions of the order tend to this ultimate design."

Does Masonry claim a regeneration or a new birth? On pages 22–24 of Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, we read of the candidate: "There he stands without our portals on the threshold of this new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness, and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors and covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, he comes inquiringly to our doors, seeking the new birth, and asking a withdrawal of the vail which conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight. The world is left behind—the chains of error and ignorance which had previously restrained the candidate in moral and intellectual captivity are to be broken—the portal of the Temple has been thrown widely open, and Masonry stands before the neophyte in all the glory of its form and beauty, to be fully revealed to him, however, only when the new birth has been completely accomplished. The shock of entrance is, then, the symbol of the disruption of the candidate from the ties of the world, and his introduction into the life of Masonry. It is the symbol of the agonies of the first death and the throes of the new birth."

How does Freemasonry propose to do all of that? We can see how the atoning power of the Lord Jesus Christ can wash away our sins and bring us into favor with God but how does this system save souls? Webb's Monitor, page 21: "The Common Gavel is an instrument made use of by operative Masons, to break off the corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builder's use; but we, as free and accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our minds and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our bodies, as living stones, for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Also see Sickel's Ahiman Rezon, page 70; Sickel's Monitor, pages 34 and 35; Mackey's Ritualist, page 39; Manual of the Lodge, page 35; and many other works.

The lodge is governed by the gavel, therefore, if you obey the behests of Masonry it will land you safe in heaven; is that it? Oliver's Signs and Symbols of Freemasonry, by Dr. Oliver, the great English writer, page 41: "But in the third degree, the veil is removed; we are admitted into the Holy of Holies; we view the cherubim in all their brightness; and are blessed with a foretaste of heaven, through the resurrection of the dead." And again, on pages 97 and 98 of Sickel's Lodge Monitor: "We now find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added to ensure him of the protection of Deity; and guard him against ever going astray. These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole; nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more, which the soul of man requires." Then on page 16 of Mackey's Masonic Lexicon: "Acacian: A term derived from 'innocence,' and signifying a Mason, who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin."

Does Christianity or the Bible promise any more than this system? Thus Freemasonry not only proposes to save a man from sin and save him completely, but it proposes to keep him saved. No Christ, no Bible, anything for a god; was there ever such a mock at Bible religion or travesty on human redemption? Our preacher is a consistent Mason, then, when he says he will leave the church before he will leave the lodge.

AURICULAR CONFESSION.

"John, my son, early this week I gave you special instructions not to bathe in the river, believing that you would obey me; but I knew that peculiar temptations would urge you to disobey me—such as the natural frailty of humanity, your inclination to avail yourself of a healthful and refreshing recreation, the persuasions of your playmates, the shortness of your memory, and your hatred of restraint; and I have hesitated to ask whether you have been able to obey me or not."

"Your fears, father, were well-founded; but I claim exemption from any further consideration of the subject. It is a disagreeable one, and I prefer to say no more about it."

"But, John, in disobeying my orders you have not only grieved and offended me, but have rendered yourself liable to severe punishment. Have you no fear of my anger or respect for my authority?"

"Why should I fear your anger? I certainly respect you as your child; but with all your sense of my wrong-doing, you will be unjust and cruel if you punish me, although you have the power to do it."

"John, you astonish me! First, you disobey a positive command, either willfully or thoughtlessly, and when I would rebuke you for it, you deny my right to investigate your act and your motives for disobedience, or to punish you. Have you no filial affection, no sense of right and wrong, no dread of doing evil, no fear of my authority, that you thus defy me?"

"Father, you mistake my position in this matter. I have the utmost respect for you—I honor you at all times, in all places, and under all circumstances, except in this instance, about which no more need be said."

"Well, well! This is the strangest doctrine I ever heard; and I heartily wish that you may satisfactorily explain your motives and the basis upon which your remarkable conduct is founded."

"I will. Overcome by one or more of the temptations to which I was exposed, I did bathe in the river. My conscience troubled me, for I remembered your orders after I had broken them. What could I do? I knew not where to find you. So I went to Billy, the coachman, told him how I had disobeyed you, and asked him to forgive me, in your name, for my wrong-doing. He said he did forgive me, for you, and demanded twenty-five cents for his trouble; so you see, father, there need be nothing further said upon the subject. The whole affair is settled."

"Is it, wicked boy? I know it is well to confess our faults one to another, but by what authority could the coachman absolve you for sinning against me? Had you come to me as promptly as you went to him, and made your confession in humility and penitence, I should, probably, have forgiven you; and that would have canceled the wrong so far as you and I are concerned. You would have had to settle it with your Creator, as you will now, but he, too, is merciful to the penitent. You would, in pursuing the course I have outlined, have saved your peace of mind, your money, and the whipping you are now to receive for disobedience and defying my right to correct you. Retire to your room."

This conversation will serve to illustrate the folly and wickedness of auricular confession. "Billy, the coachman," occupies too important a place in an affair with which he has no connection. He undertakes too much. It was easy to say to John, "I absolve you," and take his quarter-dollar, but Billy had nothing to forgive, either for himself or John's father. He had not been wronged. He had no authority to forgive the wrong done to the boy's parent. He had been guilty, himself, of wronging his master that very day, by selling a peck of his oats and retaining the money he received. What could he forgive, with that sin upon his conscience? In the Catholic church both John and Billy might have gone to a priest, confessed their respective misdeeds, and for a little money have bought pardon and silence. John might then have gone again and bathed in the river; Billy could have stolen more of his master's oats, and both could have gone again to the priest for absolution, receiving it on the usual terms. This is the regular routine prescribed for the devout Catholic.

This system of auricular confession and absolution by a person who has no interest in the misdemeanor beyond his fees, is absurd, but not a farce. It is a crime. It is obtaining money under false pretenses; robbing the poor, and cheating them out of their souls by exciting in them false hopes of salvation without repentance; instigating them to go on in sin in the expectation of further forgiveness, upon the payment of more money to the priest, and encouraging crime by the obligatory silence of the father confessor.

The tendency of the system is to aggrandize the priesthood, by making it a substitute for God, who only has power to forgive sin. The truly penitent is taught that it is enough to confess his sin to a priest and do penance; that direct confession to God, without the intervention of a priest, would be useless; and thus the glorious invitation of the Gospel: "Whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely," is sullied with a lie and priestly extortion.

Under this pernicious system the ends of justice are practically thwarted. The devout Catholic may rob and murder his victim, then go and make a confidant of the priest, pay his fee, do his penance, and go away joyful because he is absolved and shielded by the secrecy of the confessional. In the breast of every father confessor in every land are secret clues to crime for which detectives would liberally pay. The hiding of these "pointers" by the priesthood makes it a participator in crime, with the advantage of escaping molestation, though the perpetrator be strangled.

In all the Bible there is one instance only of a sinner going to confess his sin to priests, and he hardly expected absolution from them for his terrible crime against the Lord. He dared not go to the Lord for forgiveness, and the priests knew that they were as guilty as this unhappy man. They did not offer to forgive him, although they took his money and appropriated it to a work of charity. This sinner was Judas Iscariot, and the whole account is given us in Matthew's Gospel—the saddest story of human weakness in the records of our race.

I had written thus far when I received a letter from a well-known reformed Roman Catholic priest—the best authority in the world:

"The main part of the absolution priestly formula consists in the following: 'In quantum possum et tu indiges, Ego te absolvo a peccatis tuis, in nomine Patris, and Filii, and Spiritus Sancti. Amen.' Then he (priest) prays that the merits of the Virgin Mary and of all the saints be applied to the penitent's soul. What a blasphemy! What an insult to Christ's sacrifice, which was offered 'once for all,' as is plainly declared by Paul to the Hebrews! . . . I am glad I am out of the devilish system of Rome." Amen!

OLD AMERICAN.

The Germans of Philadelphia have formed an organization for the purpose of securing the repeal of all laws in this State relating to the Sabbath. They propose sending men to the Legislature who will, when elected, pass laws to repeal our Sabbath laws. They claim a membership of from 30,000 to 40,000 in this anti-Sabbath organization. Friends of the Sabbath will do well to know the views of candidates for legislative honors on this vital issue before voting at the next State election. They will need to be watchful against these enemies of Sabbath sanctification. Let the present excellent laws respecting the Sabbath be repealed through the votes of our Legislature and it would be hard to have them re-enacted. If Germans do not like our institutions, and among the most potent for good, our Sabbath laws, they are free to go back to Fatherland. So long as they remain here they should be taught that to the Sabbath we owe much of our moral and material wealth and prosperity in Pennsylvania. They have no right to come here and overthrow that Christian institution, the Sabbath, or anything else to which we owe our rapid growth as a nation in wealth, virtue and intelligence.—Sandy Lake, Pa., News.

STRIKE.

Up the hill-side, down the glen,
Rouse the sleeping citizen;
Summon out the might of men!

Like a lion growling low,—
Like a night-storm rising slow,—
Like the tread of unseen foe,—

It is coming,—it is nigh!
Stand your homes and altars by;
On your own free thresholds die.

Clang the bells in all your spires;
On the grey hills of your sires
Fling to heaven your signal fires.

O for God and duty stand,
Heart to heart and hand to hand,
Round the old graves of the land.

Perish party—perish clan;
Strike together while ye can,
Like the arm of one strong man.

—Whittier.

THE "BALD KNOBBERS."

We have been having most troublesome times in our county of late. The members of the secret organization known as "Bald Knobbers" have been busy trying to enforce the law! With this end in view they have met from time to time in the woods after dark to decide upon future action. They have been known to go to homes at the dead of night, and take from their beds those who by act or testimony had opposed them in any way. This had been done so often that the settlers living south of us a few miles were in constant dread of these devils in human shape. The organization was secret and bound together under a fearful obligation or oath. Many who were members had joined without thought as to its ultimate aim. Others were members for self-protection. Their work culminated a short time ago in a terrible murder. A number of the band met one dark night, and after a full discussion of the matter, decided they would visit a family who had lately moved into our county from the north, whose outspoken condemnation of their course aroused their spite. About eighteen of the band made the raid. Surrounding the house in which the family resided, they entered from both sides, shooting down two of the young men, also striking the old gray-headed father with an ax and leaving him for dead. This last act roused the people to action. Twenty-four of those thought to have been engaged in the murder were promptly arrested. These are held for the action of a special Grand Jury.

The jury are now in session. I was told this afternoon that they had already found 300 indictments, eighteen of these for murder in the first degree. This will now, we hope, put a stop to this dreadful work and counteract to some extent the influence they have had for evil.

Many young men who were in the organization, and were present on the night of the murder, were led ignorantly to the crime for which they are now held. Among those under arrest is a preacher of —— church; several of them are church members. The whole matter has caused quite a sensation. This trouble proves to us that this people need the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ preached to them. It is the only true remedy for ignorance and sin here in the country, as also in Chicago and other large cities of our land. May fellow-Christians of our churches feel their obligations to those who are at work on such fields. It is our glorious privilege to preach Christ to such, and if we live up to our calling in Christ, we must preach or send by our means a substitute. How can this better be done than by giving the needed means to the American Home Missionary Society, which will commission willing and earnest workers for such fields.—J. D. Wherland, Ozark, Mo., in the Home Missionary.

JUDGE BLACK ON GIRARD'S WILL.—The late Judge J. S. Black, says the Presbyterian, had an emphatic way of expressing his sentiments which left no doubt for what he meant. He once put on record his views on the unchristian feature in the will of Stephen Girard. The letter which was addressed to Rev. Dr. Niles, of York, Pa., has lately been made public and here are a few sentences: "Girard excluded Christianity to a fundamental statute—made it an offence for one of its ministers to come within the walls, or even on the grounds of his college. It is a monumental declaration that the religion of the New Testament, as taught by its professors, is pernicious in its influence on the minds of men. To proclaim this falsehood the accumulated millions of his thrifty life were expended on a building which, by its magnitude and the pomp of its architecture, overshadows all that is near it. The enormous structure, 'like a tall bully, lifts its head and lies.'"

THE WISCONSIN MEETING.

REPORT FROM THE SECRETARY.

Milton, Wis., 9-30-'87.

Dear Cynosure:—The Wisconsin Christian Anti-secret Association assembled for the fifteenth annual convention in Goodrich Hall in this place, Sept. 28th. We have had an interesting meeting and many feel that they have been instructed greatly to their benefit.

I. R. B. Arnold's lectures and pictorial illustrations on ancient mythology, showing the relation of Masonry to ancient sun-worship and Baalism, drew full houses and aided much in making the reasons for the existence of the N. C. A. and auxiliaries better understood,and the importance of their work was conceded by those Christians present who had no very clear conception of the justice of our cause.

The relation of secret societies to the temperance reform was discussed at one of the sessions with true Christian concern for the cause of prohibition, and resulted in the unanimous and hearty adoption of the following resolution, with instruction to the secretary to send a copy to Miss Willard:

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the W. C. T. U. in its work of education and reform, and approve of the open and Christian methods hitherto employed, and that we should deeply regret any concession of its open, honorable methods to secure the favor, or form an alliance with the Knights of Labor, Good Templars, or any other department of the secret lodge system.

Also a committee of five was appointed to attend the meeting of the National Prohibition committee, called by John B. Finch to assemble in Chicago Dec. 1st.; said delegation instructed to work for the nomination of candidates who are free from all connection with secret societies.

Also the following with reference to the minor secret orders was discussed with much interest and unanimously approved:

Resolved, That we regard the Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, Knights of Labor, G. A. R., and other so-called minor secret orders, as feeders and stepping stones to the greater and graver oath-bound fraternities, such as Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc., and hence they should be dispensed with in moral and political work.

Resolutions reaffirming our confidence and faith in the Christian Cynosure and N. C. Association platform of principles were also passed and we separated feeling that the anti-secret reform is of God and therefore it cannot fail, but triumph it surely will.

Mrs. M. M. Ames,
Secretary pro tem.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

INCIDENTS OF THE GOOD MEETING AT MINNEAPOLIS.

The State meeting just closed in Minneapolis may be called the revival of anti-lodge work and interest in Minnesota. It was a convention strong in prayer, Christian experience and council. Professor E. G. Paine presided with his accustomed deliberation and fairness, and the discussions took in a wide range of reform topics, calling out brief and spirited speeches from Revs. M. A. Gault, A. C. Hand, C. F. Hawley, Wm. Fenton, W. W. Ames, C. F. Trabert, R. J. Williams, Porter, W. W. Satterlee, and Elwood Hansen, Bro. Morrell and others, more notably on prohibition and the secret lodge system. Rev. P. Sjoblom and some others were obliged to leave before the last session, but the interest was so great that a necessity to get street car accommodations only secured an adjournment at 10:30 p. m.

Bro. E. Hanson, who had acted with Bro. Fenton on local committee of arrangements, has seen twelve degrees of the inside iniquities of Freemasonry, and when enlightend by the Spirit felt constrained to allude to the subject in a sermon in a way that was distasteful to his brethren of the mystic order. It soon transpired that accusations were brought against him, and his ministerial standing attacked through the instrumentality of the Society of Friends, to which he belonged; and, as I understand, the case is still pending under an appeal from the local to the yearly meeting of Friends to which Bro. Hanson belongs. I do not profess to know the full merits of this case, but as I gathered up some of the details I was reminded of the case of President White in Perdue University, Indiana, and Pres. J. Blanchard in Wheaton College, and his ecclesiastical connections, and of the crafty monkey, the hot chestnuts and the tortured cat in the fable.

It was my first meeting with Bro. Hanson, but every impression was favorable and I hope to see him a power for good in the cause of reform. He related his experience in a very simple, touching way, and stated his conviction that God had called him to give a portion of his time to the work of warning his fellows against what he believed to be "evil, and only evil, and that continually." The convention most heartily concurred with him in this conviction and the matter of his employment as lecturer by the Minnesota State Christian Association was referred to the executive committee with favorable recommendations.

I do not wish to supersede a full report by the secretary, but am constrained to mention an incident to show how prompt and firmly Bro. Hanson met the opposition. There was liberty given for questions and remarks during the last session. The old question of "perjury" was raised by a Royal Arch Mason, and Bro. H. replied, saying, "We have taken the same obligations," etc., and then demonstrated that the violation of such an oath could be neither legal or moral perjury. The city papers took note of the fact and of Bro. Hanson's lodge relations and in the usual style classed him with "long-haired cranks," "impracticable fanatics," etc.

In looking back over the record of the meeting I am constrained to offer thanksgiving to God for his blessing and to take new courage for the future. The attendance was not all that it should have been, and preliminary advertisement was defective, but the brethren did what they could and resolved on better and more thorough work in this than in any previous year. J. P. Stoddard.

THE MINNESOTA STATE CONVENTION.

The light almost under the bushel—Some happy surprises —The men of the meeting—A dream that should not be all a dream.

After giving four lectures at Knapp, Wis., I ran up Wednesday A. M. to look in upon the Minnesota anti-secret convention at Minneapolis. I had forgotten where it was to meet, and after looking over the daily papers and failing to find any notice of it, I inquired at different hotels and of policemen, but no one had heard of it. I scrutinized bulletin boards and places where posters were put up, but could get no clue. Being a stranger in the city, I began to feel alarmed lest I might fail to find the brethren. I went at last to the Y. M. C. A. Rooms,and was gratified to find the Assistant Secretary to be F. E. Harrington,from whom I had once received a letter inquiring about our National Reform literature. He was quite surprised to hear that the State convention of the Minnesota Christian Association was in session somewhere in the city—a work in which he would gladly have cooperated, and yet he had heard nothing of it. He had the Cynosure on file, but had not noticed the announcement. We hunted up the Cynosure, and were glad to find where the good brethren were assembled.

Getting on board the motor cars,we rode two miles, getting out at Chestnut Hall, corner 26th street and Nicollet avenue. In the chair was the dignified and scholarly Prof. E. G. Paine, of Wasioja Wesleyan Methodist Seminary. The secretary was a man of fine intellectual mould, Rev. W. W. Ames, of Monomonie, Wis. There was the familiar form of Secretary J. P. Stoddard, his shoulders somewhat bent under the weight of seventeen years constant toil in the work. Near him sat the Iowa State lecturer, Bro. C. F. Hawley, in excellent physical condition. I was agreeably surprised to see and hear again the Rev. W. W. Satterlee, who impressed us at Lake Bluff last summer with his fine speech in defense of the Jericho Robbers. He is a strong M. E. pastor, and was in sympathy with the convention. Rev. Wm. Fenton of St. Paul, a Baptist minister, was also a power in the convention; so was an aged Wesleyan minister and his wife, bowed under the weight of many battles for reform, but whose names I have forgotten. Bro. Elwood Hanson, who was active in arranging for the convention, impressed us as a truly devoted man, and sacrificed much for our comfort.

The hall was neat and comfortable; a fine picture of John P. St. John hung over the rostrum. It was the place where a Prohibition club, headed by Bro. W. W. Satterlee, held regular meetings. One of the city pastors, C. H. Trabert, of the Evangelical Lutheran church, took much interest. But as might be expected the attendance was small, little or no effort being made to reach the people.

In sleeping over the matter last night I had this dream, and was sorry that it was only a dream. I thought Bro. Hawley spent several weeks in working up this convention, securing notices of it in all the local papers, and in all the church papers favorable to the reform, speaking at all surrounding points where he could find an open door, and keeping the convention before the people. I thought he had a nicely arranged programme which he had mailed two weeks before the convention to all the pastors in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and to all the Wesleyan, United Presbyterian, and Covenanter pastors in the State. The programme covered all the relations which the secret lodge system has to the Sabbath reform, temperance reform, and divorce reform. The leaders in these discussions gave short, pointed speeches, containing their best thoughts. A well digested series of resolutions were published beforehand, and put into the hands of each one in the audience. The greater part of the time was devoted to general discussion, in which all had an opportunity of giving their best thoughts. The whole business was carefully planned beforehand. There were no long-winded speeches, occupying an hour or an hour and a half, when the speaker could have said all he did say in one-third of the time if his thoughts had been boiled down. There were no good brethren aching to give some words of testimony or experience, but denied the opportunity, as at the Chicago Congress last spring. The whole convention was a closely-packed, varied, pointed, soul-stirring argument against the lodge system, at which one could have filled a note book with bristling points. Of course in my dream I saw a large audience packing a hall, and adjourning with difficulty at the noon hour. How could such instrumentalities fail to secure a large audience?

As I once heard Prof. C. A. Blanchard remark, this convention work is like University work. It has a wonderfully educating power; but, oh! what wisdom and thoughtful planning are necessary to properly utilize its forces, and bring out its possibilities. There was force enough at the Minneapolis Convention to have rocked the entire city, if it could have properly been brought to bear. M. A. Gault.

GIRD UP, OHIO.

STATE CONVENTION TIME COMES ON.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1887.

Dear Cynosure—I once heard of an old lady who had lived none too good a life, on coming as she supposed to her death-bed, exclaiming in a very excited manner, "Good Lord; good devil. Good Lord; good devil." Being asked her reason for this strange procedure, she replied, "I do not know into whose hands I will fall and I wish to be on good terms with both parties."

Every reformer who has been at all observant knows that the world is burdened with a class of individuals who, while not adopting the language of the old lady, act on the same principle. The prohibition orator describes such as lacking in the moral vertebræ. They generally have good intentions, but are wanting in moral or any other kind of force, their seeming goodness frequently causing them to yield their better judgment. Such hinder the advancement of Christ's kingdom more than any other class. The individual or the church that lives a spiritual life must advance. Their warfare on sin must not be simply defensive but aggressive. It is not enough for me to take a stand for the right, but I should give my neighbors my reasons for taking such a stand.

Why do I write thus?

Because we are soon to have a State convention, in which we desire the united force of every church, and every man and woman who are at heart opposed to the Christ-excluding, man-debasing lodge; in favor of the perpetuation of our free government and the exaltation of Christ to his right position in the hearts and governments of men.

To-day the United Brethren church is going through a struggle which threatens to rend it from center to circumference; and why? Because a large number had not the moral courage to be aggressive in reform. The founders of that body as men of God did not simply "preach Christ" in a general kind of a way, but endeavored to make the divine teachings practical to the age. Seeing the lodge was evil in its nature and tendencies, they did not adopt a system of license or taxation, but the God-given "Thou shalt not." In their constitution they said, "There shall be no connection with secret societies." For this principle with others they labored and prayed; gave their money and energies to convert sinners, build churches and schools for those converted. God blessed his truth. The church prospered. The fathers died rejoicing in the fruit of their labor. The children take their places. Do they build on the foundations which their fathers laid? Ah, no! Many, alas, rejoice in the fruit of their fathers' labor. "Is not this great Babylon on which I have builded," said one. They covet the world, and are taking the flesh and the devil to get it. Where did their trouble commence? I reply: In not aggressively advocating their principles. Many of the preachers, instead of giving the people reasons for their position as a church, would preach from one year's end to the other without mentioning the lodge, unless it was to sympathize with some one seemingly converted at their altar; telling them they were a poor dear brother and they wished very much they could take them in, but their rule was against it. I speak from personal knowledge. Instead of informing themselves and their people as to the evils of the lodge, they began in a cowardly way to make excuses for the position they had taken. I thoroughly believe that many a man could have been saved to God and to this church, had the lodge been shown by the watchman on the walls of Zion, in its proper light.

Friends in the United Brethren, United Presbyterian, Covenanter, Lutheran, Quaker, Wesleyan and Free Methodist, German Baptist, Mennonite and other reform churches in the State of Ohio, I appeal to you. Do you believe the position your fathers have taken against the lodge to be right? Do you believe that this rule should be sustained? Do you wish to exclude from your communion table, Ku Klux, Anarchists, Molly Maguires, Freemasons, Socialists, etc., etc.? There is only one way you can successfully do it, and that is by aggression. If you are simply on the defensive they will out-wit you, and will be at your communion table before you know it. They do not at first boldly assert their purposes, but like the snake in the grass, strike you when you are unaware. In the name of our Captain I ask you to meet with the many reformers who will come to our approaching State convention. Will not every man reading this who belongs to a church opposed to the lodge see to it that their pastor and as many delegates as possible attend?

As has been already announced, we expect to have President C. A. Blanchard and the N. C. A. General Agent. Rev. J. W. Coleman, State Recording Secretary, and for many years National Reform lecturer, will be with us and has agreed to speak to us if, as he says, "we cannot do better." We can answer that question better after hearing him. We shall try and get some able insurance agent to address us on the relative advantages of open and secret insurance. We partially have the promise of one now. I am corresponding with other parties and will report in due time. Since my last report I have addressed three audiences: the Wesleyan and United Presbyterian in Mansfield and the United Brethren here. I have also secured readers for the Cynosure and some support for the State work. Among the pledges is one from Caleb Lyons for thirty dollars. Bro. Lyons has been a liberal contributor, as many know, to our State work in the past. Time and space forbid my writing more now.

UP AND DOWN IN ALABAMA.

The Attractions of Selma—Its Schools and Churches—Two Kinds of Congregationalism in the South—The Alabama W. C. T. U.—Injunction against colored schools.

Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 29, '87.

Dear Cynosure:—I left Talladega Sept. 26 at 3:30 P. M., and at 9 o'clock was at Selma, where I always find so many warm and sympathetic friends. I can never cease to admire this typical Southern city. Its broad streets are thoroughly shaded by great evergreen oaks and have an air of quietness and seclusion that we do not find in our Northern towns. The electric lights make strange, wierd shadows as they shine through the tree tops. Many artesian wells supply the city abundantly with excellent water. Within the last seven years Selma has more than doubled in population and wealth. It now claims over 12,000. The crops of the past season have been fairly good, and much of the cotton has already been picked. There is a gradual improvement in the condition of the colored people. Many of them are acquiring homes and all are educating their children. It is believed that the tone of morals and the prevailing type of religion is being elevated. There is need of it among both races. The long and hot summer is indicated by banana plants growing in the open air to the highth of ten or twelve feet, which is very rare so far north as this. Of course they cannot form any fruit.

The colored churches and schools have had a prosperous year. The latter are just opening. Knox Institute is under the care of Rev. Mr. Reed, while pastor G. M. Elliott devotes himself to ministerial and editorial work. His little paper, the Guiding Star, is now a weekly and attaining a hopeful degree of success. If the colored people are wise they

WASHINGTON'S OLD HEADQUARTERS AND ITS SUGGESTIONS.

Newburg, N. Y., Oct. 5, 1887.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Newburg is a beautiful city of 25,000, on the Hudson, sixty miles north of New York City. It is noted chiefly for its elegant homes. The "Hasbronck House," used as Washington's headquarters in the Revolution, is an interesting place. The grounds bristling with cannon, the antiquated armor, the mammoth Hessian boot, the room with seven doors and one window in which Washington refused the crown, the tattered battle flags,—all carry back our thoughts to days more than a century old. This place is dishonored, however, with two hundred saloons. Satan evidently feels that he is playing his last card with the saloon system.

The following from the New York Witness on "That Silver Dollar Saloon" is suggestive: "Charley Smith, who has been a Republican Assemblyman from this city for several terms, had a grand opening of his new saloon last week, which was honored (?) by the presence of three Congressmen, one State Senator, three Assemblymen, one Civil Justice and several Aldermen. The Sun's description of this palatial ginmill shows that Mr. Smith understands how to advertise his new venture by making it an object of curiosity: 'In every stone in the white marble floor are two silver dollars bearing the date of 1887, and in the center of the floor, in front of the bar, is a black marble stone with a twenty dollar gold piece in the center and nineteen one dollar silver pieces around it. Over head in the ceiling are three medallions, serving as centers of three chandeliers, made of ground glass and representing silver dollars. On the back bar is a chandelier which has $500 worth of silver dollars on it. There is, besides, on the back bar a star and crescent a foot high, covered with silver pieces from a dime to a dollar. The wine decanters are in the shape of silver dollars. On the wall are pictures of the members of the Assembly when ex-Assemblyman Smith was a member of the Legislature himself.'" The Witness properly designates it, "this new and ornamental gateway into the kingdom of darkness." When Mohammed returned to Mecca, six years after the Hegira, he saw the 360 idols set up through the city, and, pointing to them with his sword, he said: "Truth has come; let this iniquity go down." So our Government should point to the 200,000 saloons in this land and say: "Truth and righteousness have come to this land; let these abominations go down forever."

West Point Military Academy is about six miles down the Hudson, amid the grandest scenery of the State. Its library, museum, and the drill of the 800 cadets are well worth seeing. Standing there by that school for war, we thought of Alexander the Great driving the enemy before him until he reached the summit of power, and then sitting down and weeping because he had no more worlds to conquer. We thought of Cæsar carrying his conquests north, south, east and west, until the Roman eagles overshadowed every land and every sea. We thought of Hannibal crossing the Alps, descending upon Italy like a vulture with its cycloidal swoop upon its prey, and carrying devastation and ruin even to the gates of the Eternal City. We thought of Cortez with his conquering companions in Mexico, burning the ships that had brought him over the seas that there might be no hope of retreat, and playing the game of war with human lives for dice. We thought of Pizarro in Peru, challenging his men to fidelity by drawing a line with his sword in the sand, and saying: "On this side are poverty, misery and disgrace; on that side honor, wealth and peace; as for me and the faithful, we will cross the line." We thought of Napoleon holding the reins of destruction until his war horse had trampled on all the kingdoms of Europe, and the very mention of his name caused the cheeks of popes and emperors to grow pale with fear. We thought of General Grant, with his "boys in blue," seizing that great red dragon of States rights that had grown up in the South, animated by that Satanic spirit of slavery; throttling it in those four years of bloody strife, and casting out the evil spirit into the seas, never more to rise again. The history of nations has been written in blood. It is to be hoped that the day is near at hand when "wars shall cease," when there will be a "Congress of Nations" to which all will submit, and when the prophecy shall be fulfilled, "nations shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks."

On Monday night I lectured in Rev. J. R. Thompson's church of this place. The house was filled, and a more attentive audience I never addressed. Bro. Thompson is wide-awake pastor. He has a strong and active congregation. He is a leader of thought in this city. On Tuesday evening I lectured in the M. E. church in Fostertown, four miles out. This meeting was a success. This week I was called to converse with an elder who has had cancer in the throat. The surgeons removed it, and in doing it, cut out the larynx and inserted a silver tube. It is the only operation of the kind ever performed in this country. He can be understood quite well. I was led to talk of the evidences of our being in Christ. To love Christ signifies to delight in his excellency and to desire to please him. There are several marks by which it may be known.

1. The thought of Christ is the predominating thought in the believing mind. There are times when he does not think of Christ; while his mind is occupied with business he is not conscious of the presence of the thought of Christ; but as soon as the mind is released the thought of Christ comes to the surface, just as a cork held under the water will rise to the top when let loose. "I sleep but my heart waketh."

2. The believer delights in the word of Christ. "His lips are like lilies dropping with sweet-smelling myrrh." "O how love I thy law, it is my study all the day."

3. He loves Christ's children. As it is unnatural for a son to hate his brothers and sisters, so it is unchristian for a professed follower of Christ to dislike the the children of the covenant. "If a man says I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? and this commandment we have from him, that he that loveth God, love his brother also."

4. He seeks frequent communion with Christ. "Like as the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

5. He is drawn to Christ by an irresistible impulse. "The love of Christ constraineth me." "For me to live is Christ." "Entreat me not to leave thee, nor to turn back from following after thee."

6. He is jealous for the honor of Christ. It pains him to see Christ dishonored.

7. He strives to obey all Christ's commands. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." "Oh that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes; then shall I not be ashamed when I have respect to all thy commandments."

8. He makes an entire consecration to Christ. "Thine are we, David," consecration to Christ's person; "and on thy side, thou son of Jesse," consecration to Christ's cause. All that I am, all that I have, and all that I can be are devoted to him.

9. He patiently endures all trials. He regards them as coming from the hand of his Father: "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. What son is he whom the Father chasteneth not." They are a blessing to him. "No chastisement for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, it worketh the peaceable fruits of righteousness in them that are exercised thereby." As he participates with Christ in suffering here, so he will share with him in glory hereafter.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial that is to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you, but rather rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of the sufferings of Christ, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also, with exceeding joy." The reward is great. "These light afflictions, which are but for a moment, will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." The affliction is light, the glory is a weight. The affliction is temporary, the glory is eternal. So he looks up and says, "Lord, what thou wilt and when thou wilt and how thou wilt." "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

Yours, J. M. Foster.

MEMPHIS LETTER.

ANOTHER BAPTIST BRIGADE WHEELS INTO LINE AGAINST THE LODGE—THE PROHIBITION VOTE.

Dear Cynosure:—Since I last wrote you we have been marching along steadily on the line of reform. A few things have happened that will be of some interest to your readers, and may perhaps spur some one to take a positive stand at all times for God and the right. My position against the lodge is not devoid of effect, and many are realizing it; the most positive evidence of the same was manifested in a Baptist Convention held in our city on the 19th ult. There were nearly seventy-two persons in attendance, and eight associations were represented. The meeting was an educational one, and the committee who was sent out to report plans made the following report:

That as the object of the school is to train leaders for the homes, churches and schools, it should, in its faculty, organization and management, magnify the church, be a standing protest against Sabbath breaking, intemperance in all forms, the raising of money by worldly instead of Bible methods, the union of church members with the worldly and ungodly in secret societies and otherwise, and in all forms of worldliness so prevalent at the present time; and that the school should also in the character of its teachers, its spirit, aims and work set forth the true principles of Christian morality, and Christian enterprise in all benevolent, reform and missionary work.

In the report of the Committee on By-Laws we had the following:

FACULTY.

As it is the aim of the founders of this school to train true Christian leaders, and also to make the school as far as possible a standing protest against the prevailing worldliness and immorality in many churches as well as in society, and also a pattern, as much as possible, in its faculty and students in the matter of separation from the world, purity in life and habits, consecration to Christ, no one shall be eligible for election as a member of the faculty who is not a person of undoubted Christian character and a member in good standing in a Baptist church, or who uses intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or tobacco, or opium, or who is a member of any secret society or fraternity.

This rule, however, is not intended to prevent the employment of persons of unblemished Christian character, who may not be Baptists, to give special instruction for a time in the industrial or other departments of the school, when it may be necessary or desirable.

The adoption of the above created no small stir, and a heated debate ensued, lasting nearly the entire day, but God who always triumphs did so in this case. There were thirty-six to vote, representing as I have already stated eight associations, and the majority of them were adhering secret society men. There had never been such an opportunity in Tennessee to magnify the name of the Lord and his church, and it was improved.

The allies of the lodge, in every speech they made they drove their brethren from them, and when the vote was put to adopt the plan and the by-law governing the faculty, they were carried 31 to 5. This we call a grand triumph for God and the right.

Another event has transpired of which of course you are aware, viz., our struggle for prohibition. We do not as yet know what the result will be, but indications point to the defeat of the amendment. I am glad to say that the men of my church voted for the amendment to a man, and the church had previously declared that any member who voted against the same, should be excluded from the church. Another church in the city, Beale Street Baptist, excluded eight last night (Friday) for voting against the amendment. We expect by the grace of God to continue the fight. We are now out for a new third party, and many Democrats and Republicans are to-day loud in their determination to vote for no man unless he be a Prohibitionist. The election is over and we expect to write oftener. God bless all of the friends of reform. R. N. Countee.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

While lecturing at Rochelle, Illinois, I was kindly entertained at the home of Harvey Countryman. He has been quite successful in business, and has a palatial residence. What is better, he is a pillar in the Presbyterian church, and is among the leading Christian workers in the community. It is interesting to spend an evening with him, and hear him relate his personal efforts in winning souls for Christ.

Once while on a train in Indiana, after putting up the prayer, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" he saw a young lady in a seat before him, and thought, perhaps the Lord wants me to speak to her. He leaned over and kindly inquired, "May I ask if you reside in Indiana?"

She replied, "Yes, sir."

"Do your parents live in this State?"

She replied, "My father does, but my mother is dead."

Again he asked, "Was your mother a Christian?"

She said, "O yes."

"May I inquire," said he, "if you are a Christian?"

"No, sir."

"May I ask if your mother before her death did not request you to give your heart to Jesus?"

She replied, "Yes, sir."

"Did you not promise your dying mother that you would?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you not think," he said, "that such a promise is one that you are under solemn obligation to fulfill?"

"Yes, sir," she said, trembling with emotion. She wept while he tenderly urged upon her the duty of being a Christian. She arose when the train stopped at her station, too much affected to speak. Then coming back into the car, she said with tears coursing down her cheeks, "Please, sir, I would like to know your name;" and shaking hands said, "I promise you that I will be a Christian."

Mr. Countryman's life is rich in experiences of this kind. His eyes filled with tears as he told me of his conversion March 4, 1861, at the hour of 6:30 in the evening, in a meeting at Oak Flatts, Herkimer Co., N. Y., conducted by Elder Rufus Smith, of Maryville, Mo. It was a meeting he can never forget. Elder Smith said, "Harvey, do you not think it is time for you to confess Christ?"

He replied, "Yes, sir."

"Then," said the Elder, "Are you willing to start to-night?"

He said, "Yes, sir," and he did; and never has regretted that decision. M. A. Gault.

A GLORIOUS CAMP MEETING.

Orion, Richland Co., Wis., Sept. 15, '87.

Dear Christian Cynosure:—We have just had one of the grandest camp meetings ever held in this part of the country. Brother John Willan, our pastor and something of an evangelist, after engaging a very fine and suitable grove on my farm near Orion for the meeting, invited evangelist J. E. Wolfe of Pennsylvania, as preacher, and Bro. Swayne from New York, as singer of the Gospel, who began the meetings on the 25th of August.

The meetings continued without intermission for three weeks, with three services each day, preaching and singing the glad tidings of a perfect and everlasting salvation in Christ; with Bible readings, prayer meetings, and song services interspersed. The three Sabbath services were very numerously attended, whole families coming from long distances; 1,500 to 2,000 persons were in attendance on these Sabbath services. Messrs. Wolfe, Swayne, Willan, and pastor Lewis of the Methodist church, Orion, camped on the ground, so as to be at hand at all times to talk with inquirers. A number of camps were hired from Madison, which were rented to such as wished. The whole affair was strictly undenominational, and neighboring preachers of the Gospel of various sects came in to help. From first to last quiet and good order prevailed. It was indeed a time of great blessing; and it was manifest that the Spirit of God was with us of a truth—convincing sinners of their state of condemnation out of Christ, and in subduing and humbling both saints and sinners. The truths of the Word of God were very clearly, pungently and faithfully stated. And God gave the increase to the labors of his servants, in the conversion of about a hundred and fifty souls. Several renounced their lodge membership; one brewer renounced his business and said, "I brew no more. I gets more as two million dollars wort' in dis grove."

For the first ten days, or so, brother Wolfe directed his discourses mainly to the professing church of God, denouncing dishonesty in trading, tobacco, gaudy and expensive clothing and ornaments, secret societies, dancing, yoking themselves with the world in marriage and business partnerships, gluttony, obscene and smutty stories and talk among men, skating rinks, joining the world in their amusements, and so forth,—exhorting Christians to flee all such things, and be a separate and holy people, and shine as lights in the world. Also showing Christians their duties to each other—to be kind, courteous, loving, gentle, forgiving. Afterwards he preached to those who as yet were not reconciled to God, and, therefore, in a state of danger and condemnation,—exhorting them not to neglect and despise so great a salvation. Mr. Wolfe also gave several interesting prophetical discourses, carefully distinguishing the several judgments and dispensations, and the respective places and future destinies of the Jew, the Gentile, and the church of God in the purposes and government of God.

And now we have decided to have a yearly camp meeting in this grove for the next ten years, or as long as the Lord will shower down such blessings as we have just received. Brethren Wolfe and Swayne have offered to come with their families and preach and sing for the Lord one month with us every summer. So come, you city people, come to our pleasant, well-watered and well-sheltered grove with your tents, your families, and your friends, and get your health, both of body and soul, strengthened and renewed. I will give notice through the Cynosure before the 1888 summer meeting. Brethren Wolf and Swayne are now fighting the devil in Richland Center, our county seat. Yours for reform,

Wm. H. Dawson.

Bible Lesson.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IV.—Oct. 23.—Three Miracles—Matt. 9: 18-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—According to your faith be it unto you.—Matt. 9: 29.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Saving Touch. vs. 18-22. In the crowd which followed Jesus to the house of Jairus was a woman afflicted with an incurable disease for twelve years. If he could lay his hand on the forehead of death and bring back the warmth of life, surely even to touch the hem of his garment might suffice for her. Her timid, shrinking nature, and the character of her disease, which rendered her ceremonially unclean, made her desire to keep the fact of her touching him secret. Many who are anxious for a blessing are very shy of letting even Christians know that they are seeking it, but when the blessing comes, whether to soul or body, they must say with David, "I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation. I have not concealed thy loving kindness and thy truth from the great congregation." The very act of telling what has been done for us raises us to a higher plane of self-consecration, and fills us with a new and divine shame for our past unbelief of his word; our past ingratitude and unfaithfulness. There is too little of this kind of confessing the Lord among Christians. It is true that the best of us are "miserable sinners," but often it is less helpful to ourselves and the world to dwell upon our own short-comings, than to confess the power of Christ over them. There is healing only in the touch of personal faith, but if the faith be there a touch is enough. How much real faith there may be among the most ignorant and superstitious is not for us to judge, but the story of this poor woman may well encourage us to hope that many a sin-burdened heart, bowing before a crucifix or a Madonna, has really touched the hem of his garment and been healed. For Christ honors faith and treats it as a most precious plant wherever found.

2. The Raising of the Ruler's Daughter. vs. 23-26. The ancient Greeks and Romans buried their dead in gloom and despair, and even Judaism had so far lost sight of the truth taught by her patriarchs and prophets, that when Jesus, as in the case of Lazarus, spoke of death as a sleep, he was misunderstood even by his own disciples. But is there no danger that we as Christians may forget the blessed truth that our dead are only asleep in Jesus? We forget it when we mourn unduly as if of those without hope. We forget it when, at the dictates of fashion, we array ourselves in heaviest black. The wearing of mourning has no higher authority than ancient heathen custom. If the Jews were forbidden to follow heathen fashions, surely Christians ought to feel themselves prohibited from doing so. We give the lie to our belief that Christ has appeared and "brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel," when we invest death with images of gloom and terror, rather than of hope and joy.

3. The Healing of the two Blind Men. vs. 27-31. Here also the blessing is according to the faith. These blind men were anxious to see. If they hadn't been they would have continued blind. The reason why so many continue spiritually blind is because they do not want to see. What would be the effect if we all sought Jesus to have the eyes of our mind enlightened, half so persistently as these men sought him? Suppose every Christian before he votes for license should ask Christ for light, as well as every lodge Christian who thinks he can enter into the closest bonds of union with men who hate his Saviour, and yet not dishonor and grieve that Saviour by such an action. I have yet to hear of a high license Christian, who, before making up his mind on the subject, "inquired first at the mouth of the Lord," or of one who became a Mason or an Odd fellow after special and earnest prayer to learn his Saviour's will in the matter. Spiritual blindness causes most of the inconsistency which men blame on the church. To walk straight requires a clear vision, and when we see Christians going in crooked and deviating ways, we know that they need to go where these blind men went,—to him who alone can open the eyes of the blind.

From Peloubet's Notes.

Jairus's Faith. 1. It was a strong faith, expecting Jesus to raise to life one already dead, or as good as dead. 2. It was an earnest faith. 3. It was a benevolent faith, seeking blessings for others. 4. It was an intelligent faith founded on a knowledge of what Jesus had already done. 5. It was a tried and tested faith, by means of the scorn of those who were in the house (ver. 24). 6. It was a successful faith, for Jesus immediately went to the ruler's house (ver. 23).

Prayer for Temporal Blessings. I have often said that in prayer we are to express to God every want that we feel, temporal, spiritual, or eternal. It is not your part to discriminate, and say, "I will not pray for this blessing, lest it be not for my good." It is the prerogative of him who gives the blessing to determine what is for your good, and what is not. You pray for the blessing that you feel you most need, and leave God to give when and how he pleases.—Cumming.

The Capernaum Woman's Faith. 1. It was intelligent, founded on facts. 2. It was imperfect. 3 It was strong, overcoming obstacles. 4 It was active; it led her to seek Jesus and embody her faith in an outward act. 5. It led her to confession of Christ's power. 6. It was successful.

The Faith Touch and the World Touch. The crowd touched Jesus and received no healing influence. The woman touched him in faith, and was made whole. Christ has untold blessings for all; but what men receive from him depends on the faith and love with which they come to him. It is the common experience. We receive from nature according to what we bring to nature. Multitudes of men have seen apples fall, but only Newton received from the falling apple the law of gravitation. Men still go through the world with "eyes and no eyes," and one writes a book where another sees nothing. Arthur Helps compares some men to the birds on a telegraph-wire, who are utterly unconscious of the messages of sorrow and joy, of business and friendship,—messages sometimes affecting whole nations,—which are passing right under their feet. It needs the battery and connecting instruments in order to read what passes on the wire. It needs hearts of love and faith, longings for holiness, and the spirit of prayer, if we would receive the blessings which Christ has for us all.

Blessings according to our Faith. 1. The greatest benefit of healings and earthly helps from God is moral, is their effect upon the soul and the spiritual life. All Christ's miracles are illustrations of spiritual truths. 2. It is necessary, therefore, in conferring these healings and earthly blessings, that the soul recognize God as the giver, and be drawn toward God in love and trust. Faith in God is thus the means by which the spiritual blessings are made to flow from the temporal. 3. This union makes every earthly gift of God doubly blessed. 4. By insisting on faith as the condition of receiving, we are pointed to the natural and necessary effect of true faith. Faith is an essential to the greatest success. Credulity, superstition, and unwarranted expectations are often the ruin of men in worldly things; but true faith that leads to courage, activity, undaunted perseverance and a steady, calm mind, is one of the essential conditions of the longest earthly life. And the same principle applies to the spiritual world.—P.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

Albert Barnes, 1849:—Any good cause, I think, can be promoted openly; any secret association is liable, at least, to abuse and danger.

Rev. Justin Edwards, D D., author and head of Andover Seminary:—Whenever the cause of temperance is veiled in darkness and secrecy, it must lose its hold on the public confidence and sympathy.

Rev. M. Bennett, long presiding elder M. E. church—I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society.

Dr. Thomas Scott, the great commentator:—Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided; but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls.

Rev. J. C. K Milligan, editor of "Our Banner:"—Through such silence, secret connivance and horrid oaths "ever to conceal and never reveal," the state of our country is rapidly becoming such as to alarm every Christian philanthropist.

Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist:—For us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ.

John G. Fee, Berea College, 1868.—It is Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred associations that have spawned and now lend respectability to "Regulators," "Ku Klux Klans," and other bands of midnight assassins now ranging through Kentucky and other portions of the South.

Rev. J. P. Lytle, D. D.:—Masonry has damned all who ever trusted in it for salvation. It is now leading away thousands from the church, and from paths of virtue by association with the intemperate, unclean and profane, and is dragging them down the road which leads to the chambers of eternal death.

Rev. Edward Beecher, D.D.:—If on such anti-Christian grounds, prayers are framed, rites established and chaplains appointed, ignoring Christ and his intercession, God regards it as a mockery and an insult to himself and his church. In it is revealed the hatred of Satan to Christ. By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted.

Rev. W. W. Patton, D. D., 1869:—However secret societies may differ among themselves, yet they are all anti-republican in their tendencies; and are all leading to the same results, viz., a substitution of worldly and selfish innovations for moral and religious influences, and, ultimately, to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity.

Rev. James H. Fairchild, D.D., Pittsburg address:—The point is not that the working of a secret organization may be perverted to selfish ends, but that in its very nature it strongly tends to such perversion. A worthy institution may be perverted, but an institution in which the tendency to perversion is inherent and constitutional, is not a good institution.

Rev. Dr. James. B. Walker, author of "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation."—There is probably not one in a thousand who enter the lodge, who know, when blindfolded they take the terrible oaths, that Masonry is an anti-Christ and one of the most powerful enemies of Christ that exists. But this is put beyond the possibility of a doubt by the highest Masonic authorities.

Rev. Nathan Brown, Editor "Am. Baptist" and missionary to Japan.—If Freemasonry had existed in the days of Christ, and in the same form that it exists with us, he could not have condemned it more distinctly than he did in his Sermon on the Mount: "If ye do good to them that do good to you, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?" The Gospel is at war with every system of clique or clan, caste or combination that seeks to create distinctions in the human family.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1887.

We are glad to see delegates appointed to attend the meeting of the Prohibition Conference to be held in this city December 1st; and hope our meeting, if one is held, in New Orleans next winter, will be a focus to draw together the light now beaming so magnificently against the lodge and saloon in Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee and Florida, into one united blaze which shall illumine the whole Southern heavens. The unanimous votes of St. Marion, Arkansas, Association, and of the Louisiana State Association of colored Baptists to divorce lodgeism from Christianity, show what power the anti-lodge reform has to move the popular mind.

"To this complexion it must come at last."

THE AMERICAN BOARD.

This oldest American Missionary society dates from 1810, and so is seventy-seven years old. Its annual meeting this year opened in Springfield, Mass., October 4th inst. The venerable president, Hopkins, being dead, Mr. Blatchford of Chicago presided.

This Board, which sprang from a prayer meeting of four college students, in a stack-yard, has been conducted with such ability, and sustained with such devotion by intelligent Christians, that its orders have been preferred to the bank paper of London or New York by money centers in the Eastern nations. This Board, with the mission societies which have sprung up under its shadow, have long represented the popular Christianity of the United States. The Rev. Dr. Noble of Chicago, this year, preached the opening sermon, and the audience filled the largest of the city churches so that the overflow met for preaching in another church. The annual income of this great Board averages over half a million dollars, and the withdrawal of the Presbyterians, who for years co-operated with Congregationalists in foreign missions, has not materially diminished its revenue, or retarded its growth; though the Presbyterian Board is now a very strong body.

The readers of the Cynosure are interested to know the relation of these bodies to reform. The American Board's chief secretary, Clark, does not, and, indeed, few, if any, secretaries of the leading societies belong to secret lodges. The old ministerial members, Drs. Woods, Worcester, Emerson, etc., were opposed to Masonic lodges. But Hon. Linus Childs (Whig) and Chancellor Walworth (Democrat) were Masons; and the latter saved the New York Grand Lodge from dissolution by the Morgan discussions. Both these men were corporate members, and both pro-slavery. A. H. Quint, a life-long opponent of Abolition till the war converted him into a political chaplain; a Freemason who, in the Boston Congregationalist, boasted of favors obtained of a grog-selling inn-keeper, by Masonic grips, while at the South; now a retired clergyman and New Hampshire politician; with his college President Bartlett, whom he saved from dismission by the Dartmouth Board of trustees, of which he is a member—this ex-Grand Chaplain, somewhat known to our readers, is a member of the conservative caucus on Andover matters, in the present meeting at Springfield. His presence, with that of a few others, prepares us for the rumor that an effort will be made to compromise the difficulty of the Board, removing Egbert C. Smyth for teaching "probation after death;" and also removing Secretary Alden for opposing it. This action, if taken, will, of course, have no reference to the teachings of the Bible, duty, or right.

There is not an element in heathenism which the Board is created and supported to oppose, which is not found in the secret lodge system of the United States; and as the life and usefulness of the Board once depended on the anti-slavery reform, so now its life depends on the overthrow of the lodge.

Thirty-eight years ago the senior editor of the Cynosure, in the Tremont Temple, Boston, moved the American Board, "That slaveholding is not to be continued in the churches of Christ." The Board voted the resolution down, then reconsidered, and voted to print the resolution in the minutes, where it may be seen for the year 1849. A Masonic lodge is worse than a slave-plantation. Satan did not propose to the Saviour a joint attempt to make men slaves and slaveholders, but to worship him. That done, he knew all human ills and vices would follow as effects. For devil or lodge-worship, includes the spirit of murder and every crime this side. We must pull down these strongholds of Satan, or churches, mission boards, states and armies, will bear on the masses of mankind as they now do in Asia and Africa, whose religions are now lodge religions. And "the weapons of our warfare," "mighty through God," are capable of this mighty achievement.

Since the above was written further and decided action was taken by the Board on the "Andover heresy." On Thursday the Board decided by a vote of nearly two to one to sustain the action of the Presidential committee in deciding on the qualifications of missionaries employed by the Board and re-elected Dr. Alden, against whom the Andover men were most vindictive. Dr. Boardman of Chicago made the opening speech for the orthodox majority and was followed by Dr. Wm. Taylor of New York, Dr. Goodwin of Chicago and others. Prof. Geo. P. Fisher led the other wing. Again on Friday the debate was resumed, but with no result further than to widen the breach which seems to have been permanently made. The pastors of one or two Boston churches attacked the action of the Board with some severity in their Sabbath discourses and threaten to withdraw their contributions.

OUR INDIANS.

The country is beginning to understand and protest against the late extraordinary orders from the Indian Bureau of the Interior Department that "in all schools conducted by missionary organizations, it is required that all instruction shall be given in the English language. Instruction in the Dakota language will not be permitted." Dr. J. E. Roy, secretary of the American Missionary Association, has been most active in arousing this popular interest and protest; and we quote elsewhere from an able letter of his in the Interior, which shows clearly the situation among the Dakota Indians.

It is now sixty years since the senior editor became acquainted with Dr. Williamson and the elder Mr. Riggs. Both gentlemen have since had sons who were pupils at Wheaton. The present head of the Santee Agency School, Rev. A. L. Riggs, was a graduate during our Presidency at Knox College. Both these families, fathers and sons, have, for the entire sixty years since our first acquaintance, devoted their lives to the welfare of these tribes with a singleness of purpose as admirable as rare. A small portion of these Indians are civilized and Christianized. Dropping the Dakota language and books will cut the rope by which the wild Indians are to be lassoed and brought in. It will operate like forbidding German to be taught in the German districts of the United States. They will learn both languages quicker than English alone. But we need not argue what Dr. Roy makes clear.

We only regret that, knowing as Dr. Roy does, the agency of the secret lodges in perpetuating and intensifying the heathenism of the Indian tribes, he does not mention it. Even good father Gleason, one of the earliest missionaries to the Cherokees and Choctaws, after their removal West, was a Freemason. The Pueblo Indians practice devilish initiations, and our Government agents go through them to acquire influence over the tribe. Albert Pike initiated a large body of the Cherokees and Choctaws in Federal Lodge No. 1, at Washington, before enlisting them in the war of the rebellion against our flag. Pike obtained by fraud and drew from the U. S. treasury money appropriated to the Indian schools, as Senator Pomeroy has learned, and paid the expenses of his Indian regiments. The Government has prohibited dramshops to the Indians. It must also prohibit secret lodges, or they will heathenize faster than government can civilize.

The Memphis School.—The Living Way gives a more particular account of the educational meeting in Memphis, which is reported in Bro. Countee's letter elsewhere. Rev. A. O. Kenney of Ripley, Tenn., was president of the meeting, and Rev. T. Nightingale of the Beale Street Baptist church was on one of the committees. This pastor is also an editor, and has been most bitter in his attacks on Bro. Countee for leaving the lodge. We trust that he is now converted to Christ in respect to the lodge. Among those elected by the meeting to incorporate the new school are Elder W. A. Brinkley, Bro. Countee's associate on the Living Way, and our Bro. Jerome Howe of Illinois. Put these facts along with our "Memphis Letter" and we find this new movement to be truly a cheering one in its promise of a thoroughly evangelical institution in Memphis, to stand with the "Howe Institute" at New Iberia, Louisiana. May the most abundant blessings attend these efforts.

The American in its new form and dress is greatly improved in appearance and its contents are excellent. According to promise enlarged space is given to city mission work; over two pages are thus filled. Prohibition has a page, anti-secrecy one, and National Reform one. While it might be regretted that opposition to the lodge evil may not be made so prominent an issue as heretofore, yet the change will, doubtless, work to increase the influence of the paper and enlarge its circulation among those who have not co-operated in the special work of Christian reform.

The meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in Washington, for which we print the call elsewhere, promises to be a meeting of greatest importance to the churches of America. The idea of co-operation among them instead of competition, which will be perhaps the keynote of the meeting suggests at once a vast field for counsel and for such an increase of religious activity that the imagination is lost in its possibilities. As Mr. Dodge, president of the Alliance, said the other day in an address in Boston, "It has been said that there never has been less sectarianism than now, but there never has been more denominationalism." Can the Alliance turn this wasted energy into its proper channel? Dr. Strong, in the convention for city missions in New York, said that the greatest dangers threatening the United States to-day were the organizations for offensive warfare of the powers of darkness. His definition well describes the secret lodge system, which like the Revelation dragon floods the earth to drown the church of God. But in the presence of this enemy the Christian church is divided into a multiplicity of puerile factions.

—The unhappy contrast presented in Bro. Hinman's letter between the churches of the A.M.A. and the Home Missionary Society (Congregational) in the South has been observed by others. The Home Missionary magazine has a long article on the organization of "The First Church in the State." The State is Louisiana, in which there have long been many churches. So we understand the First Congregational church is meant; but there are already twenty churches of that name. The explanation comes at the end of the article that it is the first white Congregational church! May it be the last to put up the bar of caste.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. T. P. Robb, pastor at Linton, Iowa, has spent the summer at Dr. Jackson's Health Institute, at Dansville, N. Y., taking treatment for a chronic throat trouble.

—Rev. M. A. Gault is at present lecturing in Wisconsin at Eau Claire, Menominie and Waupacca and vicinity. His next campaign will be through Northern Illinois.

—Miss Anna Milligan, daughter of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, has accepted a professor's chair in Campbell University at Holton, Kansas. She is now taking a course in Cornell University, N. Y.

—John Alexander, of Philadelphia, one of the most influential members of the United Presbyterian church, has given to the National Reform Association the munificent contribution of $1,000.

—The Wisconsin brethren were disappointed in not greeting Rev. J. B. Galloway at the Milton convention. He also was much disappointed, having fully intended to be present, but was detained by sickness.

—About a year ago Bro. G. M. Elliott, at the head of the Reformed Presbyterian mission at Selma, Alabama, began a paper for colored readers. The Guiding Star has now taken a change from monthly to weekly. We are glad to see this token of usefulness and appreciation.

—Bro. M. N. Butler, who has been for a week aiding the Illinois Executive committee in their State work returned to his home in Darlington, Missouri, Saturday, expecting to open a very lively campaign in that State and hold two conventions, one north and one south of the river, in the western part of the State. In a few weeks the Illinois committee hope for his return for a year's work in this State.

—We regret to learn from Prof. J. A. Edgren, who has been compelled on account of his health to give up his work at the Swedish Baptist Seminary, at Stromsburg, Nebraska. He writes from Monrovia, California, that the physicians prescribe a long sea voyage for the healing of his lungs. We pray that his labors which have promised much for the Swedish people of America may not be thus early cut off.

will give it their patronage rather than some others that they now support. It is an able and thoroughly Christian publication.

Pastor Curtis is slowly building up a good, healthy, vigorous church representing correct Christian principles. He has never been afraid of any real Christian truth, and has not sought to hide it from his people. A branch church has been organized and is fairly prosperous. He is purchasing land where it is practicable and settling Christian families on it, and hopes in that way to do much for the people, both morally and pecuniarily. On several occasions during the year past he has prepared and read papers on the secrecy question. Once at Shelby Iron Works (where I was warned off and did not dare remain over Sabbath) he read a carefully prepared argument before the Congregational Association of Alabama, and it was cordially received.

It is somewhat remarkable that Congregational ministers who come South as the representatives of the American Home Missionary Society are (or at least become) quite different from those who represent the A. M. A. While the latter are in sympathy with our anti-secrecy reform, and earnestly repudiate the spirit of caste, the former are very conservative and are practically acquiescent in the diabolism of lodgery and negrophobia. The result is that there are two kinds of Congregationalism in the South. I trust this has not escaped the attention of the good men who are at the head of these two great missionary organizations.

During Tuesday, the 27th, it rained incessantly, and on Wednesday morning I went with a delegation of the colored ladies of Selma who represent the State colored W. C. T. U. to attend a State convention at Montgomery. I was glad to note that while these ladies were assigned a car by themselves it was a neat one and in every respect like the others. A man who came in to smoke was at once told by the conductor to leave. The ladies, who were mostly the wives of ministers, were pleased with their accommodations. Montgomery is also a growing city. It partakes of the general prosperity of the State. I was agreeably surprised at the extension of the street railways and especially by the fact that all are run by electricity. I was not prepared to see cars going up long steep grades at a fair rate of speed and propelled by simple contact with a wire overhead. Surely the cruelly abused car horses and mules in all our cities are, by and by, to have a release. The W. C. T. U. met in a large A. M. E. Zion church known as the "Old Ship." It was called to order by the president, Mrs. Boothe, of Selma, and prayer was offered by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Alstock. An address of welcome was given by Mrs. Cook of the Montgomery Union and was responded to by the president. A number of able papers were read by the ladies, and brief addresses were made by several brethren, including the writer. It was then announced that Rev. Atticus Haygood, author of "Our Brother in Black," was present and he was called for. He came forward and made a most interesting and eloquent address. He told them that he went through the campaign in Texas, and that he did not find a single colored man of education and piety who opposed the amendment. His address was highly appreciated by the congregation. Prof. Patterson of the Lincoln Normal School at Marion was also present, and it was announced that he would open the colored State University in this city next week.

During the last year there has been a terrible outbreak of negrophobia, and the Normal School at Marion was given up. The legislature, however, chartered a State University for colored people and they (the colored) pledged $5,000 to have it in this city. Since then an injunction has been gotten out to prevent its establishment. None can tell the result, but the school will, in any case, be started. The white people of this city are pursuing a most suicidal as well as wicked policy. Most of the colored pastors of the city belong to one or more of the secret orders, but I find that they all admit the objections to the orders and do not oppose discussion. I am invited to speak on the lodge question in the Dexter Ave. Baptist church on Friday night, the 30th, and expect to preach three times on Sabbath in Selma.

The meetings of the W. C. T. U. still continue and are of much interest. Some able papers have been read. Such a convention of colored women would have been impossible ten years ago. They have all been educated in the schools established by Northern benevolence, and are either pastor's wives or teachers. Not one has grey hairs. A number of them have expressed their sympathy with our anti-secrecy reform. We expect to have a meeting of the Selma Christian Association and to choose delegates to the New Orleans convention.

H. H. Hinman.

THE ENGLISH ONLY IN INDIAN SCHOOLS.

As I have recently attended the annual meeting of the Dakota Indian Conference at the Santee agency, your readers may be interested to know how the Christian Indians themselves regard the absolute command of the Indian Commissioner Atkins that in all Indian schools only the English shall be taught or used, upon penalty of being closed by the police or the soldiery, if necessary. About three hundred had come in from abroad, and at the communion season I counted five hundred and thirty. This conference embraces all the Presbyterian and Congregational ministers and churches among the Dakotas. Their discussion of the "order" was in a calm and dignified way, though with earnestness. As the result they adopted a memorial to the President in their own language, but translated for the use of Mr. Cleveland, asking for an abolishing of the order, which they say is very grievous to them. They present that, "Because the whole of the holy Bible is translated into the language of the Dakotas, by learning it a good many have been quieted down in Christian homes and in civilized ways." They claim that the Dakota helps to understand and to learn the English, and that the Indians who have come to responsible positions at the different agencies are those who have thus been trained. They aver that the English is good and beneficial, but that it is better to have instruction in both.

The missionaries agree with the Indian department that the people must be brought along into the English as fast as possible. The only question is as to the best method. The splendid Santee Normal and Training School, with its seven white teachers and three native assistants, and with its one hundred and ninety-five scholars, and with its annual theological institute, is conducted almost exclusively in the English.

But the two denominations have some eighteen schools back among the wild Indians taught only by natives in the vernacular. These Christian teachers are thus way-wising their pupils to civilized ideas and thus preparing them to go forward to the larger schools where the English is mainly taught. By the "order" these schools are all to be closed up, and so the very object desired is to be defeated. In one of these the devoted Miss Collins is leading the scholars out into English, while the native assistant brings them under her influence. One of these native schools is taught by Elizabeth Winyan, a woman of remarkable gifts and of high character, though she cannot speak a word of English. It was this woman who, during the massacre of 1862, when the seniors Williamson and Riggs, with their families, fleeing from their burning mission premises, had taken to a hiding place on an island in the Minnesota River, carried food to them, at the risk of her life.

Besides the memorial of the Dakota Indians, similar petitions were also adopted by the Congregationalists of Minnesota and South Dakota to be sent to the President, the one by United States Senator Sabin, and the other by Rev. Dr. Joseph Ward, president of Yankton College. The semi-official answer of the department was, that these papers had been inspired by a certain member who wished to continue the sale of two of his Dakota books. The fact was that neither of the Riggs brothers was present, and that neither had anything to do with the action. Moreover, it has already been shown that the books had been devised as an expedient for teaching English. It is also true that their money interest in these little books is just nothing at all.

Recently, Acting Commissioner Upshaw decided that these Santee Indians, holding land and paying taxes, were voting citizens. Accordingly, they did vote at a late election for county seat. Yet the personal liberty of these voting citizens to send their children to any mission school they may prefer, and in it to have them learn to read in their own language, this same commissioner overrides in his order of July 16, in which he also says, "The education of Indians in the vernacular is not only no use to them, but is detrimental to their education and civilization," the grammar being his own.

The Lake Mohawk gathering, the last week, of the friends of the Indians, testified against this order, and will probably make known their views to the President, as the Christian Union announces that a conference is proposed between the representatives of the various missionary organizations and the Indian commissioner. As the Legislature of Georgia found itself obliged to pay a decent respect to the opinions of mankind in the matter of its infamous Glenn bill, so it is hoped that the government authorities will give heed to the rising public sentiment, and will not continue to set up its two-year-old hypothesis against the experience of all missionary boards of every denomination for a hundred years.—*Rev. OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The latest sensation in the capital was the departure of the President's party for the West in their palatial train, which was the cynosure of all eyes and an object of universal admiration to all who had the coveted privilege of inspecting the splendid special as it stood at the Baltimore and Potomac depot awaiting the arrival of its honored passengers, who were accompanied thither by several members of the Cabinet, while hundreds of citizens had gathered near to take a farewell look at the President and his handsome wife. The three coaches constituting the train are a marvel of magnificence and artistic genius, and cost the princely sum of $200,000. Everything that could contribute to the comfort and convenience of the party was provided and arranged in the most elegant style, even to lighting the cars with electricity and heating them with steam.

And just here, I will make the pertinent inquiry why the railway corporations of the country furnish the President with these safeguards against a terrible and violent death, while the general public are still exposed to the peril of being roasted or scalded to death. It occurs to our correspondent that here is an object lesson to our national legislators if they really wish to regulate railway affairs in the interest of the people.

A day before leaving the President summoned his Cabinet to a very important state council to consider the state of the finances, and to appoint Commissioners to arbitrate the existing differences with Canada and New Foundland in regard to the fisheries question. There being a diversity of views as to the legality of a further purchase of bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the event that the financial exigencies of the country demand such a course, it was concluded, should such an exigency occur, to refer the matter to the decision of the Attorney General. The other matter was disposed of by the appointment of a Commission, to meet the representatives of Great Britain to settle the fisheries dispute. It consists of Secretary Bayard, and Messrs. Wm. L. Putnam, of Maine, and Jas. B. Angell, of Michigan, and as all three gentlemen are profoundly versed in the arts and wiles of diplomacy, it is believed by many that their deliberations with the Canadian Commissioners will reach a successful issue.

The capital is indebted to Civil Service Commissioner Oberley for its latest political sensation, which came about in this way. The Illinois Democratic Association, which, as its name implies, is a political, as well as a semi-social organization, invited the Commissioner to deliver an address to them, whereupon that gentleman wrote a lengthy communication, declining the proffered honor, and at the same time informing the Illinoians that it is a violation of the civil service law for Federal employes in the classified service to belong to such societies—the offenders being subject to dismissal, fine, and imprisonment for such uncivil conduct. There are about eight such State associations in this city, and as you may believe the Oberley manifest fell like a dynamite bomb in their ranks, producing, however, no immediately fatal results. But the Virginia Association is an exception, and defies Commissioner Oberley to do his worst—heaping multiplied maledictions upon his devoted head.

Washington is so rapidly growing in popular favor in that respect that at no distant day it may be known as the City of Conventions. The latest body to meet here was the International Medical Congress, and the next will be the American Section of the Evangelical Alliance, composed of 2,000 delegates and constituting one of the most important and influential religious organizations in the world. It is hoped the meeting of the Alliance will be an occasion of spiritual growth and blessing and of pleasant social intercourse. In a few weeks 50,000 programmes of the meeting will be printed and distributed throughout the United States. The Executive Committee of the Evangelical Alliance of this city, arranged for the general meeting to be held in this city has December 7, 8 and 9. The free use of several churches was tendered. The Mount Vernon Place Methodist church was selected for the preliminary meeting to be held in October, to be addressed by President Dodge and Secretary Strong, and the Congregational for the general meeting in December. The specially invited speakers will be entertained by the Washington branch. Dr. Strong, the general secretary, preached morning and evening at the Central Presbyterian church and made a great impression on his hearers.

The Home.

HE IS COMING.

Thou art coming, O my Saviour!
Thou art coming, O my King!
In thy beauty all resplendent,
In thy glory all transcendent;
Well may we rejoice and sing!
Coming! in the opening East,
Herald brightness slowly swells;
Coming! O my glorious Priest,
Hear we not thy golden bells?

Thou art coming, thou art coming!
We shall meet thee on the way,
We shall see thee, we shall know thee,
We shall bless thee, we shall show thee
All our hearts could never say.
What an anthem that will be,
Ringing out our love to thee,
Pouring out our rapture sweet,
At thine own all-glorious feet!

Thou art coming! Rays of glory
Through the vail thy death has rent,
Touch the mountains and the river,
With a golden-glowing quiver,
Thrill of light and music blent.
Earth is brightened when this gleam
Falls on flower and rock and stream;
Life is brightened when this ray
Falls upon its darkest day.

Not a cloud and not a shadow,
Not a mist and not a tear,
Not a sin and not a sorrow,
Not a dim and veiled to-morrow
For that sunrise grand and clear!
Jesus, Saviour, once with thee,
Nothing else seems worth a thought!
Oh, how marvelous will be
All the bliss thy pain hath bought!

Thou art coming! At thy table
We are witnesses for this,
While remembering hearts thou meetest
In communion, clearest, sweetest,
Earnest of our coming bliss.
Showing not thy death alone,
And thy love exceeding great,
But thy coming and thy throne,
All for which we long and wait.

Thou art coming! We are waiting
With a hope that cannot fail;
Asking not the day or hour,
Resting on thy word of power,
Anchored safe within the vail.
Time appointed may be long,
But the vision must be sure;
Certainty shall make us strong,
Joyful patience can endure.

Oh, the joy to see thee reigning,
Thee, my own beloved Lord!
Every tongue thy name confessing,
Worship, honor, glory, blessing,
Brought to thee with glad accord!
Thee, my Master and my Friend,
Vindicated and enthroned!
Unto earth's remotest end
Glorified, adored and owned!

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

BY J. LEE GAMBLE.

The personal return of Jesus to this earth is one of the special messages for the hour; this was the theme of apostolic preaching and the daily hope and expectation of the early disciples. It should be much more so now, "for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."

The Thessalonians were as much converted to "wait for the Son of God from heaven" as they were "turned from idols to serve the living God."

1. This is a personal coming; the coming of the heavenly King, and not the "king of terrors."

2. It is an event to be expected any moment, and one for which we are to be constantly watching and waiting. Mark 13:32–37; Luke 12:35–40.

3. He comes first for his saints, his "body" and "bride." This is a coming in the air. 1 Thes. 4:17; Luke 17:34–36.

4. Afterwards he comes with his saints. This is a coming to the earth. Zech. 14:4; Jude 14.

5. Between these two stages of his coming will occur "the great tribulation" and the reign of Antichrist. Watchful saints escape these. Luke 21:36; Rev. 3:10.

6. The signs which his Word declares should herald his near approach are already fulfilled.

7. The "conversion of the world" within this dispensation through the use of existing agencies is a fiction without the least sanction in the Word of God. If such a thing should come to pass it would refute rather than fulfill the Scripture. Luke 18:8; and many passages.

8. That the world is growing more wicked and Christendom more corrupt and apostate, ripening for the awful days of Anti-christ, both the Word and the facts plainly declare. Matt. 24:12; 2 Tim. 3:1–5; 4:3, 4; Rev. 13:7, 8, 16, 17.

9. While evil men and imposters "wax worse and worse" and "the love of the many (majority) waxes cold," Christ's true followers, few in number, (Matt. 7:14) are coming out more and more from the world and from worldly churches, and are making themselves ready to meet their coming Lord and escape "the great tribulation."

10. There will be two resurrections, a thousand years apart; the saved rise at the beginning of the millennium, the unsaved at its close. Rev. 20:4.

11. The Jews, restored to their own land, will be the chief nation during the millennium, and Jerusalem will be the metropolis of the earth; all the prophecies concerning Israel will then be literally fulfilled. Isa. 11:11; 60:21,22; Ezek. 37:21–28; Joel 3:20: Amos 9:14,15; Rom. 11:25–27.

12. At his second coming, the Lord Jesus Christ will reign on the earth with his "bride" for a thousand years. Then will be fulfilled all the glorious Old Testament promises of his reign which many have vainly tried to spiritualize and apply to Gospel times; but the Gospel period is everywhere in the New Testament represented as an age of suffering and humiliation and persecution and self-denial instead of one of glory and exaltation. Suffering first, then glory. 1 Peter 1:11. As the Head suffered, so also must the "body," until the Head and the "body" are visibly united. 2 Tim. 2:12.

Let us read Matt. 25:1–13 and see to which class we belong. May all the dear disciples of Jesus awake out of sleep, supply themselves with "oil," get on the "wedding garment," and be prepared to meet their Lord.

THE HOPE OF HIS COMING.

Remember, you have the hope of the second advent; if Jesus comes before you die you will meet him—gladly meet and welcome the Son of God upon this earth. You shall be changed so that you shall be fit to inherit the incorruptible glories of the skies. You shall see your Redeemer when he stands in the latter day upon the earth. As Job said, "In my flesh shall I see God, whom my eyes shall see for myself, and not another." Have joy, then, at every thought of your Master's coming. Do not put it among dark prophecies or doubtful dreams. It is a clearly revealed truth that Jesus will come again and take his people up to their eternal home; "Wherefore comfort one another with these words," and be not moved away from that hope of the Gospel, which lies so sweetly in the second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ.

And, once more, we have this hope—that when we have passed through all that concerns time and are in eternity, that shoreless, bottomless sea, there remains for us no fear or dread; but we shall be "forever with the Lord." Be not dismayed as though there would be an after-probation, or a purgatory, or a limbus patrum, or any of those pretty places that have filled priests' pockets so long, and are now being newly vamped and produced by our proud thinkers as an aid to their pretty speculations. We will have no purgatory under any form; it is the larder of priests, and the refuge of heresy-mongers; but there is not a word of it in God's book. We stand to the text—"So shall we be forever with the Lord."

Jonathan Edwards, in one of his treatises, speaks somewhat to this effect: "If any man can prove this form of the Gospel to be untrue and a mere dream, the very best thing that he can do is to sit down and weep forever to think that he has disproved the brightest hope that ever shone upon the eyes of men." And the long separated loved ones will then meet to part no more. Home will then be reached. O beloved, let us wait in patience, and stand with the wedding garment on constantly. Oh, to be ready to exclaim, as the opening heavens reveal his fair form "coming in the clouds of heaven," "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him; this is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. 25: 9.—Spurgeon.

THE EXECUTIONER'S TRUMPET.

Jerome used to say, that it seemed to him as if the trumpet of the last day was always sounding in his ears, saying, "Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment." The generality, however, think but little of this awful and important period. A Christian king of Hungary, being very sad and pensive, his brother, who was a gay courtier, was desirous of knowing the cause of his sadness. "Oh, brother," said the king, "I have been a great sinner against God, and know not how to die, or how to appear before God in judgment!" His brother, making a jest of it, said, "These are but melancholy thoughts." The king made no reply; but it was the custom of the country, that if the executioner came and sounded a trumpet before any man's door, he was presently led to execution. The king, in the dead of the night, sent the executioner to sound the trumpet before his brother's door; who hearing it and seeing the messenger of death, sprang into the king's presence, beseeching to know in what he had offended. "Alas! brother," said the king, "you have never offended me. And is the sight of my executioner so dreadful, and shall not I, who have greatly offended, fear to be brought before the judgment seat of Christ?"—Sel.

THE BURDEN LIFTED.

"Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as unto the Lord and not unto men." Thinking of the disagreeable duty of mending stockings brought these words so forcibly to mind, I want to tell others of the revery to which they led. This work I do not like; I would much rather make the new tidy for the easy chair or transplant my lovely heliotrope. But as I plied the needle I thought, "Well, God does care for me even in this." His own word that he has numbered the hairs of our head forbids a doubt of his loving thoughtfulness for the least of our concerns; and what a well-spring of thankfulness would abide in our hearts if we would only remember this! The money saved by mending may be used, perhaps, to help save a fallen sister from utter despair or lead a heathen child to Christ, who will in time make a Christian home to shine with a holy radiance in the surrounding darkness. How full of meaning is that word heartily; and that whatsoever, how comprehensive! All things that touch our lives, touch God's heart of love, and when our hearts and will are fully yielded to him we can look up and say, "Whatsoever thou sayest, Lord, we will do." Then the blessed power of himself within raises the mind above unpleasant tasks, and makes all a hearty service for Jesus's sake. Burdened mothers, weary with the strain of daily duties, lift up your eyes to see his word for you, and cast all your care on him—why? "for he careth for you."—Christian Witness.

THE SPARROW'S WARNING.

An English farmer writes to the Leisure Hour, of London, his experience with sparrows, as follows: About six years ago the small birds were very destructive in the gardens—here especially—in destroying the crops of green peas. A friend urged me to use poison, and, although I was reluctant to listen to him, he sent me a packet with instructions how to use it. I locked it safe in the cupboard in my seed room for that season, willing to suffer rather than destroy the little creatures whose services I well knew and whose cheerful songs I enjoyed. The following year they again became troublesome, and one morning the kitchen gardener came to me and complained:

"If you don't do something to keep off the sparrows and tom-tits, we shall not have a pea left, sir."

'Oh, is that it, John?" I said. "Well, after breakfast get two Dutch hoes, and I will come and help you for an hour to destroy the natives (weeds) near the peas."

I brought some bread and butter, spread the poison it and placed it in crumbs on a large tiling slate between the ranks of peas, and began to work with John among the natives. About five minutes after my little girl came into the garden.

"Father," she said, "there is a little bird fluttering among the peas."

It was a sparrow. I picked it up, and it gave a few convulsive clutches with its little feet and died.

"There is another," said she.

I saw it, and said: "You go home, dear," not wishing her to see more, and in less than three minutes I picked up six sparrows and two greenfinches; several more were found a little distance from the peas. Now all was quiet; not a bird could I see near the spot. I returned to John and stayed an hour with him, but not a bird came near the place.

I took up the poison, for fear the peafowls should come that way, and for some two or three weeks we were quite free from any annoyance from small birds; but when John again began to complain that "the birds had begun on the marrowfat peas, I took out the slate with the poison on it, just as it was left from the last time, and placed it between the ranks of peas again. One rank of dwarf peas had gone up only about half-way the sticks, and beside this rank I placed it—for the better view, as I thought. I had hardly taken my hoe in hand when a fine "cock-sparrow" perched on the top of the sticks above the slate and began to make a loud noise, and about every two or three seconds sounded a loud, peculiar bell-like note. Birds began to gather thick and fast on the rank of sticks—all kinds of small birds, sparrows, finches, linnets, tom-tits (two or three sorts) and white-throats—till it was literally covered with them, and this captain cock-sparrow kept on with his loud notes, all the rest being as quiet as possible, and every one with its little head turned toward the slate with the poison. John and I looked on in blank amazement, when all at once the sparrow, pluming himself out larger than usual and making a louder note, took wing, all the rest following. And now I began to breathe freely again, for I found I had been involuntarily holding my breath while this interesting scene was going on.

"Well, John," I said, "that fellow preached to a purpose."

"I was thinking sir," he answered, "how attentive all the rest were."

For the rest of the season not a bird came near the garden, nor had I need again of resorting to my slate and poisoned bread and butter.

And shall men be less wise than sparrows? Shall boys? Yet the boys and the men who see their fellows betrayed, ruined,poisoned by strong drink,take no heed of the danger, listen not to the voice of warning. They go recklessly on to taste, to fall, to perish.—Sel.

BOYS AND PISTOLS.

Little Fred McMahon, 15 years old, living in Chicago, was to have had a visit in the country awhile since, and for that purpose would have started for Manistee,Mich.,had he not owned a revolver against his father's wishes. The boy had packed his trunk, kissed the baby, and was ready to start, when he thought of his precious 22-caliber pistol, and went back to his room to get it, carrying it out carefully wrapped up in a paper,so that his mother would not see what it was. On the way he stooped down to kiss his little 1-year-old brother again. The baby saw the gleam of the nickel plate, and reached out its little hands to see what it was. In taking it away the weapon was discharged, the ball entering the baby's forehead and lodging in the base of his brain. At the time the baby was being held by another 4-year-old brother, no one else being in the room, but the discharge brought the mother from below and neighbors from the street. Doctors were sent for, but their efforts were unavailing, the baby dying in less than two hours. The boy's father, Frederick J. McMahon, had warned him time and again to have nothing whatever to do with fire-arms, but without his knowledge he bought one for 4th of July purposes and kept it hidden in his room. The little fellow was almost frantic with grief, and for a time it was feared his reason was affected. This is but one of many instances where the needless pos session of fire-arms has had a fatal result.

LOOKING UP.

It would be well for all liars like Ananias and Gehazi to remember a remark once made by a little boy to his father who was meditating a theft of potatoes out of a field. The father looked east, west, north and south, and seeing no one, began to pull up the roots.

"Father," said the lad, "there is one way you forgot to look."—Selected.

Divisions of the Day.—The Chaldeans, Syrians, Persians and Indians began the day at sunrise, and divided both the day and night into four parts. This division of the day into quarters was in use long before the division into hours. The Chinese, who begin their day at midnight and reckon to the midnight following, divide this interval into twelve hours, each equal to two of ours, and known by a name and particular figure. In Egypt, the day was divided into unequal hours. The "clock" invented by Ctesibus, of Alexandria, B. C. 250, was so contrived as to lengthen or shorten the hours by the flowing of water. The Greeks divided the natural day into twelve hours—a practice derived from the Babylonians. The Romans called the time between the rising and setting sun the natural day, and the time in the twenty-four hours the civil day. They began and ended their civil day at midnight, and took this practice from their ancient laws and customs and rites of religion, in use long before they had any idea of the division into hours. The first sun dial seen at Rome was brought from Catania, in Sicily, in the first Punic War,as part of the spoils of that city; and, after this period, they divided the day into twenty-four hours. An officer, called Accensus, used to proclaim the hours, and at the bench of justice gave notice every three hours what o'clock it was. In the Turkish Empire,time is reckoned by certain portions of the natural day resembling the "watches" of the ancient Jews and Romans. Public clocks not being in use, these divisions of time are proclaimed from the minarets.

Temperance.

A COSTLY LUXURY.

Statistics are often presented showing the enormous size of the nation's liquor bill, but few persons, comparatively, are aware how much is spent annually on another luxury—tobacco. The American Grocer has made a careful estimate of the nation's tobacco bill for 1886, and places it at $256,500,000—about $3.44 per capita. As not more than one-fifth of the population, probably, make use of the weed, the average expenditure of each user is about $17 per year, an amount that put at compound interest for fifty years at six per cent would buy a house and lot,

Of course this amount is nothing like so large as that spent for liquor—only a little over one-third, in fact, for the nation's annual liquor bill is about $700,000,000—but still it is a sufficiently formidable sum for an article that is, to say the least, not a necessity of life. More money is spent for tobacco than for sugar; almost twice as much as for those other luxuries, tea and coffee; and two and a half times as much as is spent upon schools.

For cigarettes alone the sum of $6,500,000 is spent—and wasted; for, of all the ways of using tobacco, cigarette smoking is the most injurious, the most insidious, the most disgusting and offensive. Twenty million dollars are spent upon smoking tobacco, $50,000,000 upon chewing tobacco—so the chewers have more to answer for than the pipe smokers. Of course the largest item in the list is for cigars. More money is burned up in the shape of tobacco than is consumed by all the accidental fires in the United States, and tobacco costs almost as much as fuel.—Selected.

ANTI-PROHIBITION MOB IN MICHIGAN.

At Sutton's Bay, in Leelanaw county, Sept. 17, Wm. A. Taylor, State Organizer of the Prohibition party, with other Prohibitionists, were attacked with intent to kill by a gang of saloon men. Mr. Taylor is one of the most active Prohibitionists in the whole State, and has rendered brilliant services to the Prohibition cause.

In the course of his organizing work for the party he made an engagement to speak at Sutton's Bay on Sept 17. The local workers billed the meeting extensively. H. and J. Deuster, who keep a saloon that has a most unsavory reputation—a Norwegian having been killed in it some time ago—began to make threats that they would break up the meeting and "do up" Taylor if he attempted to speak. On the night of the meeting they paraded the streets with guns and tin pans.

Gathering about the door of the school house as the meeting closed, they waited for Taylor to appear. He came out of the building in the company of some friends, one of whom, Mr. Cadham, was promptly knocked down and then kicked in the head. Mr. Cozart came to Cadham's assistance and was severely whipped and kicked, sustaining injuries which may prove serious. Mr. Palmer, another Prohibitionist, was slightly wounded. Mr. Taylor escaped without injury. During the fight the Deusters and their confederates several times cried out: "Kill him!"

DON'T HELP THE SNAKE.

As I was returning home a few days since I heard the piteous cry of a young rabbit in the grass by the roadside;and well might it cry for when I looked I saw it was in the coils of a huge bull snake seven or eight feet long.

At once my sympathy for the rabbit was aroused and I sent my hired man for a club with which to kill the reptile, but before he returned a large old rabbit appeared upon the scene; she skipped around for a moment in apparent great excitement while the cry for help still continued.

All of a sudden the mother's instinct (the strongest impulse in nature) seemed to overcome all fear and she sprang like a wild cat upon the captor of her young and planted her teeth deep into the back of his neck,and plied the claws of her hind feet with lightning rapidity to the back and sides of the serpent, producing a very peculiar sound, meanwhile the blood flowed freely from his wounds.

This was the liveliest tussle I had ever witnessed, but it did not continue long, for the snake rolled itself up into a ball and tried hard to encircle its tormentor in the coils.

The rabbit seemed to realize its danger, for at the end of perhaps a half a minute she loosed her hold and sprang two or three feet into the air, alighting at least eight feet from the scene of the conflict and beat a hasty retreat with the snake in hot pursuit, and before I could bring to bear my weapon he had disappeared in the hedge.

After the smoke of this sanguinary battle had blown aside, I was forcibly reminded of another conflict that has been going on in this country for ages past. I remember that the old serpent of the still, party of the first part, has encircled our beloved country in its dreadful coils and has annually crushed the life out of more than 60,000 of our men, women and children, parties of the second part; I also remembered that about the year 1873 the cry from the innocent victims having become as the roar of a great storm mingled with the wailings of perdition, the mothers and wives of the land became so wrought up as to forget all (heretofore) rules of propriety and made a fierce attack for the rescue of their loved ones.

This is and has been a death struggle, and judging from the writhings of the serpent it is bound to yield up the ghost in due time if we faint not.

The question now is, will the voters (parties of the third part) come to the rescue,or will they stand idly by and see the old serpent come off victorious. —H. A. Myers in Bloomington paper.

Henry George was asked the other day in one of his meetings,"How do you stand on the liquor question?" The papers report him to have answered,"I am all right on this question." What does Mr. George mean by "All right"? The platform of his party adopted at Syracuse says not one word on that question. That is all wrong. Over and over again, both privately and publicly, we have heard Mr. George say that he does not believe in prohibition, but that he believes it would be better to have free liquor, that is, everybody have the right to sell liquor without any restriction whatever. Dr. McGlynn was asked as to whether his party would take any stand on the question. He said, "No! we will not! We have too many men with us who love their drink." What think temperance labor men of all this? Is it right? Is such language true to the interests of the workingmen? Is it brave to be silent about a question so vital to the workingman's interest—silent in order to secure votes? Henry George and Dr. McGlynn have gone fishing for temperance gudgeons with base hooks.—Voice.

One of the most revolting instances of rum's "deadly doings" recently occurred in Hoboken, N. J., where a young man voluntarily gave himself up for arrest, stating that he had quarreled with his wife and hurt her so that she might die. The police hastened to his rooms, where they found the wife lying on the floor quite dead, her throat being cut across. By her side sat her baby boy, five months old, dipping his fingers in his mother's blood and smearing his face with it, innocent of the great tragedy about him. The neighbors bear witness to the industrious character of his wife, and that she was not given to quarreling. The husband had been drinking heavily, and was filled with maddened rage when he did the awful deed.

In a temperance speech at Plattsburg, Mo., Rev. Samuel Small said: "You Republicans need not build yourselves up and say the Democratic party is the whisky party. You had absolute control of the Government for twenty-four years, and when you left it the country was drenched and doomed and damned with liquor from Maine to California. I am a Mugwump, and the difference between me and you is that you are a jugwump."

"Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and establisheth a city with iniquity."

No amount of revenue can compensate for the suffering and crime which the legalized liquor traffic engenders.

The great revenues for high license, the enormous taxes on intoxicating drinks, are wrung from the wretchedness of worse than widowed wives, and worse than orphaned children.—President Seelye.

Methodist conferences in Wisconsin have declared their belief that Christian men ought not to raise or sell tobacco. Thirty thousand acres of the plant were under cultivation in the State this year, and the action of these religious bodies has aroused much comment.

Montreal advices say that the wholesale liquor merchants make no secret that their business is suffering to a great extent by the enforcement of the Scott Act.

Religious News.

THE WASHINGTON CONFERENCE OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

The call for this important meeting to be held Dec. 7–9, 1887, says: "Thoughtful men are convinced that the closing years of the nineteenth century constitute a momentous crisis in the history of the nation. There is a march of events which will not tarry. The necessity of planting Christian institutions in the formative West, and of strengthening them in the older States, the duty of overtaking the rapid growth of our cities with adequate church provision, the importance of closing the widening chasm between the church and the multitude, and of bringing the regenerative power of the Gospel to bear upon every character and life, demand the instant attention of the Christian Church and the full exercise of all its energies.

Popular education has multiplied wants and created tastes which wealth has not been sufficiently distributed to gratify; hence a growing discontent among working-men, which in prosperous times is an ill omen, suggesting grave questions concerning the next financial panic and the consequent industrial depression. The conflict with the saloon drawing to a crisis, and the manifest determination of the liquor power to accomplish its ends by fraud, corruption, or violence; a wide-spread spirit of lawlessness; the apathy of the popular conscience; the alienation of the masses from the churches, and increasing immigration—all these point to growing complications in the near future.

Under monarchical governments, men have thought that if power could be popularized the ills of life would mostly disappear. In this country, until recently, by reason of abundant public lands, a sparse and substantially homogeneous population, and an almost limitless demand for labor, we have been exempt from many of the evils suffered by European peoples. But we are now beginning to approximate European conditions of society. The existence of great cities, severe competition, an unemployed class, increasing pauperism and crime, are the occasion and evidence of a widespread discontent, for which the ballot affords no remedy. Has not the time come for us to make demonstration of the truth that the Gospel can do what popular suffrage cannot do? Is not this the nation, and is not this the generation, providentially called to make such application of the Gospel to the life of the people as has never yet been made? Will not those who have enjoyed "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," be the first to learn that the essential evils of society are caused, not by misrule, but by sin, and that the Gospel, therefore, must furnish the solution of the great social problems?

"The Christian church has not yet fully recognized its relations to the entire life of the community and the nation. Even Christian men, pre-occupied with private concerns and overburdened by the demands on their time, are prone to neglect the public welfare, and are loath to accept any responsibility existing evils.

"Denominations and local churches, each intent on its own good work, have fallen into a harmful competition instead of engaging in an intelligent and comprehensive co-operation.

"Our marvelous material growth and the progress of invention have produced new conditions to which business has been quick to adapt its methods. Do not important changes in population and in the habits and temper of the people require some changes in the methods of Christian work?

"The undersigned, therefore, unite in calling a General Conference of all Evangelical Christians in the United States, to be held under the auspices and direction of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States, in the city of Washington, December the 7th, 8th and 9th, 1887, to study in effect the following questions:

"1. What are the present perils and opportunities of the Christian church and of the country?

"2. Can any of them be met best by a hearty co-operation of all Evangelical Christians, which, without detriment to any denominational interests, will serve the welfare of the whole church?

"3. What are the best means to secure such co-operation, and to waken the whole church to its responsibility?"

Among the signers are Drs. Schaff, Strong, McCosh, Brooks, Hopkins, R. S. Storrs, Hurst, Dwight, Haygood, Crosby, T. P. Stevenson, W. H. French, and Errett, Gen. O. O. Howard, Geo. W. Cable, and E. W. Blatchford.

—Since 1852, seventy-five Sandwich Islanders have gone as foreign missionaries.

A SPECIAL BIBLE CONFERENCE.

A Conference will be held in Philadelphia, Nov. 15–20, which will aim to emphasize and make prominent the full inspiration of God's Holy Word.

While irreverent skeptics openly blaspheme the Bible, some of its professed friends, consciously or otherwise, have assailed its divine origin, and questioned its infallible teaching. The plenary inspiration of the complete canon of Scripture has been both ridiculed and repudiated, and the heresies growing out of such antagonism have both infected and affected the spiritual life of the church. Young disciples have been intimidated from avowing their faith; the army of doubters has increased, while unbelievers have grown bold in their opposition to the Word, and Words of the living God.

The Conference, in its distinctive testimony, will, therefore, be of incalculable value. The topics to be presented by God-fearing men, who are of note in the church of God, will confirm the faith of Christian believers in the Holy Scriptures, as given to us by the Holy Spirit in their original languages, in all their parts and terms. Rev. George C. Needham, who managed so successfully the Prophetic Conference in Chicago last year, is secretary of this conference. His address is Manchester-by-the-sea, Mass.

—The Iowa Synod of the United Presbyterian church adopted resolutions approving the prohibitory liquor law.

—Nine young Norwegian missionaries who have been studying at the mission school at Stavanger for six years, and also have medical training, are about to leave for fields in Africa and Madagascar.

—While the church of Christ has been gathering in not more than three millions of converts from the heathen world, the natural increase of that world has been twenty millions! Must not a tremendous advance be made somewhere along our lines of work?

—There are some Sunday-school classes in Boston, composed chiefly of young people from wealthy and cultured families, whose teachers make it a condition of membership that each scholar shall choose some person in sickness or need, for whom he or she agrees to spend some part of the time each week. One young lady reads aloud to a poor boy confined by an accident in the hospital. Another is teaching a servant to read. Another makes garments for some poor children.

—The American Bible Society, now in its seventy-first year, has agencies in Turkey, China, Japan, Brazil, Mexico, Cuba, Persia, and Uruguay; and assists missionary agencies in Austria, Ceylon, Gilbert Islands, India, Spain, Germany, Bulgaria, Sweden, Finland, Siam, France, Switzerland, Italy and Liberia. In 1885 its expenditures in these countries were $137,357.98. During its existence it has expended more than $22,000,000; and there are now versions of the Bible in circulation in over 200 languages and dialects.

—Pastor Schneller, who for more than twenty-five years has been at the head of the Syrian Orphan's Home in Jerusalem, reports that during the season just closed there have been more tourists and pilgrims in Jerusalem than in any single year in his life in the Holy City. There were nearly 30,000 pilgrims. Russia is erecting a tower on Mount Olivet one hundred metres high. It will be the highest building in the East.

—The India Witness, of Calcutta, says: The prime minister of Indore, a cultured yet orthodox Hindu, has been talking of infant marriage. He bemoans the backwardness of many educated natives "to emancipate their sisters," and this gives him "keen disappointment." He holds that Hindu civilization is doomed, unless the women are lifted out of their "present bondage of ignorance and superstition." He says, "child marriage is no marriage at all, and that the existence of the child widow is one of the darkest blots that ever defaced the civilization of any people, and it is the necessary consequence of the system of infant marriage, a system which is a gross libel on the pure laws of the Aryans." He concludes by saying, "Let us give up our debasing, infernal and abominable customs." This scholar does not think the present social customs of Hindus are anything less than an infernal caricature of pure Aryan habits and life. This view may be correct, and it is certain that infant marriage will soon be classed as a Hindu heresy. Not only have Hindus made void the commandments of God by their traditions, but all the dictates of reason, and all the rights of woman besides. The priest-ridden, paralyzed millions of India will soon be emancipated by the truth which makes free.

—The Rev. George R. Rogers, of Brook's Station, Ky., though ninety-six years old, frequently rides his horse to Louisville and back, a distance of twenty-six miles, and he still preaches and marries folks. He served throughout the war of 1812, and draws a pension for that service.

—If to-morrow there were to be one school to every million of women in India, 269 lady teachers additional must land on its shores to-morrow. China's women are far more destitute; and Ethiopia is stretching out her hands as never before to God—and to us.

Literature.

The Lincoln History, in the October Century, consists of a concise recital of the secession movement as exhibited in Congress, in the Cabinet of Buchanan, and in the correspondence of certain of the Southern leaders. A chapter is devoted to the secession of South Carolina and to affairs in Charleston Harbor. The papers in the War Series consist of "Marching Through Georgia and the Carolinas;" "Sherman's March from Savannah to Bentonville," by General Henry W. Slocum; and "The Battle of Bentonville," by General Wade Hampton; these papers presenting a graphic view of Sherman's operations after Atlanta. The battle series will close in the November number with the "Appomattox Campaign," other war articles of a general or untechnical nature, including General Sherman's "Grand Strategy of the War," being left over for future occasional publication. The frontispiece of the number is a striking portrait of Harriet Beecher Stowe, engraved by T. Johnson from a photograph by Sarony. This portrait is apropos of a paper by James Lane Allen, entitled "Mrs. Stowe's 'Uncle Tom' at Home in Kentucky," which recounts the life of the Kentucky slave of the old time, in a series of typical scenes, pointing out some considerations which it is thought should qualify Mrs. Stowe's point of view. Mr. Stedman contributes a paper of criticism, entitled "Twelve Years of British Song." The later work of Tennyson, Browning, Swinburne, and the younger English poets here receives critical attention. The paper in the series on "English Cathedrals" is this month devoted to Ely, which is called by Mrs. van Rensselaer "the great queen of the fen lands.... always imposing, always superb, always tremendous.... Nowhere," she says, "is there a more magnificent piece of handiwork."

The Missionary Review rebukes the worldly and selfish methods which often prevail in mission work, especially in our cities. Too often men are urged, not to repentance and faith for the salvation of their souls, but, by motives of worldly advantage, to identify themselves with the church. Dr. Wilder's "Answer to the Presbyterian Board" is continued, and with great force and judgment urges missionary autonomy, gratuitous service and self-sacrifice. The reports from foreign missionary societies is interesting, though not so fruitful in results as could be wished.

Miss Olive Risley Seward, the adopted daughter of the ex-Secretary, will tell in the November number of Scribner's Magazine a hitherto unwritten chapter of the diplomatic history of our country, regarding the abortive treaty with Denmark for the purchase of the island of St. Thomas.

Babyhood for October will be read by careful mothers with much interest. Such articles as Dr. C. L. Dana's on "Precocious Children," Dr. Yale's on "The Proper Shoe for Little Children," and Dr. Kitchen's on "Baby's Nose," will help many parents to better understand and provide for the comfort and health of the little ones. Other articles, some fully illustrated, and all helpful and suggestive, fill the number.

St Nicholas for October is the last but not the least excellent number of the current volume. Frank R Stockton contributes one of his capital "Personally Conducted" papers, on "The Low Countries and the Rhine," with abundant illustrations of the many interesting scenes described. "General Grant at Vicksburg" is the title of General Adam Badeau's war story, which is pleasantly supplemented by a very clever Southern sketch, —"Ole Mammy Prissy." John R. Coryell tells about the curious habits of an absurd bird with the queer name of Kiwi-Kiwi; and Mary J. Safford writes about a self respecting and knowing dog that stopped a mutiny. George J. Manson tells ambitious youths how they may become successful dry-goods merchants; while boys of a more literary turn may gain encouragement from "The Boyhood of John Greenleaf Whittier," as told by W. H. Rideing.

Lodge Notes.

At Sioux City, Iowa, Friday, the corner-stone of the new Chamber of Commerce was laid with Masonic ceremonies.

The membership of the Grand Army of the Republic aggregates 372,674. Judge John P. Rhea of Minnesota was elected commander-in chief at the St. Louis meeting.

General Secretary Litchman, of the Knights of Labor, reported at Minneapolis Friday, that there were 485,000 members in good and regular standing in the order. The money on hand amounted to $508,647.

Three hundred miners, employed by the McLean County Coal Company at Bloomington, Ill., have agreed to strike because the company had discharged the president and two secretaries of the local body of the National Federation of Miners.

The Grand Lodge of Ireland has three hundred and eighty-one lodges on its roll, numbering from 1 to 1014, and the Grand Masters' Lodge, at the head, without any number. There are seven regimental lodges. The largest province is Antrim, with eighty-seven lodges.

The Mormon missionaries who are proselyting in Great Britain held a meeting in London recently, and reported that their greatest success had been in Scotland and Wales. In London their mission had been an entire failure, for which they adopted a resolution invoking the curse of God on that city.

Gen. Lucius Fairchild, recently commander-in chief of the Grand Army of Republic, will give, in the November number of the American Magazine, an account of the origin, aims and work of the order. He will endeavor to make people believe that the G. A. R. is essentially a great benevolent society.

A secret conference of German Socialists, lasting three days, has been held at St. Gall, Switzerland. Eighty delegates were present. The police had no knowledge of the meeting until after adjournment. The Socialist leaders, Singer and Hasinclever, acted as presidents at different sessions. The speakers bitterly denounced the course pursued by the Socialist deputies in the Reichstag. Reports were read showing that since the previous conference the Socialists of Germany had spent 170,000 marks, of which 100,000 were used for election expenses, and 50,000 for defending members who have been prosecuted.

Advertisers who wish to secure the attention of the best class of purchasers, will find it to their advantage to secure space in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

HOME AND HEALTH.

NO NEED OF CATCHING COLDS.

Speaking of colds, I have a theory that no one ever need have one unless he chooses; in other words, that it is quite possible so to train the skin, that wonderful organ which is generally looked upon as the paper wrapper to our human bundle, as to render it non susceptible to sudden changes of temperature or atmospheric moisture, whence colds come.

And as this is exactly the season to commence such a system of pellar education, as it has proved effective in many instances within my own knowledge, and as it is within easy reach of every one to try, I write it here. The theory is that no skin that has been exposed freely for half an hour at the beginning of a day to a temperature lower than it will encounter through the day, will note small changes or be affected thereby.

A cold is simply a nervous shock, received by the myriads of minute nerve terminals that bristle over the surface of the human body, transmitted to the centers and so back again to mucous membrane, the peculiar seat of this special irritation. Let us then so train these sensitive fibres that they will pass by, unnoticed, changes of atmospheric condition, and the matter is accomplished.—American Magazine.

GOOD BREAD.—Among many kinds of bread which are good, there is only one for which I will give the rule. This is rye and Indian-meal bread, which I value very highly, and is made as follows: One coffee-cup of yellow corn meal; one coffee-cup of rye flour; one half coffee-cup of white or entire wheat flour; one half teaspoonful of baking soda; one and one-half cups of sweet milk; one-half cup molasses; and half a teaspoonful of salt. Sift all the meal and flour and soda together, then add the molasses and milk, beat well, and steam two hours. The steaming should be continuous, as the bread is likely to be heavy if it is not. This bread, with milk, makes a very healthful supper for many old folks and children. If stale it can be freshened by re-steaming, or moistening and placing in the oven for a few minutes.

The bread made from entire wheat flour is far more wholesome than that made from white flour. The entire wheat furnishes the elements of bone, which are removed from fine white flour. Old-fashioned Graham flour does not easily digest on account of its coarseness and the admixture of silicious bark. Entire wheat flour makes better breakfast cakes than any other, and can be used for any kind of cake that is necessary. It prevents constipation. Oatmeal or some mush should be on every breakfast table. Fruit is also more desirable there than at other meals

Coffee acts upon the brain as a stimulant, inciting it to increased activity and producing sleeplessness; hence it is of great value as an antidote to narcotic poisons. It is also supposed to prevent too rapid waste in the tissues of the body, and in that way enables it to support life on less food. These effects are due to the volatile oil and also to a peculiar crystallizable nitrogenous principle, termed caffeine. The leaves of the plant likewise contain the same principle, and the inhabitants of the island of Sumatra prefer an infusion of the leaves to that of the berries. Its essential qualities are also greatly changed, the heat causing the development of the volatile oil and peculiar acid which gives aroma and flavor.

A piece of zinc placed on the live coals in a hot stove will effectually clean out a stove pipe, the vapors produced carrying off soot by chemical decomposition.

It is claimed that the juice of lemon squeezed into a cup of strong coffee will afford immediate relief in neuralgic headache.

A few leaves of green wormwood scattered where black ants congregate is said to be effectual in dislodging them.

Wash your flatirons in soapsuds and dry thoroughly, if they at all trouble you by dropping black specks.

Never have dark furniture in the kitchen; it shows dust much more than light, and requires double care.

The best way to hang up a broom is to screw a large picture ring into the top of the handle.

Scald peaches and the skin can be removed much easier than by peeling without scalding.

The juice of tomato is said to be excellent for removing ink, wine and fruit stains.

CATARRH CURED.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

FARM NOTES.

PERMANENT SWARD—THE BEST GRASSES.

The basis of stock-breeding and the dairy should be permanent pastures and meadows. How to obtain these and retain them is the question. In some places, on alluvial lands, the answer is easy—by letting them alone, and occasionally sowing a little seed in thinned-out places, or scattering a little horse manure over such spots. In such soils it is natural for the grass to be retained, and it may last for a lifetime or a century. On uplands it is more difficult to keep land in grass without its killing out in the winter. This inclination is more common with some kinds of grasses than with others. Here is just where study should be made, and all the best means employed to do the best and to get the best results. I do not make it a rule to seed with oats, as the risks are too great of the seed catching well, and the cost is too much to admit of its waste. Large sums of money are lost in this way by the careless and unwise methods of seeding. Spring wheat is the best spring crop to seed with, and barley next. The farmer makes a mistake when he sows the grain as thickly with the seeding as he would without it. It is absurd to expect two good crops at the same time on the same ground Clover and timothy will often do well, especially if the season is a wet one, when put in with a spring crop of grain. The other grasses, more delicate in their start will never do well with an oat crop, and not as well with any grain as when put in alone. In order to get a sure seeding and not run the risks of loss of labor and seed, all seeding should be done with winter grain, and the seed put on both way as early in the spring as it is possible walk over the field. I have sown clover and timothy on the top of big snow banks and it did finely. The seed finds its way right down to the earth through the snow and ice, and gets bedded in the soil ready to start with the first growing weather, and to get a good root before any dry weather comes. These grasses are not suited for either a permanent pasture or meadow, and never should be put in with any such expectation. Clover may possibly linger in rich spots for three years, but it generally follows its nature (biennial) and dies out in two years Timothy, under favorable conditions, when not pastured after mowing or left to get a good start in the autumn, may last a few years, but as a pasture grass it is very poor, and about the last grass to be sown. Notwithstanding the inefficiency of timothy as a grass for pasture, it is sown more commonly than any other. This is because of its cheapness and the little care most people think is necessary to put it in. It does better for a meadow and fills a place as a grass for hay no other can fill.

For a lasting grass and to endure all the changes of weather and climate, I consider red top the best. All kinds of stock relish the hay, and also the pasture from it. It will outlive all other grasses, and afford twice as much pasture as timothy. Orchard grass I like for a pasture, on account of its earliness and constant growth. On good land it will furnish a new bite in three or four days after being eaten off. It is not so good for hay, as the stems are not thick enough, and unless cut just right it becomes woody. For an aftermath no grass is equal to it. It must never be pastured later than September, or mown later than this, for it will winter kill. This has been my experience, but undoubtedly in a warmer climate, where the ground does not freeze so hard, it might go through the winter with the crowns exposed. Such is not the case in latitude 43°. Our native blue grass (Poa pratensis) is valuable for pasture, as it is very early in starting, and grows all through the season. It is, however, so natural to the soil, that it will make its appearance in abundance if not sown. Red top is also indigenous on some farms. It may be a new idea, but it is a practical one, to fit land designed for pasture or meadow in the fall, and to sow the seed. When this can be done in August, it is an excellent plan, and it may be done after the crop of spring grain has been taken off. This will ensure a successful catch. When not done by the first of September, it can be done so late that the seed will not germinate until spring, or the land may be fitted in the autumn, and the seed sown on top of the ground so as to be ready to start with the first warm days. Such seedlings may be utilized the first season, and the crop be thicker and far more productive than under the haphazard system of seeding with grain.—F. D. Curtis, in Cultivator.

Fire Wednesday forenoon destroyed the great oat-meal mill of Douglas and Stuart at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. An explosion in the elevator in the third story, which riddled it as if struck by lightning, was followed by a fire that went to all parts of the mill quickly. It is believed the fire was caused by electricity, resulting from friction in the elevator leg.

The propeller California, laden with 24,000 bushels of corn and 800 barrels of pork, ran aground Wednesday morning just off St. Helena's Island. There were twenty seven people on board; fourteen were saved and thirteen lost. The boat is a total wreck.

The Attorney General of Kansas lets the part of his business relating to prohibition care for itself. Two cases against saloon-keepers which had been decided in their favor by State courts had been carried up to the United States Supreme court. The Kansas officer read the other day in the papers that the case had been called and Senator Vest of Missouri and a New York lawyer named Choate had argued for the saloons and the case had been submitted in this one-sided manner. Attorney General Bradford claims that he did not know, etc., but it would be well for Kansas prohibitionists to find out whether he is a Freemason or is incompetent.

The Crown Prince Frederick of Germany has been an inveterate smoker, and for months he has been suffering from a throat disease similar to that which killed General Grant. The best physicians of Europe have assisted to prevent its progress, but the latest report indicates a fatal result, as it is admitted that the disease is tobacco cancer, and incurable. This report gives alarm. The aged Emperor must soon yield to his first conqueror as well as last, and a peaceful successor was promised in Prince Frederick; but if he, too, is cut off his eldest son William, a young man of 28, known to be of an impetuous, bold and fiery temper, whose ambition cast into the trembling balance of European affairs, would plunge again the world in mourning for the wastes of war.

George W. Cable, the eloquent and brave Southerner, whose lectures and novels are only surpassed by his magazine articles which have contributed so much to the overthrow of the caste spirit in the South, has since his removal from New Orleans to Northampton, Mass., been a successful teacher of a Bible class. He has just taken charge of the great Bible study in Tremont Temple, Boston. This Union Bible class is one of the unique features of that city. Some years ago Dr. R. R. Meredith, pastor of the Union Congregational church, began a Saturday-afternoon Bible study in his own church. His gifts seemed to be exceptional and the class grew till it filled Tremont Temple with 3,000 members, and a salary of $10,000 it is reported was made up by subscription. Dr. Meredith lately accepted a call to the Tompkins Avenue pulpit, Brooklyn, made vacant by the re-entering upon the work of an evangelist by Dr. George F. Pentecost, and the big class has been at a loss for a teacher. Brilliant and versatile as Mr. Cable is in literature, the new work is yet an experiment with him, and he will find it a tax upon all his resources of Biblical information, enthusiasm and devotion such as few men can endure and succeed. The establishment of such classes in all our cities, led by godly men who stand with Christ against all the world's evils, would mark a blessed era in the Christian church.

The code of Illinois allowing the marriage bond to be annulled by a single judge, for many reasons unknown in the moral law, Chicago courts are notorious divorce mills. But if divorce is often easy, it is sometimes a thorny and dangerous way out of wedlock. Sabbath noon as Dr. Withrow's congregation was leaving the Third Presbyterian church on Ashland and Ogden Avenues, the swelling organ notes were stopped by the sharp crack of a revolver, five times discharged into the body of Mr. S. W. Rawson, a well-known and reputable banker, president of the Union Trust Company. More than a year ago Mr. Rawson began suit for divorce from his third wife whom he claims is an adventuress and perhaps worse. She is at least a fighting female, and has succeeded in defeating Rawson's efforts so far. She had a grown-up son by a former marriage, and whether she persuaded him to the deed or not, he at least appeared before the church and as Rawson stepped upon the street shot him down. He meant to kill; and has probably succeeded. His death will settle the suit and secure a widow's portion to a seemingly unworthy woman.

The clamor of labor societies gave us a law against "contract laborers, which it seems reaches farther than its framers intended. Some time ago the Collector at New York obliged a Scotch gardener who had been engaged in Scotland to come over and work for a gentleman in this country, to go back to Scotland, because he came under the provision of the law of Congress prohibiting the importation of "contract laborers." J. S. Kennedy, president of the St. Andrews Society, endeavored in vain to get the man ashore. Chinese and others have also been sent back under this law. But now there is a new application of the law. Rev. E. Walpole Warren has been engaged in England to come over and become rector of the Holy Trinity Episcopal church in New York, of which Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., was formerly pastor. Mr. Kennedy wants the law enforced against Mr. Warren, because he, too, was brought over under a contract to serve the church mentioned. On his appeal U. S. District Attorney Walker has decided that Mr. Warren's case comes under the obnoxious law, and it is his duty to bring suit against the church and the captain of the vessel on which the clergyman sailed. This is a beautiful law. The hyenas of anarchy have no check to their landing, nor do any of the lazzaroni class, but men who come to work, and paupers who are able and willing to work are, as it were, kicked off the docks. Such disgrace comes of blindly following a popular clamor raised by secret orders.

MORAL HEROES.

NO. IX.—LOVEJOY, THE MARTYR.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

Late in the autumn of 1837 appalling tidings swept through the country, from the Mississippi to the Atlantic, that caused men to hold their breath, and their hearts to stop beating, as if suddenly arrested by an earthquake. Across the broad prairies and over the mountains the terrible tidings were borne that LIBERTY, liberty of the press, the platform and pulpit, so sweet to the American people, whose praises had been sung by the million; for the security of which our fathers had plunged into the horrors of a seven years' war; the liberty purchased at such a cost had been ruthlessly stricken down and silenced in the person of one of her chief standard-bearers and defenders.

Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, knowing that an assault was about to be made by the enemies of freedom, sprang into the deadly breach. There he lay—the martyr in his blood—cold, still, dead, on the bank of the Father of waters, at Alton, Illinois. All over the North men were transfixed with horror! It was an epoch in the annals of the nation, and to this day the force of that shock is not allayed by those who felt it. As I rehearse the record, the same anguish rushes over me: the tears start to my eyes again, and I sit stunned at the recital as I did fifty years ago. It was the crime of the South against liberty. Heaven held back the avenging blow for a little space to make the descent surer.

A score of editorials in the Observer, of which Mr. Lovejoy was editor, lie before me. I have read them with the profoundest interest, not only because of the martyrdom of the writer, but because of their power to arouse the emotions into conflagration. No doubt the terrible charges against the flagrant wrongs in these articles against Southern slavery were the occasion of the deadly hate that nothing but his blood could appease. Surely the man that God raised up to warn the nation of coming judgment, and to be a swift witness against it, must have been clothed with tremendous energy and fearlessness from above.

The history of this blessed martyr, from his childhood to his death, furnishes ample demonstration that the minions of oppression selected no ordinary victim in whose blood to imbue their murderous hands.

Elijah P. Lovejoy was born 1802, at Albion, in the eastern part of Massachusetts, which in 1820 became the State of Maine. At an early age he exhibited in a marked degree the qualities of his Scotch descent of courage, firmness and perseverance. He had a memory of marvelous retention. By one hearing of the letters of the alphabet, from his mother, he memorized them all. At four years there shone out his remarkable passion for knowledge. Before he was five years old he was a fluent reader of the Bible. He could repeat many of the Psalms of David, and Watts's hymns almost without number. Through the whole of his youth he was a diligent reader of books. His remarkable physical powers were shown in his having no equal in his neighborhood for distance in swimming and depths in diving.

He graduated at Waterville College in 1826 with the highest honors of his class. One year later he turned his eyes and steps towards the new West, and paused not till he had placed 2,000 miles between "his lone heart and the fondly cherished home of his childhood." At St. Louis he took charge of a school, in which he continued until an editor's chair was offered him, which he accepted and entered upon what he regarded as the highway to political elevation. But Providence had proposed a life very unlike to that for this child of many prayers, who in his infancy had been consecrated by his parents to the service of the "covenant-keeping God."

In 1832 St. Louis was visited by an extensive revival of religion, during which a fundamental change was wrought in the character and purposes of our subject. It would be a dull sensibility indeed that could read the letters that passed between the son and his parents during and after this great change, without their emotions rising beyond control. From one of these letters I make a single extract:

"I wrote you four weeks since, and as you will have learned from that letter, was in a state of deep distress. Sorrow had taken hold upon me, and a sense of my long career in sin and rebellion against God lay heavy upon my soul. But it pleased God, and blessed be his holy name, to grant me, as I humbly hope, that very night joy and peace in believing. I was, by divine grace, enabled to bring all my sins and all my sorrows and lay them at the feet of Jesus, and to receive the blessed assurance that he had accepted me, all sinful and polluted as I was. And surely you may well join with me in saying that nothing but a miracle of sovereign mercy could have arrested and saved me from eternal perdition.

"My dear parents, I can see you now, after having read thus far, shedding tears of joy over the return of your prodigal son."

Here is a specimen of an exquisite poem of four pages:

"MY MOTHER.

"There is a fire that burns on earth,
A pure and holy flame;
It came to men from heavenly birth,
And still it is the same,
As when it burned the chords along,
That bare the first born seraph's song—
Sweet as the hymn of gratitude
That swelled to heaven when 'all was good.'
No passion in the choirs above
Is purer than a mother's love."

Soon after Mr. Lovejoy entered upon this new and divine life, he left the editorial sanctum for a place in a theological seminary, where he remained until the spring of 1833, when he spent a few months preaching in Rhode Island and New York city. By the urgent request of friends in St. Louis, he once more set his face for the West, to take charge of a religious paper, the St. Louis Observer.

"I came not" said the great Teacher, "to send peace upon the earth, but a sword." Here is a Christian editor, who had seen with his own eyes the horrors and wrongs of the bondman, and the aggressive spirit of a false religion, seeking not only the overthrow of Protestantism, but its own national supremacy; and into his very nature was ingrained the law and spirit of justice and equity. How could he but unsheathe the sword of the Lord, and strike home upon these enemies of God and men. Of course these blows aroused the deadly hate of evil-doers and the purpose to destroy the disturber of their peace. The war thus inaugurated raged with relentless fury for about three years.

The productions of his pen during these years would fill volumes. I insert here only a few sentences:

"I am accused of being an Abolitionist and threatened with violence. I expect it. I expect to be lynched or tarred and feathered, or it may be hung up. There is a burning hatred on the part of the popish priests and their minions, which would delight in quenching itself in my blood. And nothing would be more convenient for it than to execute its purposes under the mask of opposition to abolition. I have known for some months that I was in danger from the hand of violence, but the matter is now about to come to a crisis. In the Observer I shall come out openly and fearlessly, and, as I hope, in such a manner as becomes a servant of Jesus Christ when defending his cause. Whatever may be the consequences, I trust that through the grace of God I am prepared to meet them, even unto death itself. My enemies are open and fierce in their threats, but I can truly say I was never more calm. I have fasted and prayed. I am sure I have found the path of duty, and I am determined that all the fury of men and devils shall not drive me from it. Under a deep sense of my obligations to my country, my church, and my God I declare it to be my fixed purpose to submit to no dictation, and I am prepared to abide the consequences. I can die at my post, but I cannot desert it. I APPEAL TO GOD."

About this time a friend wrote him, "It does seem as though the devil, knowing that his time is short, had come down in great wrath to afflict David Nelson, George B. Cheever, and Elijah P. Lovejoy."

Three times, in the latter part of these years, his press had either been destroyed or thrown into the river. Driven from St. Louis, he went, by request, to Alton. Passing many events that transpired here, we hasten to the finale of the awful tragedy which soon took place.

His enemies were stung to madness, and driven to desperation by the terrors of the printing-press; and blinded by their fears and passions, they could see nothing in the lofty patriotism or benevolence that burned in the soul of their intended victim, either to admire or to turn them back from their deadly purpose. The Missouri Republican and other papers did all in their power to intensify this murderous hate, and to consummate the purpose of Lovejoy's death. The mob, not content with destroying several of his presses, sacked his office and destroyed his household furniture.

Here we must drop the order of events, to say that in March, 1835, Mr. Lovejoy married a lady, who, in every qualification, was not only worthy of him, but that fitted her for the fearful ordeal through which they were both to pass. With a love that was supreme, and the heart of a martyr, she stood by her husband like a rock, through all the conflict. And when the air was heavy with threats of assassination, when he was spurned, hated and reviled, she clung to him the more closely and devotedly. And never by a single word did she attempt to turn him from the scene of warfare and danger. But the day of greater trial was near at hand.

In October, 1837, Mr. Lovejoy preached morning and evening in the Presbyterian pulpit at St. Charles, the home of Mrs. Lovejoy's mother. Before leaving the church a young man slipped this note into his hand:

"Be watchful as you leave the church to-night."

The pastor of the church, and a few friends accompanied him to the home of his mother-in-law. About 10 o'clock, as they were conversing, the mob rushed up the outside stairs, and into the room, seized Mr. Lovejoy, and "with oaths and blood-chilling imprecations, swore they would have his heart out." The noise brought Mrs. Lovejoy from an adjoining room, where she was caring for her sick child.

She rushed through the mob, and clasping her husband, while they were endeavoring to drag him from the room, she smote them in the face right and left, telling them they must first take her before they could have her husband. Her mother and sister came to her aid, and succeeded in driving the mob out of the house.

Before the month passed, the fourth press was secured and shipped to Alton, and stored in a warehouse. The leaders of the St. Charles mob hearing of this, came to Alton and gathered another mob to destroy the press. Learning this, Mr. Lovejoy and a few friends went to the place to guard the press. In vain he declared his right, secured by the solemn sanction of the constitution—"a right I do not expect to relinquish so long as life lasts." "I can make no concessions, even though my life be the alternative."

He was delivering his last speech on earth. It was solemn and pathetic. One who was present said, "I cannot describe his manner. It was firm and decided. He knew he was in the midst of those who were seeking his blood. He had been all day communing with God. His whole appearance indicated a mind in a peculiarly heavenly frame. He presented a spectacle of moral sublimity such as I had never before witnessed."

An anti-slavery convention, called by 250 leading citizens of Illinois, had unanimously said that the Observer should be maintained at Alton. But these blood-thirsty minions could be satisfied with nothing but the life of the man of God, whom they hated. The shivering earth, the bursting tombs, the rent vail, and the darkened sun were not enough to soften the hearts of the reprobates who murdered God's Messiah. Nor could any power on earth appease the rage of these legitimate children of the devil. Unable to drive the defenders of the press out, they fired the building. Those from within went out and drove them away.

The mob then went to a rum-shop to nerve their courage with liquor. But evil doers are cowards; they therefore hid behind a pile of lumber, and like savage beasts waited for their victim to come out. Mr. Lovejoy, thinking they had dispersed, opened the door and was instantly fired upon from a two-barrel gun. Seven balls struck him, three in his breast, two in his left, and one in his right side, and one in his abdomen. He retreated into the room and fell, exclaiming, "Oh God, I am shot;" and in a few moments expired.

To the eternal disgrace of Alton, it must be passed down to posterity that hundreds of respectable citizens were passive witnesses of the doings of that mob of murderers.

"The awful tidings fell upon Mrs. Lovejoy like an arrow piercing her heart." She remained in a swoon several days. On her recovery she was calm but wept much. She said she hoped she might live to train up her infant son, Edward Payson, to imitate his father.

Just thirty-five years from the day of his birth, the martyr was buried by a few friends, between two large oak trees, one at his head and one at his feet. Many of the Northern papers condemned the murder in tones of thunder, but the South gloried in her shame.

BUNDO.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

The first case which was tried at the opening of the present sessions (Sierra Leone) was one of assault by eight female defendants—Bundo women—on one Jane Davis, a girl of fourteen years of age, whom they seduced and partly initiated into the mysteries of their craft against her will, as alleged: and occupied nearly two days, resulting in a verdict of guilty against four of the defendants, two of whom were sentenced to one month's and the others to two months' imprisonment.—Artizan.

The above is from a Sierra Leone paper and shows at once the power of African secret societies, and how they are regarded by civilized government. It would be an excellent thing if those who initiate men in Freemasonry, who pretend to kill men and raise them to a "living perpendicular," could be brought before courts of justice and treated in like manner. It is greatly to be hoped that there will be speedily such cases before our courts and that heathenism in America may have the same respect as it does in Africa.

SECRET SOCIETIES VS. THE CHURCH.

FROM A DISCOURSE BY REV. J. R. LATIMER, IDANA, KANSAS.

"And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and behold at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord and their faces toward the east; and they worshiped the sun toward the east." Ezra 8: 16.

A request was recently made in the Christian Cynosure that all anti-secret pulpits would present the influence of secret societies on the church. I shall endeavor to comply with that request.

If we examine the ancient heathen religions we find that secrecy formed a leading element in them. They had what they termed the mysteries, which were revealed to none save the fully initiated. In fact, in those religions we have the root of modern secretism.

We shall speak more particularly of Masonry, because it is the mother of the secret societies of today. The main parts of its ritual are taken from the ancient sun worship. We lay down this proposition: Masonry directly antagonizes the church of Christ.

1. It claims to be a religion. This can be proved from its own accepted authorities. Let us call Mackey, one of the highest of these, to the stand. In his Masonic Ritualist, or Monitorial Instructions in the degrees from Entered Apprentice to Select Master, we find that Masonry has its stated prayers. Mackey gives a great many of them. Then we find that it has hymns; also that it has funeral ceremonies. It buries its dead with religious rites. In Christian lands they introduce Scripture readings into their ceremonies.

The lodge has three movable jewels, the Rough Ashlar, the Perfect Ashlar, and the Trestle Board. Mackey gives an explanation of these, of which the following is a part: "By the Rough Ashlar we are reminded of our rude and imperfect state by nature; by the Perfect Ashlar, that state of perfection at which we hope to arrive by a virtuous education, our own endeavors, and the blessing of God." Again, Mackey says, "Although Freemasonry is indebted for its origin to its religious and philosophic character," etc. "As Masons we are taught never to commence any great or important undertaking without first invoking the blessing and protection of Deity, and this is because Masonry is a religious institution". . . . In one of their hymns they sing, "Hail Masonry divine." Masonry has more than once administered the sacrament of baptism.

Its worship is sun worship. Mackey says, "The orientation of lodges, as their position due east and west, is derived from the universal custom of antiquity. 'The heathen temples,' says Dudley, 'were so constructed that their length was directed toward the east, and the entrance was by a portico at the western front, where the altar stood, so that the votaries, approaching for the performance of religious rites, directed their faces toward the east, the quarter of sunrise.' The primitive reason of this custom undoubtedly is to be found in the early prevalence of sun worship." Mackey says that learned Masons have been "always disposed to go beyond the mere technicalities and stereotyped phrases of the lectures, and to look in the history and the philosophy of the ancient religions, and the organization of the ancient mysteries, for a true explanation of most of the symbols of Masonry, and there they have always been enabled to find this true interpretation."

In the Entered Apprentice degree they have what is called the Rite of Circumambulation. Mackey says by way of explanation, "Among the Hindoos the rite of circumambulation was always practiced as a religious ceremony; and a Brahmin, on rising from his bed in the morning, having first adored the sun, while directing his face to the east, then proceeds by the way of the south to the west, exclaiming at the same time, 'I follow the course of the sun.'"

He then refers to the ceremony as practiced by the Druids, and then adds, "Hence we find in the universal prevalence of this ceremony, and in the invariable mode of passing from the east to the west by the way of the south,....a pregnant evidence of the common source of all these rites from some primitive origin, to which Freemasonry is also indebted for its existence. The circumambulation among the pagan nations was referred to the great doctrine of Sabaism, or sun worship. Freemasonry alone has preserved the primitive meaning."....

Let the reader carefully consider these declarations of Mackey (we could give many more), and then say whether it be true that Freemasonry is a religious institution, and its worship sun worship?

2. It claims to regenerate and save men. In this it makes a higher claim than the true church has ever made. Christ did not establish the church as a regenerating institution. He has not taught us to depend upon it as such. He has taught us that regeneration is a purely divine act, the act of the Holy Spirit.

Let us see what Masonry claims according to Mackey. I can give only one quotation. He says: "The lodge is, then, at the time of the reception of an Entered Apprentice, a symbol of the world, and the initiation is a type of the new life upon which the candidate is about to enter. There he stands without our portals, on the threshold of this new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors and covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, he comes inquiringly to our doors, seeking the new truth, and asking a withdrawal of the vail which conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight."

Can a Christian knowingly submit to such degradation?

"There is to be, not simply a change for the future, but also an extinction of the past, for initiation is, as it were, a death to the world and a resurrection to a new life." "Now this new birth should be accompanied with some ceremony to indicate symbolically, and to impress upon the mind this disruption of old ties and formation of new ones. Hence the impression of this idea is made by the symbolism of the shock at the entrance. The world is left behind—the chains of error and ignorance which had previously retained the candidate in moral intellectual captivity are to be broken—the portal of the temple has been thrown widely open, and Masonry stands before the neophyte in all the glory of its form and beauty, to be fully revealed to him, however, only when the new birth has been completely accomplished. Shall this momentous occasion be passed unnoticed? Shall this great event—the birth in the Masonic life of the aspirant—have no visible or audible record? Shall the entrance for the first time into the lodge—the birth, as it has justly been called into Masonry—be symbolized by no outward sign?....Or, rather, shall not all the Sons of Light who witness the impressive scene feel like the children of Korah, who, when released from the captivity of Babylon, and once more returning to the Temple, exclaimed, in the outburst of their grateful joy, 'O clap your hands, all ye people; shout unto God with the voice of triumph.' The SHOCK OF ENTRANCE is, then, the symbol of the disruption of the candidate from the ties of the world, and his introduction into the life of Masonry. It is the symbol of the agonies of the first death and of the throes of the new birth."

Reader, can anything be clearer than that, to show its claims?

3. It endeavors to silence the testimony of the church against it. Mackey calls these outside "cowans," to intimate that they belong to the profane. Many a pastor who desired to be faithful in declaring the whole counsel of God has been compelled to leave his pulpit by Masonry. The weapons which Christ has put in the hands of his followers "are not carnal, but spiritual." The weapons of the lodge are not spiritual, but carnal, exceedingly carcarnal. Hence it is evident whence comes the inspiration of the lodge; not from above, but from beneath; not from Christ, but from the devil. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

4. It renders church members, over whom it gains control, very careless and indifferent as to their Christian duties. A "bright Mason" is never an active, working member of the church. Such has been my observation; and I have yet to hear of the first case to the contrary. I know a congregation that is very lifeless. A pastor who labored hard to awaken an earnest Christian spirit in it, for six or eight years, left it, despairing of any good from it. What is the trouble? Simply this, it is completely lodge ridden. The lodge rules. No man can serve two masters.

5. It rejects the Head of the church, the Author of Christianity. None of its prayers given by Mackey are in the name of Christ. It leaves his name out of the Scripture passages that are used in the lodge. Mackey says that "the ornaments of the lodge are the Mosaic Pavement, the Indented Tressel and the Blazing Star." He gives the following explanation: "The Blazing Star is said by Webb to be 'commemorative of the star which appeared to guide the wise men of the East to the place of our Saviour's nativity.' This, which is one of the ancient interpretations of the symbol, being considered as too sectarian in its character, and unsuitable to the universal religion of Masonry, has been omitted since the meeting of Grand Lecturers at Baltimore in 1842." I confess that I never knew before that anything that pointed to the Saviour was sectarian!

So careful are they to keep the Lord Jesus Christ out of the lodge that, in at least one degree, as Mackey tells us, they date their documents "A. L." (Anno Lucis, in the year of light); or "A. Inv." (Anno Inventionis, in the year of the discovery).

What must the influence of such an institution be on the church? Have we not proved our proposition that Masonry directly antagonizes the church?

NEW YORK ANARCHISTS.

THEIR STRENGTH AND PRINCIPLES.

Henry Guy Carleton having volunteered to investigate anarchism in New York, the World sent him forth in the dead of night seeking whom he might devour. Aided by disguises and the like diabolical arts, he ingratiated himself upon a select circle of these gentry and brought away a story which Inspector Byrne pronounced tolerably accurate. After midnight Thursday morning a week ago, says Mr. Carleton, speaking of one of his newly found blood-drinking friends, I accompanied him to his lodgings on Eldridge Street, near Houston. It was in a tenement house, and he lived on the third floor, back. The filth of the place, the damp, unwholesome smell, the dingy walls, the squalling of hungry babies, the querulous voices of women and the curses of drunken men stumbling up the creaking stairway were the accompaniments of the story. I gave him a quarter to buy a bucket of beer, and with that and a solitary candle between us he gave me his first lesson in the principles of anarchism. We had many talks afterward. Much I drew out of him by questions, and some things he gave in full of which I only give part, for reasons which will be found below.

"We Anarchs come from the organization which had its real beginning in Europe some twenty years ago. A general dissatisfaction existed among the working classes, and under La Salle and Karl Marx secret organizations were formed condemning the lukewarm measures employed by the social democracy and advising the use of force. We were then called the 'National German Workingmen's Union,' but in secret we were not for government but for non-government, and soon were called 'Anarchists.'

"Among our theories we claimed that Christ was an Anarchist, as he opposed and disapproved of the rulings and dictation of the Roman kings. La Salle, after starting the movement, became appalled at the methods advised by the Anarchists, and finally drifted back to the Social Democrat movement. He was killed afterward in a duel about a woman. About this time Herr Most, and others since deceased or executed, took the lead in all our congresses and meetings, which were usually held in secret, in Switzerland. We were finally routed out of existence by the German Government. Most, after being repeatedly imprisoned, was forced to emigrate. Others who had attempted to execute measures of force were tried and executed, so that while there are in this city larger or small numbers of Anarchists we have no real organization. We have learned to know there is a Judas in every twelve, hence each of us acts for himself and we never act in a body. To do so would be fatal to our cause.

"In this city there are three Anarchist groups. No. 1 we call "The International Workingmen's Association;' No. 2, 'The Workingmen's Confederation,' and No. 3 is 'The Machinists' Rifle Corps.'

"Group No. 1 is composed of about fifty men who are trustworthy. It was organized in 1883 by Herr Johann Most and Justus Schwab. We meet every Saturday night where we had our talk, at Kraemer's beer saloon, on Seventh Street, near Avenue A. There we have lectures. At each of these lectures a new chairman is selected and we discuss anarchism and general topics. We admit no one except by card. The notices of meetings are published in the Freiheit, Herr Most's paper. Our principal men are Herr Most, William Hasselman—he is a chemist—M. Wetzken, who is a machinist, Charles Woelke, Moritz Schultz, Robert Schlag, R. Helbig and his three brothers, Joseph Misury, Henry Hotze, —— Schwiehlin, Paul Wissig, Clement and H. Schnetz.

"In addition to these lectures, we have secret meetings, at which only the chosen are invited. The word is conveyed personally and not by any circular or letter. We used to drill at these secret meetings, but since that affair in Chicago we have had no drills and the muskets have been put away.

"We are carefully taught the use of dynamite. In good hands it is a safe weapon to our friends and deadly to our enemies. One pound did all that work in Chicago. One hundred pounds, well used, would give us control of New York. Ah, it is a great invention—so easily carried. It makes each man a hero. It makes him strong against an army.

"Two years ago we had a school, and Hasselman used to teach us how to make it and how to use it. It is good stuff. It looks like sawdust and oil—so innocent—but when it explodes—poof! a whole army goes down. The school is now broken up, but Hasselman is here yet. He is a clerk in a wine house.

"We have no storehouse for dynamite and bombs. That would be dangerous. We can get all we should want at the factory, and it is cheap. Bombs? An oyster can is good enough. Give me dynamite, a cap, a little fuse and I will make a bomb in ten minutes with a can, a bottle, a cigar-box, anything.

"Mezzeroff is a fool and a rascal. Why, he said he would sell dynamite for $1 a pound. Of course, No. 2 dynamite can be purchased for 30 cents a pound, fuse for 3 cents a yard and caps for 2 cents apiece. I can make two pound bombs for $1 and have money to spare.

"The Machinist Rifle Corps are the only armed body. They practice shooting in beer gardens in Hoboken, Newark, etc. Most of them are marksmen, and will count their men when the day comes.

"What do we seek to accomplish? This. These are our principles:

"1. The total destruction of class rule as at present in existence. We will accomplish this by any means which may be necessary. We will accomplish it by revolution and by energy.

"2. The founding of a new order in society, based upon a free and communistic oaganization of the productive classes.

"3. A free exchange of products, equal in value, by the productive organizations themselves, or rather by the producers, without go-betweens and profit-makers.

"4. The organization of a system of education free from religion and on a scientific basis for both sexes alike.

"5. Equal rights for all without distinction as to race and color.

"6. The regulation of all public interests by free social agreements between the independent communities and groups.

"We believe this world should be without rulers or servants. All service is to be voluntary, and all agreements and restrictions are voluntary. We will have no marrying. Men and women can live together and support each other as long as they like, and no longer. We will have no master law but our own will and our own individual sense of right and wrong. Our only restraint shall be our moral strength. No one shall become rich, for the excess of his production over his own needs shall go to the general fund and for the general good.

"To become a member of any group, a man must be recommended by a member, and must be identified with the workingmen's cause. He must be vouched for as trustworthy or must have performed some great deed.

"When I say the workingmen, I mean our workingmen. The Labor party is divorced from us. The time will come when it will see its error. Legislation will not accompiish what we can do with force. Capital laughs at the ballot box, but it trembles at the bomb.

"We are not many, but we have power. Some day the country will shake, and men who sneer at us will see and learn.

"We look to Herr Most as our leader. He is a good writer. He talks well. He is not a fighter and we do not expect him to lead us in action. There are many Anarchs in whom we would have no confidence if a fight came.

"There is no Anarchist headquarters. Chicago used to be the center, but the leaders are now martyrs. The center is now in New York. Group No. 1 is the informing bureau, to which all groups or members apply for information. No person in any group has the right to order or dictate. We have no grips, signs, or pass-words. It any call or information is required it is given by word of mouth. That is safe.

"Herr Most says we are increasing, but I fear he is wrong. Excitement brings us recruits. Quiet kills our strength. I think we were much stronger four years ago.

"We are not in favor of Socialists. They are too lukewarm. They call us fanatics. It may be so. They talk; we act.

"We conduct our secret meetings in this way: Those chosen are notified orally. When assembled any one takes the chair and moves to nominate a chairman. He can only serve at one meeting and no more. Upon taking the chair the elected chairman then asks those present if there is any new business or suggestions in the interest of the cause. Such as choose write these suggestions on slips of paper and hand them to the chairman. He mixes up the slips, making it impossible to identify them, and then reads them in detail. A discussion of each then follows. Should any one volunteer to carry out any violent measure proposed he does so without announcing his intention or taking into his confidence any but those in whom he has the greatest reliance. Thus no one present will know more than the public at large.

"To be a good Anarch you must be daring and resolute. Trust no one but the men you know. If you are going to do any great act for the cause, confide only in those whom you need to help you in the scheme. We are few, but we can wield a terrible power. The revolution is coming. There will be thousands wanting to act then and not know how. We will teach them and provide the means. Our argument is Force, and that is unanswerable. Wait till the day of the red flag comes and you shall hear our thunder. But be patient. Work in the dark. Work slowly and carefully. Look out for spies. They are everywhere. Get your dearest friends. They will be few. They will get their dearest friends, and thus it will grow. Better a few good men than many indifferent ones. We are a school for leaders. When the mob comes we will leap in with the red flag and lead it."

Such was the story of the Anarchist. It covered several interviews. It represented many hours of talk—and beer. Icy as was his early reserve, he thawed under free lager as March snows under April showers. "The red flag," "dynamite," "the revolution"—each time he mentioned these his eyes flashed and his teeth gnashed in a savage smile. He said one thing which I remembered well:

"I say, damn the newspapers. They are the capitalistic hounds on our trail. Look at the World. It has often been on our track. I would like to see a reporter talk to me. I'd choke him to death and throw him in the river."

The number of Anarchists in this city is about one thousand. Of these not over five hundred are professed and admitted to the "groups," and of these, again, not more than two hundred and fifty could be relied upon to do any "work." They are a shiftless, needy, pitiful lot, without money or influence, full of beer and talk, ready to prompt others to desperate acts and to crawl under beds while the work is being done. They rank with the rattlesnake, more to be feared in the undergrowth than in the open, full of deadly venom and malice, yet easily controlled and destroyed by a rod when seen. What they are can best be judged by the doctrines they preach—universal lawlessness among men, universal concubinage among women. The tree is licensed passion and unbridled lust, the fruit is the most vicious, cowardly and brutal degeneration of which humanity is capable—the Anarchist.—Chicago Herald.

MISSOURI MEETINGS.

It is time for a general rally in old Missouri. To this end it has been thought best to hold two district meetings, one in north and the other in south Missouri. The first will convene at Princeton, Mercer county, beginning the night of Oct. 25, and continuing over the following day and night. Let every friend of reform resolve to be at this meeting. It will do us all good to have a hand shake all around with old friends and new ones, and pledge anew our devotion to the great reforms that are spreading and widening and deepening so rapidly. Other States are moving ahead and Missouri must not be idle. She has as brave and noble Christians and patriots as any State in the Union. Already thirty counties are under local option, and others soon will be. Republican States may yet learn a lesson from old Missouri and far-away Georgia with just three wet counties left. Never was the movement against the lodge, twin evil of the saloon, so aggressive and prosperous as now, and Missouri must keep abreast with other States. While so many thousands are giving time and money so freely to boom secret despotism and Grand Army parades, let true Americans and Christians do as much for pure religion and good government. And again we urge all friends of truth and right to be at Princeton.

The Southern district meeting will be announced later. There is a strong element in south Missouri opposed to the secret lodges, and it is very desirable to unite the forces and become better acquainted. And now just a word more. Let every Cynosure reader drop us a line as to the outlook. Yours for civil and religious liberty,

M. N. Butler, Agent N. C. A.

UP AND DOWN IN ALABAMA.

The Alabama W. C. T. U. Endorses the N. C. A. Agent and Declares for "Open Work"—The Alabama State Association to Meet in Mobile—A Welcome at Marion—A Noble-Minded Ex-Confederate—The Literary Institutions of the City and their Trials.

Dear Cynosure:—The Second Alabama W. C. T. U., before the adjournment of the Montgomery Convention, passed some excellent resolutions. They endorse woman suffrage as "rendered necessary by the supreme need of the hour." They promised to carefully consider the claims of the Prohibition party and to everywhere urge the duty of yielding party preferences for the sake of principle. They demanded that all political parties shall favor prohibition. One resolution thanked Dr. Atticus Haygood for his brave and faithful advocacy of the rights of the colored man and for his able and eloquent address; another expressed thanks to your correspondent for his attendance and words of cheer. It expressed sympathy with the special line of work in which I am engaged and declared "in favor of open work in the temperance movement." An able address was made by pastor Alstock on the last night of the convention and several ministers and ladies from the North expressed their sympathy with the organization and their work.

On Friday night I preached in the Dexter Avenue Baptist church. I was most hospitably entertained by Mr. H. A. Loveless, a colored man who has achieved wealth by enterprise and diligent industry. He has never joined any secret society but strongly opposed them. He got his education and imbibed his principles when under the instruction of Rev. H. Woodsmall at Selma. On Saturday, Oct. 1, I returned to Selma and on Sabbath preached in the morning in the Congregational church, Rev. C. B. Curtis pastor, and at 4 P. M. in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. G. M. Elliott pastor, and at 7:30 in the St. Phillips Street Baptist church, Rev. Booth pastor. In the first two there was a fair attendance and in the last it was large. In each case I dwelt to some extent on the evils of the secret lodge system and the duty of separation. In the first two there was entire unanimity of sentiment on this question and in the last I had the sympathy of the pastor and the leading members. One leading member of the Congregational church, who was an Odd-fellow, on a previous occasion withstood me stoutly, but soon after withdrew from the order, and now expressed his approval of my remarks.

On Monday night, Oct. 3, we held a meeting of such members of the Alabama Christian Association as reside in Selma, at the Reformed Presbyterian church. At this meeting it was voted to instruct the Executive committee to call the next annual meeting at Mobile at some time during the winter. The following named brethren were chosen delegates to the New Orleans meeting of the N. C. A.: Rev. G. M. Elliott, Rev. C. B. Curtis, Prof. H. W. Reed and Prof. A. A. Peters. Several names were added to the roll of members and the progress of the reform was regarded as hopeful.

A call at the large new and beautiful rooms of the Y. M. C. A. developed the fact that the president and leading members were Masons. The secretary, a Connecticut man, was much in favor of secret societies. He saw no harm in excluding the name of Christ from prayers and Scripture readings and was doubtful whether their committee would be willing to have the Cynosure put on their list of papers. He was very polite, and confessed that so far as Masonry is concerned, my points were well taken.

On Tuesday at 4 P. M. I left for Marion, once called "the Athens of Alabama." I was met at the station by Rev. A. W. Curtis and taken to his pleasant and hospitable home. I found that a lecture had been announced for the evening and at 7:30 we repaired to the neat Congregational church, where we met a good congregation. The first business was to listen to a report from Miss R. Mickle, the delegate from the local W. C. T. U. to the State convention, after which I spoke for nearly an hour on the secret society system and its relations to the colored people. There was excellent attention and a good many secret society people in attendance. On Wednesday the 5th, together with Bro. Curtis, we called on pastors, teachers and business men, and at night met a congregation in the same church. Among those present were Capt. C. W. Lovelace, a prosperous planter and merchant. He, by request, offered prayer at the opening of the meeting and at the conclusion of my lecture made some excellent remarks, saying that the Christian church was the only society that he cared to be connected with, or that is at all necessary for the well-being of the country. Capt. Lovelace is a remarkable man. He was an officer in the Confederate army, has been for years an elder in the Presbyterian church, is a life member of the American Missionary Association, a man of great practical benevolence, and a thorough Christian gentleman. Like most men in his station in life he has been lured into the lodge, but has long since abandoned it, and is a subscriber for the Cynosure. Such men as Dr. Haygood and Capt. Lovelace, like the Centurion who sent to Christ to heal his servant, and yet felt that he was not worthy to receive him under his roof, are an honor to any people.

I have said that Marion has been called "the Athens of Alabama." It is to be feared that its glory is departing. Formerly it had five flourishing institutions of learning and the town was distinguished for the absence of the drink traffic, and the excellent state of society. Now the two largest schools are removed, two saloons have been licensed instead, and the town is not flourishing. The causes that have brought about this change are as sad as they are remarkable. Howard was one of the oldest and best sustained of the Baptist male colleges of the State. It was under the patronage and control of the white Baptists of Alabama. The Lincoln State Normal school was chartered and located here some years since for the education of colored teachers. It occupied a building erected by the A. M. A. and the colored people, and which was relinquished to the State. The school prospered under the care of President W. B. Paterson and had last year about 400 students with regular college classes. Both schools moved on harmoniously, and were the just pride of the people. Unfortunately a difficulty arose between a student of the Normal and several students of Howard, in which one of the latter was severely cut. I will not attempt to speak of the merits of the controversy. At once a great outcry was raised against the Normal School. The legislature was petitioned to take away its charter and did so, at the same time chartering the Alabama State University, now at Montgomery, to take its place.

Meanwhile Howard, which it was hoped would be more prosperous if the Normal was removed, has been also removed to Birmingham. The people of that flourishing city desired better educational advantages and subscribed $75,000 and a considerable tract of land to be given to the college in case it was removed to that place. It has just been opened at Birmingham under favorable auspices. Many of the colored people are moving away because of the loss of the Normal School. This seriously depletes the colored churches.

Among the schools that remain are two flourishing female seminaries, viz., Marion Female Seminary (Presbyterian and Methodist) and Judson Institute (Baptist). This latter was founded in 1839. Its last catalogue says: "For nearly half a century the Judson has been a leading factor in the civilization of the South; and for the character of its work can point with confidence and pride to the hundreds of noble women who have come under its training." The location is beautiful and the buildings large and fine. I was most kindly received by Pres. Avarett, who was glad to have the Cynosure placed in their reading room. I did not visit the other seminary, but heard good reports of it. I cannot but think that there is a future for Marion and that in the future as in the past it will take the lead in the work of Christian education, and I sincerely hope that the A. M. A. will be able to take up the work discontinued by the State Normal school. The Christian education of the colored people of the South will injure no one but be an inestimable blessing to all. I expect to go to Tuscaloosa and Birmingham and then to Selma and Mobile.

THE MINNESOTA STATE MEETING.

THE SECRETARY'S REPORT.

St. Charles, Minn., Oct. 11, 1887.

Editor Cynosure:—The Minnesota Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, met in convention Oct. 4, 5, and 6, 1887, in Chestnut Hall, Minneapolis. President E. G. Paine was on hand, and Rev. W. W. Ames of Menominee, Wis., was chosen secretary pro tem. Revs. J. P. Stoddard's and C. F. Hawley's lectures were rousing and very impressive.

Wednesday afternoon Rev. Wm. Fenton of St. Paul gave us a very instructive address on the Bible view of Freemasonry, followed by short and enthusiastic speeches by Rev. W. W. Satterlee of Minneapolis, Bros. Ames, Stoddard and others.

Thursday afternoon Rev. W. W. Ames gave us a spirited address of encouragement. Revs. A. C. Hand of Chain Lake Center, Minn., S. F. Porter of Donnelly, Minn., and M. A. Gault, of the National Reform Association, made some short speeches which were filled with the Spirit of God. Father Hand and wife seemed not to lose a moment of the convention, and are full of the spirit of enthusiasm for this Christian work; as also Mrs. B. N. Cravath of St. Charles, Minn., who was present with her usual readiness to work for our cause. Our godly brother, Rev. R. J. Williams of Moose Lake, Minn., was there, ever ready with an earnest testimony for the truth in the cause. The last evening a Mason asked a question or two, which were very readily answered by Bro. Stoddard.

Our numbers during the convention were not large, but what was lacking in numbers was made up in enthusiasm, and all feel more earnest for the work. The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The secret lodge system has become a power in this and other countries which influences and modifies social, commercial, civil and ecclesiastical relations in society, trade, civil administration and the church, resulting in unnatural and unscriptural separations in the family, unwarranted favoritism and proscription in trade, perversions of justice in our courts, and desecration and dissension in the church; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That it is the duty of every citizen, especially in a republican state, to investigate and familiarize himself with the principles, teachings and influences of the secret orders.

2. That since we find the worship of the Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges, as shown by their accredited standards, to be a revival of Baalism and ancient pagan worship, we are compelled in fidelity to Christ and the truth to denounce their secret religions as anti-Christian, and those who practice those rites as departing from the law and commandments of God.

3. That we find the covenants of Freemasonry and kindred orders incompatible with the equal rights of men before the civil law and prejudicial to justice in our courts, morality in our citizens and the cause of temperance and good order in the community.

4. That we re-affirm our purpose to expose, withstand, and seek by every lawful and Christian means the removal of all secret orders as the enemies of righteousness and truth in the earth; and recommend that they be prohibited by both church and state.

5. That we heartily commend the W. C. T. U. in its work, and sincerely hope that it will avoid all entangling alliances with secret orders and tolerate only such honorable methods in its work as require no cloak of concealment from an interested public.

Resolved, That we heartily congratulate the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church of the Augustana Synod for the noble stand they have taken against the secret lodge system, and that we learn with satisfaction that the anti-lodge sentiment is so generally shared by the entire Scandinavian population.

Resolved, further, That we recognize the mighty hand of God in the wonderful work of the Salvation Army, and we are glad to know that the leaders in that movement set their faces against the secret lodge system so far as they are intelligently informed in regard to the nature and character of the secret lodges.

A resolution was passed that a delegation of five be appointed to attend the National Prohibition Conference in Chicago, Dec. 1, 1887. The following were appointed: Elwood Hanson of Minneapolis, Prof. E. G. Paine of Wasioja, G. P. Hall of Minneapolis, and Rev. A. C. Hand of Chain Lake Center. Voted that the fifth member be appointed by these four, and that credentials be given to each of the delegates, signed by the president and secretary.

The officers elected were: Prof. E. G. Paine, Wasioja, president; Rev. Prof. Brainard, 1st vice-president; Rev. P. Fuller, Utica, 2nd vice-president: Rev. Wm. Fenton, St. Paul, corresponding secretary; Mrs. M. F. Morrill, St. Charles, recording secretary; Wm. H. Morrill, treasurer.

At a meeting of the executive committee, Oct. 7, 1887, it was decided to employ Bro. Elwood Hanson of Minneapolis for three months as State lecturer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NATIONAL REFORM IN EASTERN NEW YORK.

Newburg, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1887.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—In the battle of Lodi, May 10, 1790, Napoleon drove the Austrians over the Adda. Their batteries, however, still commanded the bridge which spanned the river. In the face of the cannon Napoleon ordered his columns to cross the bridge. Marshal McDonald said; "It is impossible." "Impossible is only in the dictionary of fools," replied Napoleon; and seizing a French banner he rushed upon the bridge. His men followed with a shout, and a victory was won which secured him the possession of Lombardy. Such courageous leaders are needed in the sacramental host. One man filled with such invincible enthusiasm could chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight.

Sabbath morning I preached in the Union Presbyterian church, Rev. F. B. Savage, D. D., pastor. This congregation has 507 members. Their Sabbath-school numbers 520. The audience was large, and they listened with the closest attention. I am satisfied their sympathies were with us throughout. Every time I enter a strange pulpit the question of an earnest saint recurs: "Bernard, for what purpose art thou here?" Our purpose is single: to bear witness to the crown rights and royal prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the evening I preached in the First Reformed Presbyterian church, of which Rev. S. Carlisle had been pastor for nearly thirty-eight years. His death last July left them vacant. Rev. Summerville said at his funeral, "Bro. Carlisle needs no more encomium than the fact that he was pastor of this congregation for thirty-eight years." Educated in Belfast, Ireland, under Drs. Cook, Dick and Symington, and an intimate friend of Rev. J. R. Willson, D. D., and Rev. Andrew Stevenson, D. D., hence he was an old-side Covenanter of the first order. A Newburg lawyer, Mr. L. S. Sterritt, in a memorial paper says, "Perhaps nothing would give a better idea of his power in public discourse than his thoughtful paper on the history of the Reformed Presbyterian, or Covenanter church, in the vicinity of Newburg, and on the life of Rev. James R. Willson, D. D., which he delivered before the Newburg Historical Society in February, 1885, and which was afterwards published in pamphlet form; or his Centennial Sermon, delivered at Washington's headquarters in Newburg, July 3, 1876, which was also published and widely circulated." A local daily said, "In Newburg no citizen was more esteemed than he; no Christian more consistent; no preacher more eloquent and profound. He has left a name which is honored in the community."

On Tuesday evening I lectured in the Coldenham Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. R. H. McCready, pastor. This is an old congregation. Rev. J. W. Shaw ministered to them for fifty years. He was preceded by Rev. J. R. Willson, D. D., the greatest pulpit orator of his day. He made an oration in the open air in the presence of 10,000 people on the occasion of reinterring the remains of a company of soldiers, and every one heard him distinctly. Bro. McCready is organizing a New York State Reform Association. He hopes to enlist the leading men of the commonwealth.

On Friday evening I lectured in Gardenertown M. E. church. I am trying to impress upon the people the necessity of taking the Bible as the supreme standard. When an Indian prince, who had spent five years in England, was asked what he thought of the Bible, he replied: "I think it is a book from God, for I see all the good people believe it, and all the bad disbelieve it." When the Queen of England was asked the secret of England's greatness, pointing to the Bible, she replied, "That Book." It is to be feared that it is not always wisely used. That sometimes gloomy writer, Mr. Foster beyond the seas, tells us of an enemy boarding a ship and concealing a piece of loadstone near the compass, and the captain, ignorantly following the misguiding needle, entered the enemy's port and was captured. The man who buys and reads the Sunday newspaper on Sabbath, who holds stock in Sabbath-breaking corporations, or who is, directly or indirectly, engaged in the liquor traffic, has placed such a loadstone near the compass of his conscience; and if it remains there, in the end he may be surprised to find that he has entered, not the haven of rest above, but the harbor of woe below, where he will be Satan's captive forever. The Scotch woman's advice to the young minister was cogent: "Preach the law, then the Gospel, and then the law again." That is the sum of all. Preach the law to awaken the sinner; then preach the Gospel to bring him to Christ; and then preach the law as his rule of life. The Bible must be studied. Chalmers said: "Some people's Bibles are left lying on the shelf so long that you could write damnation in the dust that has collected." The study of the Bible through the International Sabbath-school lessons makes the outlook for the coming generation very hopeful.

EVANGELISTS WHO SHUN NOT THE TRUTH.

Orion, Wis., Oct. 8th, '87.

Dear Christian Cynosure:—When brothers Wolfe and Swayne were through with our camp-meeting [reported last week] they went to Richland Center, a hard nest of lodgery. You will see from this little slip from the county paper how the preachers there receive them. The lodges are trying to make a cats-paw of the board of health to oust them. They say it is not healthy in the rink without fire. No, I guess it is not healthy for lodgery. Pastor Williams of the Baptist church writes in the local press:

The interest is increasing daily in the meetings at the skating rink. Cold, indifferent and backslidden Christians are returning to their first love. Several have been hopefully converted. Hardened old sinners that have been serving the devil so faithfully all their lives are disturbed and angered because the Holy Spirit applies the truth to their guilty consciences. Mr. Wolfe has preached with wonderful force and clearness on the "Refuges of Lies," "Power of the Holy Spirit," "How to receive this Anointing for Service," "Full Assurance," "Regeneration," "Quack Doctors," Text, Job 13:4, "Is Hell a Myth or a Reality?" All his preaching is founded on the unfailing Word of God. He is especially successful in exposing false beliefs and worldly securities, and he is unique in ridiculing all half-hearted, go-as-you-please, hand-in-hand-with-the-world professors of religion. Much good is being done by the simple, plain presentations of God's truth. Christians can not afford to lose the Bible readings held every afternoon excepting Mondays. No services Mondays. Many people are loud in their praise of Mr. Swayne's clear and forcible manner of singing the Gospel. He does not obscure the words by the music, as is so often the case. We bless the Lord for sending his servants here. Yours, W. H. Dawson.

PANDEMONIUM AT COLUMBUS.

Columbus, O., Oct., 12, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—The citizens here are being treated to a very strange entertainment for an enlightened people. A number of men are here from different parts of our State, whose ostensible object, so far as we can learn from the papers, is to feast, strut and dance. Last Friday night the Park Hotel was profusely decorated with flags of different colors, bearing different inscriptions. "Welcome Knights" was printed on some; others had a representation of a man clad in armor, with a sword in one hand and a black flag in the other. The crosses which appeared were all painted red. As we learn these men are great for symbols, we take it that the red is to symbolize blood, the sword the way it is obtained, and the black flag the time. On Monday the saloons and some of the business places were also decorated. Tuesday the Knights arrived. There was a general hurrah. The small boys ran up and down the streets following the tall men (?) with glittering swords and feathers in their caps. Susan was there with the baby crying on one arm, trying to lead two or three infants with the other. Sambo had got a "day off," and was standing on the corner hurrahing to see his master strut, and wishing he had as much money so he could strut too. What a time they did have! A refreshing rain came early in the afternoon and continued by spells till evening. As the feathered fellows were not very good water birds, they frequently went from labor to refreshments. Coming forth between showers they would march up and down through the mud, doubtless very much admired. Last night they had a supper and ball in the Park skating rink, which this morning's paper states cost $2,000. This was probably for the widows and orphans they are supporting in such vast numbers. The paper goes on to state that many eminent ladies were there. The P. G. G. P. E. C. from Lancaster and other places was there, and we rather suspect that the great high-pan-tandrum, old Satan himself, was there. This morning I drove down town, thinking these men would be through with their strut, but found I was mistaken. While many had gone, there were quite a number marching up and down High street, which was crowded with teams, scaring many horses with their brass band, sword and feathers.

Query.—Would it not be well for some citizen to mention to these fellows that it would be well for them to stop before they strutted themselves to death?

THE NAME OF CHRIST TABOOED BY THE G. A. R.

Chariton, Iowa, Oct. 10, 1887.

Editor Cynosure:—Iseminger Post, No 18, Department of Iowa, is located in this place. Rev. John H. Hughey, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Chariton, was elected its chaplain for the year 1887.

As the chaplain's card, containing the prayer at the opening of the post meetings, did not mention Christ's name, Mr. Hughey added at the close, "For Christ's sake." The commander of the post, Col. O. A. Bartholomew, ordered the chaplain to cease saying "for Christ's sake," and to read nothing but the prayer on the card. Mr. Hughey replied that he would resign if not permitted to use the name of Christ in prayer. Col. Bartholomew, who is a martinet, refused to allow the name of Christ to be used, so the chaplain resigned. Since then Dr. Perry, a Methodist, and Mr. Best, a United Presbyterian, have been conducting the devotions of the post, without using the name of Christ, which is so objectionable to Col. Bartholomew. Yours truly,

E. Thompson Baird.

FOR CANADIAN METHODISTS.

Galt, Ontario.

Allow me heartily to commend to the readers of the Christian Cynosure in Canada, who are members of the Methodist church, the example of that minister of Pine Bluff, who was moderator of the colored Baptist Association in Arkansas that voted seventy-six for the resolution condemning secret societies, and four for them. That was as it ought to be. We most heartily commend this example to the Guelph Conference and Canada Methodist General Conference, that a similar result may be had throughout the entire body in British America.

That they need a cleansing and reforming very much, I learned from a young man who had been three terms consecutively master of the Blue Lodge in the commercial capital of British America. He said "that a corresponding member from Ontario had visited their lodge one evening and told them that a minister in his conference had asked his demit from the lodges for reasons, and obtained it. He rose in conference and begged leave to move that all members of secret deistic lodges be disciplined. The president of conference, who was a jolly good fellow, put the motion to the house and said, 'I myself am a Freemason, and mean to live and die one. You may all do as you like. All in favor of the motion stand up.' Ten stood up. 'All opposed, show it by the same sign.' The whole conference stood up. There were more than a hundred who stood up. The motion was lost." In order to show me that his statement was true, he showed me his jewel and certificate.

This was certainly "lawful information had." I thought that if there had been as many righteous persons in Sodom it would not have been destroyed. May God give grace to the Methodist church in Canada to turn away from all Masonic idols to worship the only living and true God and serve him alone, that he may not destroy them from earth.

PITH AND POINT.

THANKS TO FRIENDS IN THE NORTH.

Will you and the kind friends who have sent the Cynosure to a few poor colored ministers in the South accept my sincere thanks for sending it to me for one year. May the good Lord bless the paper and all the good people of the North for all they have done for the poor colored people of the South. I believe the Cynosure is the best reform paper published in the United States. It ought to be in the hands of every colored minister and reading family in the South, and in ten years we would have a genuine "New South" and a "people whose God is the Lord."—J. A. Jones, Kymulga, Ala.

HATING THE LODGE AT HOME.

How I deplore the fact that Pennsylvania can't raise means enough to hire somebody to draw out the latent opposition or hate of secret shams. I have found two ladies lately where I least expected who abhor the lodge. One of them told me that her poor old father trusted to Masonic salvation till nearly 90 years old, but two years before he died had to give it up as useless and fly to Jesus. Bless the Lord for such testimony.—J. C. Young, Custer City.

"MASONIC MENAGERIE."

That article (Sept. 15) out to be issued as a tract and distributed in tens of thousands. What a commentary on enlightened Boston! Are we to believe that she is already doomed as a slave to superstition and vice under the cloak of refinement and pleasure? Is that city, once "the cradle of liberty," to be the cradle of local despotism? Is her city council already the tool of lodgery or Romanism, or both, against the free Christianity which is the true bulwark of our liberties? T. H.

Bible Lesson.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON V.—Oct. 30.—The Harvest and the Laborers.—Matt. 9: 35-38; 10: 1-8.

GOLDEN TEXT.--Freely ye have received, freely give.—Matt. 10: 8.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Divine Compassion. vs. 35-38. Christ was ever at work. He did not wait as so many of his professed followers do in slothful inaction for opportunities to do good to come to him, but he sought them out. To do his Father's will was his meat and drink, and if we are like him we shall be all the time hungry, as it were, for something to do for God. He was moved with compassion on the multitude; nor can we if we have his spirit fail to be moved in like manner. Ignorance, poverty and vice prey on the larger half of mankind. Still, they are as sheep not having a shepherd. The saloon traps them by the thousands, and still by thousands they walk into its gilded snare. I once heard a dear W. C. T. U. sister allude to Isaiah 42:22 as an exact description of the poor drunkard's condition; "This is a people robbed and spoiled; they are all of them snared in dens, and they are hid in prison houses: they are for a prey and none delivereth; for a spoil, and none saith, Restore." The Lord of the harvest needs more laborers in the temperance work who with the love of Jesus in their hearts will seek out and try to save these poor victims of drink. How many scattered sheep for whom Christ died are looking to the lodge for salvation. The time will come when their feet will stumble upon the dark mountains, and they will be beyond the reach of instruction or warning. That instruction and that warning they need now. In this field the laborers are indeed few. All Christian hearts which feel and deplore the mischief that Masonry is working in church and state, cheating souls with a false hope of salvation and blocking the wheels of every righteous reform, must surely pray for more laborers in this cause; more consecrated men and women willing to give themselves to the work of teaching the people the true nature of this great foe to Christianity.

2. The Apostles sent out. vs 1-8. He gave them power over unclean spirits to cast them out. The subject of demoniac possession is not very well understood. Many commentators think that during Christ's stay on earth devils were allowed a peculiar license to afflict mankind which has not been exercised since. Leaving this point undecided we are sure that the condition of the Bible demoniacs could not have been more wretched than that of the poor victim of delirium tremens, or more manifestly a proof of Satan's malignant power. This unclean spirit of the saloon every Christian man and woman has received a divine commission to cast out. Unclean spirits are rife not only in the polluting print but the sensational weekly and the Sunday newspaper which cater to the depraved tastes of their readers. There is no crusade more important than the one against bad literature. Spiritualism can be nothing else than the work of unclean spirits, for John tells us that every spirit which is of God confesses Christ, and every spirit which is not of God denies him. What is not of God must be of Satan, and spiritualism as we all know rejects the Bible and of course rejects Christ. By the same rule we know that every Masonic lodge is the abode of unclean spirits. Pres. J. Blanchard says: "The terrible uniformity of these dark systems show their rise from one common source." In America or Europe, Asia or Africa, we find the same impure symbols, the same appeal to physical fear, the same paralyzing spell over the will and conscience—and no Christ. It is time that Christians everywhere should hear his call to cast out the unclean spirit of the lodge from their midst. They were given the mission of healing. Even if he cannot wield the power of a Dr. Cullis or a Dorothea Trudell over the physical evils which afflict the body, every Christian is bound both by example and precept to be a health missionary. With plain living and strict obedience to the laws of hygiene the sum of human disease and suffering would be greatly diminished. They were to preach the new order of things—that the kingdom was not only coming but at hand. So we are to preach—not a Saviour far off but one who is standing at the very doors waiting to bless. As we have freely received, so freely should we give out. The measure of the Lord's grace to us is the measure of what we should try to do to bless others.

From Peloubet's Notes.

The Motive for Missions. (1) The love of Jesus our Lord. (2) The love we bear to our fellow men. (3) The needs of our fellow men; their suffering and lost condition. All of these need to be joined together in one mighty motive. For if we do not love Jesus and our fellow men, then the view of their needs will not lead us to go to their rescue. And on the other hand it is the lost condition of men that directs love to their help. The greater we see their need and danger to be, the more earnest will love be to seek and to save them. One will not risk his life to save another from a slight wetting, but he would to save him from drowning. (4) The greater our experience of the change the Gospel produces the more shall we desire that others enjoy the same experience. (5) The more we love Jesus, the stronger will be our desire to hasten the coming of his kingdom, to see him upon the throne of every heart, and of the world.—P.

"Now the names of the twelve apostles are these." Of the twelve apostles there are four lists, the other three being found in Mark 3:16; Luke 6:14; and Acts 1:13. They differ in the following particulars. Luke in the book of Acts does not insert the name of Judas Iscariot, who was then dead; both in his Gospel and in Acts he entitles the Simon who is here and in Mark called the Canaanite, Simon Zelotes; Matthew gives as the tenth disciple Lebbeus; Mark calls him Thaddeus; Luke and Acts Judas of James, i. e., son or brother of James; and Mark says that James and John were surnamed by Christ Boanerges, i. e., the sons of thunder. In other respects the four lists are identical, except that the names are given in a slightly different order by the different writers. They all agree, however, in putting Simon Peter first and Judas Iscariot last. There are three pairs of brothers among them, Andrew and Peter, James and John, James the less, and Judas or Thaddeus. James and John I believe to have been own cousins of our Lord. With the exception of Judas Iscariot all were Galileans; several of them were by trade fishermen, a laborious and profitable calling; they were all laymen, that is, there was neither priest nor scribe among them. They have generally been regarded as illiterate men (Acts 4.13); but by this must be understood, not that they were specially ignorant. but that they were not versed in the rabbinical literature, the scholastic theology of their age. Phillip and Peter both appear to have been acquainted with the Greek. This is indicated by the application of the Greeks to Phillip (John 12:20,21) and by the fact that the epistles of Peter were written in Greek. Matthew was a ready and methodical writer; John evidently was a man of culture, as his writings show, and his social position was such as gave him ready access to the high priest's palace during the trial of Jesus (John 18:16).—Abbott.

Note (1) The apostles were to go in pairs (Mark 6:7) "for they were to be accustomed to work in brotherly fellowship, and when difficulties arose, one was to have the counsel and aid of the other."—Schenckel's Character of Jesus. (2) They were to minister to both body and soul (vers. 7 and 8); (3) were to preach in the towns and villages, while Christ continued his ministry in the cities (compare Luke 9:6 with Matt. 11:1); (4) were to preach only to the Jews (vers. 5, 6); and (5) in their ministry were to follow the example and adopt the habits of the ancient prophets.—Abbott.

(2) Warnings of Obstacles and Persecutions (vers. 16-23). So that they would not be discouraged, and wrong and selfish motives would be sifted out. "These apply to the Christian ministry in all times of religious persecution."

(3) Promises and encouragements (vs. 24-42), part of which are included in our next lesson, and "appear to be universally applicable to all followers of Christ, whether engaged directly in the work of preaching the Gospel or not."

In Brief.

It is not generally known that camels, both wild and tame, are found in Texas, yet such is the fact, and some of them will be on exhibition at the State Fair at Dallas this fall. The first of these animals were brought to the State by the government in 1852 to test their usefulness in crossing the American desert to California. They came from Arabia and were the ancestors of those now in the State.

Another test was made of Zalinski's dynamite gun in New York bay last week. Two or three effective shots utterly demolished the hulk of a large old schooner anchored for the purpose at a distance of a mile. Military experts are inclined to think that this new engine of destruction puts an end to war, and enables us to laugh at the iron clad navies of the world. One shot from this gun would sink the largest iron-clad ever built.

The demand for reindeer skins is likely to largely increase, and the Norsemen and Laps may find the rearing of deer a more profitable business than it has hitherto proved. Reindeer skins are more buoyant than cork, and persons wearing a waistcoat or belt made from this material there is no fear of their sinking in the water. Considering the innumerable drowning accidents which are daily recorded, it is gratifying to think these may be avoided by substituting for a portion of our ordinary clothing a garment made of reindeer skin. With the fear of drowning removed, the pastime of boating would quadruple its devotees.

The Shah of Persia will shortly visit London, Paris and St. Petersburg. Our readers will remember that when Nassar ed Deen last visited Europe the public were amazed at the brilliancy of his own and his courtiers' uniforms, which were resplendent with diamonds. The wily Shah came for the purpose of negotiating a loan of money, and being the possessor of such a large amount of visible wealth, there was no difficulty in floating the Persian bonds It was not until he had returned to Teheran that it leaked out that his precious stones had been expressly manufactured for him by a company of paste diamond makers in Paris.

The Cincinnati Price Current gives its annual statement, from special investigations, in regard to the corn crop of 1887, in which it is shown that the aggregate crop is estimated at 1,510,000,000 bushels against last year's crop of 1,655,000 000, indicating a shortage of 155,000,000 bushels compared with 1886. In the seven Western surplus States the shortage is 161,000,000 bushels, and adding six other corn growing States the shortage is 203,000,000 bushels for the thirteen States. Compared with an annual average for five years—1881 to 1885 inclusive—the crop shortage is 108 000,000 bushels, the thirteen States being deficient 186,000,000 bushels in this comparison.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY EMINENT TESTIMONY.

Pres. A. A. Smith, Northwestern College:—There can be no doubt that when secrecy is adopted as a rule of action, it has a demoralizing tendency.

Matilda J. Gage, a leader in the Woman Suffrage movement: — Masonry excludes women, not for any great secrets it may have, but because of shame for its indecent ceremonies.

Rev. T. D. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, in an address before the Pilgrim Memorial Convention, Chicago, 1870, spoke of the lodge as setting up the hollow forms and titles of king-craft and priest-craft, that those hated foes of humanity might creep back into their shells.

Prof. Robison.—"But not only are secret societies dangerous, but all societies whose effect is mysterious. The whole history of man is proof of this position; in no age or country has there ever appeared a mysterious association which did not in time become a public nuisance." Proofs of a Conspiracy.

Bishop Stevens, (Protestant Episcopal) in an address before Pennsylvania diocese, 1874, said he "had refused to receive at the holy communion young men who belonged to secret societies existing within the church, as the machinery of these organizations was used to advance the interests of ritualism and Romanism."

Rev. Dr. Krauth, President of Lutheran General Council:—They strike at the root of the three divine institutions. They bring disturbance into the family, the church and the state, claiming for themselves what God has conferred on these alone. If the church cannot break down, by the truth, the oath-bound secret societies, they will break her down everywhere.

Mrs. C. B. Miller, Syracuse, N. Y., daughter of Victory Birdseye, Esq.:—My father died in 1853. Had he lived to see the rebellion of 1861, I have no doubt that he would have said that Freemasonry in common with slavery should bear the responsibility of that terrible war; for by undermining Southern loyalty it brought about a state of things without which the rebellion would have been impossible.

Pres. H. A. Thompson, Otterbein University:—What a farce to think of Christ organizing an oath-bound association, admitting members by a solemn pledge, in a secluded room, in some lonely place, with sentinels outside and inside to protect from the vulgar gaze, in order to help men to a purer life; to induce them to reform and forget their past misdeeds and begin anew. If this is the best method of saving men, why did he not adopt it instead of, or make it a part of the Christian church which he himself instituted.

Dr. Adam Clarke:—"Have no fellowship" means have no religious connection with heathens or their worship. The "unfruitful works of darkness" probably alludes to the mysteries among the heathens and the differing lustrations (symbols) and rites through which the initiated went in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated; all of which he (the apostle) denominates "works of darkness," because they were destitute of true wisdom; and "unfruitful works" because they were of no use to mankind; the initiated being obliged on pain of death to keep secret what they had seen and heard and done.—Commentary, Eph 5th chap.

How then could they keep up the profession of Christianity or pretend to be under its influence while they had communion with darkness, concord with Belial, and partook with infidels?—Com. Cor. 62.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1887.

The New Orleans Meeting.—Secretary Stoddard is at work on the programme for the proposed National meeting in New Orleans next winter. Prominent clergymen of various denominations are being written to, and no rational means will be unemployed. The Chicago Congress of Churches was endorsed, in its call, by the first envangelical minds in the United States; by many who dared not to attend it; and one (Talmage) under Masonic pressure went back. But the meeting broke ice, and did vast good. We hope to see and hear some of these men at New Orleans. This meeting should be borne on the wings of prayer continually. And we hope every paper which is opposed to lodgery, will devise and discuss methods.

The tone of both the Conservator and Telescope indicates that the church of the United Brethren in Christ must be rent by the evil spirit of the lodge. Since Christ was on earth Satan has always rent before being cast out; as cast out he certainly will be. The Telescope seems to be governed by a strictly worldly policy on the question of secret societies; and indeed its whole spirit is that of a paper published for its market. It looks at Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and Congregational churches, filled with Masons, and longs to have the United Brethren church like them. The Conservator pleads, agonizes, and asks in substance the pertinent question, "When you have driven out of the conferences all who will not fellowship Masons, and taken lodgemen in their places, what sort of a church will you have then?" It will not be like those churches out of whom the lodge-god has never been cast; but like him into whom seven other spirits enter more wicked than the one which was cast out, and the last state of that church will be worse than the other churches which sin against less light. It is simply dreadful to think what the United Brethren church is coming to!

We give the readers of the Cynosure, in this number, the face of an extraordinary man, even among extraordinary Americans. He was born in New York city, 1826, and is now sixty-one years old. A graduate from New York University at eighteen; professor of Greek in the same in 1859, when thirty-three; and two years after in Rutgers College; when he was ordained by New Brunswick Presbytery. Two years later he became pastor of the Fourth Avenue church in New York, where he still is. In 1870 he became Chancellor of New York University, where his predecessor, Dr. Ferris, said, "as lecturer and teacher he has no superior." He was chosen moderator of the General Assembly in 1873. As a traveler, author of commentaries on the Greek poets, Bible commentaries, and for more than thirty years a writer for reviews, he has filled up a life of amazing activity without a failure, except as an advocate of temperance.

While Chancellor of New York University he wrote for the Boston Congregationalist a powerful article against secret societies in colleges, in which he took strong ground against these pests. Though he knew that there was scarcely a prominent college in the United States, except Princeton and a few smaller institutions, which were not virtually able to defy their faculties, Chancellor Crosby wrote with as much sang froid as though the vast majority were with him. And while he speaks against college secret societies from personal experience, having years ago been in one, as "at war with truth, candor and manliness," shams in short, and breeders and protectors of immoralities, he writes down his judgment of secret societies, in colleges and outside, in these scathing words:

"We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of this earth; a part of the great system by which the mud-begotten try to pass themselves off as Jove-born."

When the proposition for a national conference of all churches upon the lodge question was proposed, Dr. Crosby put down his name in approval of the meeting without hesitation, and in letters of regret that he could not attend and speak, addressed to Dr. W. C. Gray of the Interior and Pres L. N. Stratton, he said, "The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous."

There are two classes of distinguished teachers of religion: those who seek to please God, and those who seek to please man. To which class Dr. Crosby endeavors to belong may be seen from his comment on Christ's beatitudes on the Mount, which he treats thus:

"If we ask the average man to write eight beatitudes, they would run somewhat this way: 'Blessed are the rich, for they can buy everything they please. Blessed are the jolly ones, for they have a good time. Blessed are the powerful, for they have their own way. Blessed are the smart fellows, for they come it over the greenhorns. Blessed are the unfeeling, for they have no sentimental qualm. Blessed are the liberal-minded, for they can enjoy little sins. Blessed are the strong for they can knock down opposition. Blessed are they that get the world's praise, for they have an easy life.' I think that the great majority of men would sign these beatitudes and then show their sincerity by doing their best to occupy the position of these blessed ones. The Christian recognizes the fact that he has nothing in himself to present before God. Here is the foundation of true religion. The Christian is a 'mourner,' one who weeps in secret over his sins. The Christian is 'meek.' What is that? It is the quality of Christ, who was to come as Zion's king, meek, and, as a token of it, lowly. The Christian 'hungers and thirsts after righteousness.' The soul that simply wants to get to heaven at last is not a Christian. It is the soul that wants to be holy that is a Christian. The Christian is 'merciful.' Again we trace this characteristic to his sense of sin. The Christian is 'pure in heart.' He does not profess to love purity and then, with the excuse of art or fashion, nurse the impurity of his imagination. The Christian is a 'peacemaker.' He shrinks from personal strife, and he promotes peace in others. Last of all, the Christian is 'persecuted for righteousness sake.' The world will always hate a true Christian. They will leave him alone, as long as he favors their theatres and balls and Sunday newspapers, but the moment he opposes these Satanic devices they will attack him in motive, mind and manner, and show the venom of the old serpent. Alas for the Christian who is never persecuted! He must be a dumb dog."

It is well known that the Cynosure differs, decidedly differs, from Crosby's views on temperance. We are for total abstinence and prohibition. We believe Dr. Crosby will vote prohibition, but he opposes total abstinence. We once said to Prof. Agassiz: "We are shocked at your teaching diverse origins of the human family, and making the Bible account of Eden a myth."

"Well," said the great and pleasant man and scholar, "well; if I teach many truths, and but one error, still it is worth looking at."

The editor of the prose works of John Milton says of him: "He was the greatest of all human beings." But circumstances warped his powerful argument on "the doctrine of divorce," so that he wrote: "What a cruel thing it is to force the continuing of those together whom God and nature in the gentlest end of marriage (mutual love) never joined." He was blind and his wife went to her parents, so Milton advocates the right of divorce for one "who misses by chancing on a mute and spiritless mate." That is, he advocated divorce for incompatibility, against the words of Christ, the author of marriage. He was blind, and wished to write Paradise Lost. She wished him to continue Latin secretary to Cromwell, and furnish her a carriage.

Dr. Crosby was born in New York city among the wealthy and has wealth. When he was a youth, Dr. Woods of Andover and Dr. Sprague of Albany were on one side of the wine question, and Prof. Stuart and Delavan on the other. Polygamy and wine-drinking were both practiced by Bible saints. As Moody says, "Noah, the best and greatest man of his age, got drunk on wine." Samson was a total abstinence temperance man; but practiced worse vice than drunkenness. Abraham and Jacob had more wives than one, before that question was up. And Dr. Crosby still lives among Christians where wine is on their tables.

The late John B. Finch was Grand Chief Templar of the world's Grand Lodge, which prohibits sweet cider as it does whisky. Crosby loathed secret lodges and false science; and prefers Spurgeon, spite of his ale, and possibly his cigar, to his near neighbor, the Secretary of the National Temperance Society, who is sworn to stand by Masons, and conceal their crimes "whether they be right or wrong." And, meeting the temperance question amid such circumstances and surroundings; met and assailed by minds inferior to his own; accustomed as he was to shirk nothing, it is no more wonderful that he should err in this one point, than that Washington should hold slaves; and, being assailed rudely, that he should answer in kind; and having based his opinions on scholarship rather than fact, that he should go to Boston and utter his views in Tremont Temple. "For even his failings leaned to virtue's side," and flinching and cringing before popular sentiment are no part of his nature.

The temperance question is one of fact. "Was Noah stronger than Samson? Do the saloons benefit or curse the nation?" If both these questions must be answered No! then total abstinence and prohibition are right. Jeremy Bentham says, "To a wise statesman the known and certain consequences of a thing are part of the thing itself." And it is not worth while for us to inquire whether the "groves" which God forbade near his altar were upas trees or cedars; since it was as certain if they stood there they would breed idolatry as moderate drinking is to breed drunkards, and saloons to breed rows and crimes.

The Powderly Meeting.—The Knight of Labor convention in Minneapolis has been already two weeks in "secret" session, except what the press is able to steal from them, according to Mr. Finch's code. It may hold a week more, when we shall endeavor to review its actions. Last week there were two critical days for Mr. Powderly, without whom the order would long since have gone to pieces. The first was Monday when a resolution in favor of commuting the sentence of the Chicago anarchists was presented and defeated by an impassioned speech by Powderly. The other was on Friday when an attempt to get rid of two hostile members on the executive committee precipitated a quarrel which threatens to split the order. In all the time so far spent by this meeting we do not remember yet one honest, sensible proposition for the benefit of the working classes. Perhaps there are plenty of them kept secret!

—Secretary Stoddard, desiring to attend the Wesleyan General Conference at La Otto, Indiana, this week, has sent Bro. W. I. Phillips as his deputy to the Iowa State Convention at College Springs, where having been an esteemed pastor for several years he will be doubly welcome.

—Friends in Missouri will cheer for Bro. Butler's proclamation for a rally at Princeton next week Tuesday and Wednesday. If they have the best meeting of the season we shall not be disappointed, nor will it cause jealousy in other States. There has been a healthy emulation between Ohio, Illinois and Iowa for two or three years; and it is well to have a godly emulation in such a cause.

—Pres. J. Blanchard expects to spend next Lord's day in Detroit with brethren Foote and Clark, on his way to New England. He expects to visit first the meeting of the American Missionary Association at Portland, of which society he was one of the founders; then the New Hampshire convention and other meetings in Vermont, Massachusetts and possibly Connecticut. He can be addressed at Manchester, N. H., until the 29th of this month.

—In the Cynosure of September 1st we published a number of extracts on Romanism. One was from the Boston Pilot which attributed to that paper the sentiment: "There can be no religion without the Inquisition, which is wisely designed for the promotion of the true faith." Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly, editor of the Pilot, says such a sentiment never found place in his columns. We are glad to make this correction on such authority. The collection of extracts was sent us in print from New England, and from what paper we cannot now ascertain.

—Rev. George Warrington, president of the Iowa State Association, not satisfied with the burden of two excellent papers, the Psalm Singer and the Birmingham Free Press, proposes another, to be called the Freed-mason. He promises to begin with January if 500 subscribers are pledged by that time. It will be a handsome 8-page monthly at 60 cents a year, and we can promise that it will be worth double the cost. The Cynosure wishes success to the project.

—Rev. W. W. Satterlee, of Minneapolis, whose presence and aid were so generously given and heartily appreciated at the late State Convention, has just been appointed by his conference to a professorship in Grant Memorial College at Athens, Tennessee. The chair to which Mr. Satterlee is called will be the first of the kind in any institution in the world. It is to be called the chair of "Political Economy and Scientific Temperance," and the name indicates the scope of the teaching. Mr. Satterlee's career as an educator and a temperance worker seems especially to qualify him for the important position. His lectures will be to the advanced classes of the institution, and will cover a period from November to May of each year. The balance of the year he will live in Minnesota. His duties at the institution begin one year from this date.

—The telegraph reports the dangerous illness of Rev. Dr. David R. Kerr, editor of the United Presbyterian, Pittsburg. Dr. Kerr has for many years, as editor of its leading paper, exercised a powerful influence in the denomination, and if the disease proves fatal his loss will be deeply felt.

—Since writing the above, word comes that Dr

Kerr died Friday morning. He was in his 70th year, and had filled up a life of eminent service for the Christian church. He was for many years president of the faculty of Western University, and afterward president of Westminster College. In 1866 he served as Moderator of the United Presbyterian General Assembly, and in 1880 was a delegate to the Presbyterian Pan-Presbyterian Council. As editor of the United Presbyterian he has been conservative in respect to Christian reform movements, yet was always true to the principle of his church in condemning secret societies. He took an active part in the first national meeting when the National Christian Association was organized in Pittsburgh in 1868, and seven years later, when again the national convention met in that city, he was elected its president.

—Some two years ago, as the result of the valued labors of the colored evangelist, Rev. Lewis Johnston, a colored church was organized in Pine Bluff, Arkansas. Since that time this church has been worshiping in a hall rented for them by the white Presbyterian church part of the time, and part by themselves, to which they have access only on the Sabbath day. This colored church is composed of a very worthy element, though few in numbers and weak in resources, and the efficiency of the work is seriously retarded for want of a house of worship. An effort is being made by Bro. Johnston to raise money and build a church.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

REV. DR. JUSTIN D. FULTON AND THE ROMAN CHURCH.

Rev. Dr. Justin D. Fulton, who is on a crusade against Romanism, has entrenched himself on the lecture platform in Music Hall, where he stands Sabbath after Sabbath hurling denunciations against the papal beast, and in return receiving volley after volley of hetereogenous criticisms from nearly every quarter, and strangely enough the hottest fire comes not from Rome, but his own Protestant ranks. Metaphorically, he is riddled from head to foot with bullets of reproof, even from his own denomination, for the campaign he has undertaken at the risk of his life. Let them sneeringly designate his ringing speeches, teeming with warnings and admonitions concerning the encroachments of the papacy, by synonymous appellations as Fultonics, etc., if they will. There is "more truth than poetry" in his utterances which his shallow-brained and short-sighted critics may discover to their surprise one of these days, even as the fickle Athenians, though faithfully forewarned by the intrepid and patriotic Desmosthenes.

Fultonics! There is a great deal of meaning suggested in that word. Full-of-tonic those brave speeches doubtless are, which will not fail to tone up the weak, lethargic Protestant stomach for the great work it sooner or later must digest.

It is with some timerity that I venture to present the readers of the Cynosure an impression of my view, and an expression of my candid opinion of the prodigious work Dr. Fulton has undertaken almost "single-handed and alone," lest I be considered as "enthusiastic." Nevertheless, if a critical presentation of an honest conclusion, after impartial investigation of a subject, can be termed "enthusiasm," then I must plead guilty of being an enthusiast, and will humbly receive my sentence.

First, then, I believe, and in many instances know, that Dr. Fulton is telling the truth in regard to the character of the papacy, and I am not led to believe and know because I am partial. I am as ready to receive truth from Rome as from any other source, knowing that truth is truth no matter in what garb it may appear. I know according to his own acknowledgment that the Roman pontiff claims and seeks absolute supremacy of both the religious and political worlds. I am conscious of the necessity of keeping church and state as far apart as the east is from the west. I know Romanism is doing its utmost to amalgamate the two factions under its own religious formula and political regime. I feel, I know that at this present crisis of affairs we need a man of backbone, one who cannot be bought nor sold, nor intimidated, nor scoffed from a faithful, truthful presentation of Rome's machinations against a nation whose institutions are the grandest ever known to this world, and on whose escutcheon is written in the blood of the Revolution and the Southern Rebellion, "Liberty," "Religious Toleration" and "Public Instruction." I say these sacred inscriptions must never be effaced by the muddy water of the Tiber. We need some one like a burning meteor, patriot enough—aye! humanitarian enough, self-sacrificing enough to dash o'er the land and say so!

I believe we have that man in Justin D. Fulton, who has given up his pulpit, left his home and gone forth fearless, yet, nevertheless, taking his life in his hands, to proclaim the danger threatening our beloved land.

Well, say it right out. "Now, Bro. Mathews, that was a perfect volcanic eruption of enthusiasm." I don't deny it, nor can you, dear reader, deny that it is a perfect volcanic eruption of truth. Alas! we Americans lack just that one almost disreputable thing—enthusiasm. We are so afraid it will subvert our keen reasoning faculties. I tell you, my friend, it is because we lack enthusiasm that we, as a nation, are becoming so dormant, allowing our dearly-earned rights—liberty, everything enhancing true civilization—to be usurped by an element that is not only antagonistic to us but to themselves as well. In protecting ourselves from the inroads of superstition and religious dominition we protect them also, and one day they will bless God for our faithfulness. Stand by Fulton and his Fultonics!

I had almost signed myself "Enthusiasm," but enthusiastic as it may be, I'm not ashamed to acknowledge the foregoing article, whether it pleases or displeases.

D. P. Mathews.

UNEARTHING SECRET SOCIETY MURDERS IN MISSISSIPPI.

At Greenwood, Miss., the jury of inquest in the case of Harry Taylor, recently killed there, after taking testimony, found as their verdict that Taylor was murdered by members of the Dry Bayou and Shell Mound Masons, naming fifteen members of those organizations. Warrants have been issued for the persons accused, one of whom has already been arrested. The testimony given at the inquest shows that the societies mentioned are bound by oath to avenge the death of a brother member. A Negro from Vicksburg named "Doc" Stringer organized these two lodges, getting about $180 from them on a promise to send them charters, which they have never received. A subpœna was issued for the books of these lodges, but none could be found. There is no doubt that there existed a secret organization among the Negroes in that county, bound by oath to do murderous acts. Officers of the law are on the track of those implicated, and the members of this secret and murderous order will be brought to justice.

A dispatch from Greenwood on the 10th inst., says that nine Negro Freemasons have been arrested for this murder, and in the preliminary trial it was discovered that a resolution to kill Mr. Kerney, a white man who had a fight with one of their brothers, whose arm he had broken, was passed during one of their meetings, but the time appointed for the deed had not yet come. Two days were consumed in taking testimony, and many other Negroes have been implicated. There is no doubt that a colored man, a member of the Dry Bayou Lodge of Negro Masons, was killed by Harry Taylor, and that both Harry Taylor and his wife had disappeared, a body answering to Taylor's being found in the river with marks of violence upon it. The body had been weighted down.

The lodges in this county were organized by a Negro who claims to be working under the authority of the Grand Orient of France. Their lodge was founded in 1882. Several other lodges have been founded in the section. The colored Masons are not recognized by the white Masons.

It would appear that these simple-minded Masons have taken their oaths to mean what they say, just as did the Morgan killers and their comrades throughout the country in 1826. But Masonry is not so bad now, they say. The throat-cutting, bowel-burning, head-splitting, etc., is all for fun, you know. Masons no longer say Morgan deserved his fate; they no longer claim that it is impossible that their oaths should be revealed because of the penalty. O no! they are now a very innocent debating society, which meets to discuss politics and how churches should be managed.

PRESS COMMENTS.

Labor unions organized for the mutual protection of members become, inevitably, in the course of time, the masters of workmen, and most cruel and tyrannous masters they have proved themselves at times. If these unions continue to increase in numbers and grow in power they will tend more and more to centralization, will come more and more under control of a small number of rulers, and the ultimate result will be that choice of employment will be withdrawn. The strength of the laboring man is in his freedom to make the best use of his powers, as an individual, and no other system will advance his interests permanently, or be to the greatest good of the greatest number.—Inter-Ocean.

The Knights Templar are trying to change their ritual, but some of the more conservative and less conscientious are using their efforts to prevent it. We are surprised that they did not make some alterations long ago, and eliminate the more barbarous features. It seems strange that one portion should have been retained so long, that of drinking wine out of the top of a human skull, and taking an obligation that is sufficiently awful to make "each particular hair stand on end like quills upon the back of the fretful porcupine." One of the high dignitaries at the recent meeting at Oskaloosa spoke against the change, according to the newspaper report, which is as follows: "Grand Commander A. R. Dewey took a strong stand against the adoption of the new ritual and gave cogent reasons therefor." —Birmingham Free Press.

The Pope is a king. He says so himself. And doesn't that prove it? for isn't he infallible? In view of his approaching jubilee Leo XIII. has had struck a number of medals bearing the inscription: "Pope Leo XIII., Pontifex et rex." Now rex is Latin for king, and that inscription means Pope Leo XIII., Pontiff and king. The Roman police found some of these medals on sale in a shop in the city and promptly confiscated them. At this the Vatican makes a decided protest, and argues that the "law of guaranties" recognizes the Pope's right to the title of sovereign; and supports this argument with the fact that Bismarck in his letter to the Pope about two years ago plainly addressed him as "sire." Now in the language of courts, "sire" means "sovereign;" and as a king is a sovereign, and as Bismarck called the Pope "sire," therefore the Pope is king.—Signs of the Times.

Herr Johann Most, Anarchist at large, has committed the curious stupidity of applying for naturalization as a citizen of the United States. In making such an application Herr Most turned his back on his own professions most shamefully. An Anarchist is one who holds it to be the right and duty of the people to break up the state and abolish its government. How then can he offer to assume the obligations and duties of membership in a state? As well an Orangeman apply for admission to the Roman Catholic church. As Herr Most would not promise to obey the laws of the United States, but only such of them as he thought good laws, his application was rejected. More vigilance in this direction would exclude from citizenship Mormons, Socialists and some other undesirable sorts of immigrants. But we observe that the Socialists, imitating the Labor party, are beginning to draw the line so as to exclude Anarchists like Herr Most from their fellowship. As Socialism and Anarchism are at the distance of the poles from each other, this is even a more logical proceeding than for the Labor party to exclude the Socialists.—American, Philadelphia.

Never were the complications between the church and the world more perilous than now. Once the case was simple. The old-time citizen who was asked to state his position at a town meeting, in anticipation of a possible nomination for a place of trust, when he arose and said: "My religion is the Methodist, and my politics is Whig," represented a large class. It was Whig or Democrat, and some church. To-day knights, orders, clubs, brotherhoods, lodges, leagues, unions, and societies of all sorts, for mutual protection, for benevolence, for diversion, and for reform, present their claims. A very large part of the male members of all our churches are connected with from two to half a dozen of such organizations. The object of these societies is, in many cases, highly important, and ranks next in aim to the work of the Christian church. At the same time these societies for the most part not only fail to recognize the spiritual need of those connected with them, but are of such a nature as that, at some point or other, a compromise of principle and conviction is inevitable. The experience of Christian pastors will show that where the claims of church membership and those of outside societies cross each other, the tendency, for various reasons, is to give the world the right of way, and this in view of assumed obligations, imposed penalties, and supposed immediate advantages. The tendencies within the church to-day are of greater concern even than the possible truth, that, for the greater part, the very miscellaneous component parts of the labor parade are beyond the reach of the church. Let Christian men give this intricate problem their best thought.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Home.

AN AUTUMNAL SHEAF.

The summer's throbbing chant is done,
And mute the choral antiphon;
The birds have left the shivering pines
To flit among the trellised vines,
Or fan the air with scented plumes
Among the love-sick orange blooms,
And thou art here alone—alone—
Sing, little bird! the rest have flown.

How time is flying! We October meet
Flinging around bright leaves of gold and red;
Pausing to make a crown of bitter-sweet
And immortelles, to place upon her head!
While nuts from opening burrs fall thick and fast,
As gay October brushes swiftly past!

As the last wave upon the beach breaks loudest,
As dying day puts her best bravery on;
While yet the earth in your array is proudest—
Through the gay masks I mark the summer gone!

—W. C. Richards.

There sounds a rustling in the standing corn;
There hangs a bright-cheeked apple on the bough,
And later lingers now the tardy morn,
And evening shadows gather sooner now.

One crimson branch flames 'mid the maple wood,
One red leaf hides amid the woodbine's green,
And clean raked fields lie bare where lately stood
The tawny grain amid the summer scene.

—Anonymous.

Crimson and scarlet and yellow,
Emerald turning to gold,
Shimmering there in the sunbeams,
Shivering here in the cold;
Waving farewells as the tempest
Ruthlessly tears them apart,
Fluttering, dancing and rustling
As hither and thither they dart;
Recklessly sailing the rapids,
Lazily swimming the pools,
Playing "I spy!" with each other
Under the puffy toadstools.
Wreathes for the walls of her dwelling
Each neat little housekeeper weaves,
And there, amid delicate fern sprays,
Nestle the bright autumn leaves.

THE NEW GIRL.

"You couldn't spare me a very little money, could you, father?" Janet leaned over him as he counted some bills.

"If it is for something positively necessary, my daughter."

"I can't say it is exactly that; but I never get a cent of pocket money now, father."

He sighed heavily as he answered: "I know it, and I'm sorry; but the pressure seems harder and harder every year. Wants seem to increase faster than the means of supplying them. Hand this to your mother, Janet."

"Forgive me for worrying you, father. I ought to be making my own spending money, but there are so few ways of doing that unless I go away from home."

"We can't let you do that. There's enough for all, if we are careful."

"Take it out to Bridget," said her mother, as Janet gave her the money from her father.

"Twelve dollars. Dear me!" said Janet to herself, rather fretfully, as she walked slowly to the kitchen. "Bridget has earned it, and I don't grudge it to her, but how I wish I could earn twelve dollars."

"Wirra, wirra!" Bridget sat on the floor, holding an open letter and rocking herself backward and forward with dismal groans. Pots, pans and kettles were around in their usual confusion. "It's meself must be lavin' yez the day, Miss Janet."

Servants were hard to find, and Janet's face wore the accustomed expression of dismay with which such notices were always received, as she asked: "What's the matter, Bridget?"

"It's me sister's got the fayver, bad, and it's meself must be going to her. An' it's six weeks entirely I'll be shtayin' when it's so far to be goin'."

As Janet handed her the money, a sudden thought came to her.

"I'm sorry for you, Bridget. Of course you must go if you must. Perhaps we can get along without any one, till you are ready to come back."

"Mother," she said, turning to her, "Bridget's going away for a few weeks." Mother's face grew as dismayed as Janet's had, for she was not strong, and there were four boys.

"An' plase ye, ma'am, it's afther coming to try to get the place I am."

"What do you mean, Janet? said her mother, laughing as the young girl courtesied low.

"You can't do it all, Janet."

"What I can't do, I'll hire. I want to do something, and I want to get a little money I can feel is my own, and that I have a right to spend if I want a new book or a bit of music or anything else. I can't get a school—there are forty applications where there is one vacancy. I can't dispose of fancy work or painting, and if I could, I might dabble over them for a month and not clear more than Bridget does in a week, there are so many waiting to do that kind of work. Kitchen work is the only work there appears to be plenty of for girls."

"You may try it, but I think you will get tired of it."

Janet spent a good share of her first week's wages in buying gingham aprons, rubber gloves, and paying a stout woman to come for half a day to scrub and scour until the last traces of good-natured, slovenly Bridget's presence were removed. Then, with clean kitchen, clean utensils, and clean towels, Janet took hold of her work with a right good will.

"We'll all co-operate," said father, when he heard of her intention.

"We'll all co-operate," cried the boys; and they kept their word well in bringing wood and water and sweeping the walks. And after the first morning, she found that Tom had made the fire and ground the coffee before she came down.

"There's great satisfaction in doing things thoroughly," said Janet to her mother, after the first day or two. "Before, when we have been without a girl, I have always hated it because I tried how much I could shove out of the way. Now that I am making a business of it, I don't feel that way. And, mother, you would be astonished to see how little cleaning there is to be done when nobody makes any unnecessary dirt, or how much work can be saved by using your wits to save it."

She never told her mother how her back ached during those first days of unusual exercise. This wore off as she became accustomed to it. Every day she learned more and more to simplify her work. A few minutes in the kitchen just before bed time she arranged things so exactly to her hand that there was no hurrying or crowding at the busy time in the morning. Careful handling of table linen and other things made the wash smaller, so that the stout woman could do two weeks' wash in one. Janet found that there were few days in which she could not sit down when the dinner work was over. Other surprising things came to light.

"What's the matter that you don't burn any wood now-a-days?" said Tom; "I have so little splitting to do." Bridget, like so many of her sisterhood, had always seemed to consider it her bounden duty to keep up a roaring fire all day, regardless of whether there was need of it or not, and father always looked blank over the fuel bill. One-half the quantity was now found amply sufficient, and a difference was soon apparent in many other things. The food for one person is always noticeable in a small family where a rigid hand must be kept on expenses, beside which, Janet was not slow in perceiving how many things went further than before. Odds and ends were utilized which had been thrown away or had counted for nothing, for no one felt afraid of scraps done over by Janet's hands.

"We never were so comfortable before," said father.

"We never had such good things to eat," declared the boys, who had highly appreciated the dainty, though plain cookery, as contrasted with Bridget's greasy preparations; for Janet, full of an honest determination to earn her wages, had given much attention to the getting up of palatable, inexpensive dishes, seeking a variety, where Bridget had moved in one groove.

"I almost dread having Bridget come back," said mother.

But the time came when she was hourly expected. Mother sighed as she took note of the spotless kitchen, in which it was now pleasant to come and lend a hand at cookery, or sit with her knitting, while Janet moved briskly about.

"It's time I was settling with you, Janet," she said. "Six weeks—I owe you $18."

"No; six off for hiring Mrs. Holt and a few other things."

"Not a bit off, dear; I've been looking over the bills for the month, and I find quite a difference; more than pays all your extras. Not only in meat and groceries and fuel, but I notice it in the wear and tear and breakage—dear me! I don't think $5 a week covers the expense of Bridget being here."

"You don't mother, dear?" said Janet, in great delight; "then you are not tired of your new girl and anxious to have Bridget back?"

"No, indeed," said mother, fervently.

"Then she isn't coming back. I've found my way of earning, and am going to stick to it for awhile. It isn't all pleasant to be sure, but I don't know any kind of business that is. Only," she said, laughing, "I shall insist upon having my wages regularly paid as if I were Bridget. I shall clothe myself out of them, and so be saving dear old overworked father about $5 a week, if you are right in your calculations, mother."

"What will you do with Bridget when she comes?"

"Mrs. Whitcomb wants a girl, so she can go there. O mother, dear! it's a real comfort to feel as if I were supporting myself. And I wonder why I never thought before how pleasant a way it is, this doing kind and pleasant things for you all."

And Janet worked on, feeling sure she had found her best way of securing her pocket money in this expending of her energies for those she loved. How many daughters, restless and fretful for something to do, might find the same way blessed to themselves and to others in homes made bright and sweet by their faithful ministration.—Sel.

A NOBLE LIFE FOR DAUGHTERS.

The lives of Christian young ladies are too often deprived of all interest by a false and foolish parental affection. I once knew a mother of two of the finest little girls I ever saw, who was insanely anxious about their health. The wind was never suffered to blow on their rosy cheeks; they were kept in bed for days if they chanced to sneeze; and their mother's life was one long misery for fear they should be ill. She succeeded at last in making them ill, and soon after she died of over-anxiety. Then the girls, left to themselves, got well. Now few mothers are so foolish as to the bodies of their children; but the characters of too many are developed under similarly unnatural shelter and protection. It is not natural for a woman grown to be an object of tender parental care. The fully-fledged nestling leaves the nest, and cares for itself, and soon for its young. If a young woman does not marry, and no special demand for her presence exists at home, she should be allowed, yea, encouraged to devote her life to some worthy object, not thwarted and opposed and restricted by petty conventionalities, perplexed by finding her Bible teach self-sacrifice, and her parents self-preservation; her Bible teaches her to despise the world and earthly interests, and her parents teach her to put them in the first place.

Alas! my friends, my heart aches when I think of the buried talents that exist in the shape of loving, well-educated, gifted daughters, pining in Christian families for lack of an object worth living for; and then think of the miserable millions of their own sex pining elsewhere, and perishing for the lack of the knowledge these could impart. Again I ask, whose is the fault? Dear fathers and mothers, does it not lie at your doors? Say not, "We cannot make our children missionaries; God must call them." I well know that. But do ye your part, and be very sure God will do his. Lay your children on his altar from their very birth; and just as you trust him to bless your efforts for their conversion, so trust him to accept your dedication of them to his service, and to bless your endeavors to fit them for it. You know you can make them almost what you will. You know they are this day very much what you have made them. You know they come into your hands plastic as potter's clay, blank as white paper, till you trace the lines that cannot be effaced. Train them for missionaries from their conversion onwards, and it will be a wonder, indeed, if a large Christian family grow up without at least one missionary in it.

And train those who are not fit for missionaries to support those that are. Put before them a holy object for money-making. Let the brother that stays at home labor for the brother that goes forth as a missionary; or you, father, ere you die, render your missionary son or daughter independent if you can. We want, the world wants, Christ wants, not a few hundred paid agents, but a whole host of voluntary missionaries—an army of volunteers, to invade the realms of heathendom. And say not, dear mother, "I cannot part with my daughter." Would you not give her up willingly if a suitable offer of marriage presented itself, even though it involved going to India or China? Will you give her to man, and not give her to Christ? Say not, "We cannot expose her to a bad climate, and all the risks and hardships of a mission life." What! will you deprive your child of suffering with Christ, that she may reign with him? Will you rob her of the opportunity of learning practically to rely on God' all-sufficiency? Will you prevent her hearing the "Well done, good and faithful servant," by-and-by? This were to act anything but a parent's part.

Far be it from me to say one word to grieve Christian parents who have done their best to train their children for God. Many such have nobly succeeded; and some who have failed have perhaps been more to be pitied than blamed. And far be it from me to disparage the urgent claims of home mission work. They lie before our very eyes, however, and can in a sense plead their own cause; and we have a hundred home missionaries, not to say a thousand, for every single laborer in heathen lands. And far be it from me to think lightly of the sacred demands of filial duty. But where parents have many children, can they not spare one for Christ's work? For mere worldly motives how many a worldly parent spares all! I only plead with Christian parents that they may consider their ways in this thing. If in this year 1887 say, one thousand Christian parents of converted boys and girls, now in the schoolroom, resolved to devote one son or one daughter (if not more) to missionary work, to train them with a view to it, to endow them with money enough to provide them with food and raiment, and to send them forth as soon as they reach a suitable age, how glorious would be the result in ten years' time. A thousand well-educated, enthusiastic, and independent young missionaries going forth to preach Christ where he is not yet named. And in twenty years' time what fruit of their labor should gladden the heart of the great Husbandman. And in fifty years' time, when the laborers may all have gone into the harvest home, what self-multiplying native churches in Africa, China and Japan might be praising God for the lives and deaths of their founders; and in eternity, what multitudes might be added to the white-robed throng redeemed from the earth; and what bright crowns of rejoicing might forever grace the brows of the sons and daughters thus consecrated by their parents to missionary service.

And if one thousand fathers so acted, the result would be that ten thousand would follow their example; for a good example is contagious. Robert Raikes founded one Sabbath-school, and the world is full of them now. Oh, may the day come, when universally and naturally, Christian parents shall regard it as one of their greatest privileges and most solemn duties, to train one or more of their Christian children thus to serve Christ.—Mrs. H. Grattan Guinnes, in Missionary Review.

THE GIRLS THAT ARE WANTED.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good girls from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf-tips.

The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand,
The fathers and brothers can trust to,
And the little ones understand;

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees,
And kind and sweet to their own folks,
Ready and anxious to please.

The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to do and to say;
That drive with a smile or a soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are the girls of sense,
Whom fashion can never deceive;
Who can follow whatever is pretty,
And dare what is silly to leave.

The girls that are wanted are careful girls,
Who count what a thing will cost;
Who use with a prudent, generous hand,
But see that nothing is lost.

The girls that are wanted are girls with hearts;
They are wanted for mothers and wives,
Wanted to cradle in loving arms
The strongest and frailest of lives.

The clever, the witty, the brilliant girls,
They are very few, understand;
But oh! for the wise, loving, home girls,
There's a constant and steady demand.

A SENSIBLE GIRL.

One of the chief objects for which women were created was doubtless to set a good example to the men; and some of them answer the purpose most admirably, as, for instance, in the following case, reported by the New York Tribune:

An aged truckman bent under the weight of a big roll of carpet. His bale-hook fell from his hand and bounded into the gutter out of reach. Twenty idle clerks and salesmen saw the old man's predicament and smiled at his look of bewilderment. Not one offered to help him.

A fashionably dressed young woman came along, saw the man's situation, and, without looking to the right or left, stepped into the gutter, picked up the hook with her dainty gloved fingers, and handed it to the man with a pleasant smile.

The idlers looked at each other, and at the fair young woman. The old truckman, in a violent effort to express his thanks politely, lost his hat; it rolled into the gutter where the hook had been. The young lady was equal to the occasion. Into the gutter she tripped again, and got the soiled hat.

"God bless ye, miss!" the old man said, as the fair maiden turned her back and went on her way. —Sel.

GOOD COUNSEL FOR GIRLS.

To one of his daughters at school Bishop McIlvaine gave the following counsel: "Don't cultivate, dear N——, with any companion, that sort of violent friendship which leads to a sort of confidential communication which cannot be made known to your parents. Be very particular as to whom you allow to be very familiar with you, as your near companions and friends. First, know well the person, before you allow a close intimacy; and the moment you see anything wrong in a companion, think what effect it should have on your intimacy. Learn to say No, decisively, to any request or proposal which your judgment tells you is not right. It is a great thing in a child to learn to say No, when it is right to do so. Make it a rule to hear nothing from any girl which you may not be allowed, and would not be willing, to tell your dear mother. Be careful to let nothing interfere with your regular private prayers and reading of the Scriptures; and labor to give your whole heart and life to God."

NECESSARY GIRLISH QUALITIES.

Patience and gentleness are necessary qualities in every girl's life. Patience aids in extinguishing envy, overcoming anger and crushing pride. How much good may be done and joy brought by a gentle word or look. Truly "a soft answer turneth away wrath." Girls are not called upon to do great things, except in rare instances; but the everyday trials of life in the ordinary and appointed exercise of the Christian graces afford ample scope for practicing that virtue of mankind which has become proverbial. The best exercises of patience and self-denial—and the latter because not chosen by ourselves—are those in which we have to bear with the failings of those about us, to endure neglect when we feel deserved attention, and ingratitude when we expected thanks; to bear with disappointment in our expectations, with interruptions of our retirement, with folly, intrusion or disturbance—in short, with whatever opposes our will or contradicts our humor.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

TEMPERANCE PLATFORM OF WISCONSIN CONGREGATIONALISTS.

Prohibition.—Thirty-five years ago this convention declared its bearing toward the principle of prohibition by adopting resolutions approving of the Maine liquor law, and recommending a similar law in this State. To-day we reaffirm, with the emphasis that comes from thirty-five years of trial and failure of other legal methods, our unqualified adherence to this principle. This gigantic evil can never be satisfactorily dealt with by any method of mere regulation or restriction. It overleaps all bounds and mocks at all restraints. In spite of a century of the license system the liquor traffic has grown three times more rapidly than the population. Notwithstanding license has often been used by the State with the intent of so burdening the traffic that it should be diminished and its evils alleviated, it has not stayed the tide of death. It has been understood by the dealers in liquor to extend to them the sanction and support of the State. This must not be allowed. It is the duty of the State to recognize this traffic as the most dangerous menace to the public order and the corrupter of the people—to brand it as dangerous business and to move steadily forward to its complete abolition. This traffic is not a business to be sanctioned, neither is it a natural evil to be temporarily checked and confined, but it is a moral evil, a stupendous crime to be outlawed and extirpated. On the platform of prohibition, then, we stand. As a church, we can do no other. We cannot be frightened or silenced by any facts that may come concerning the relation of this principle to public sentiment, finance, politics, parties or government. If these endorse our principle, well; we bid them God-speed; if they do not, as those who believe God's truth is marching on, we must say—our principle is just and righteous and will win, for "No question is ever settled in this world till it is settled right."

Redemption of the Nation from the Traffic.—We believe the nation to be the consummation of a Divine plan for men; that it has a moral mission; that to live, it must meet aright the moral issues before it. We recognize it as a law of moral progress that the nation does not grapple with all moral questions at once, but bares its arm for a struggle with the evil gnawing nearest its heart; and that out of a righteous verdict on one wrong, comes wisdom and strength to meet another. As Christian citizens, then, in behalf of the moral life of the nation, we insist on the abolition of the traffic. This traffic checks the nation's moral progress; it corrupts its moral instincts; it aims a blow at its moral life. But, beyond this, the traffic fetters and crushes our work as Christians. There is a distillery in Massachusetts, the largest in the world. The greater part of its products are exported to the coast of Africa. Our nation receives as a tax upon that distillery $3,483 per day! Christianity sends its missionaries to Africa, but with them goes our rum, and the work of the missionary is many-fold counteracted by the liquor that goes from our Christian nation. Well has it been said, "The curse of Cain was not so deep as shall be God's curse upon the nation that, in the light of Christ's Gospel, curses the barbarians of Congo with the crazy drinks." Against this national disgrace we protest in the name of all honor and justice, all morality and Christianity.

In closing our report we wish to thank God and take courage. Much remains to be done, but much has been done. We believe unity of action will come through awakened conscience, roused thought, earnest work and prayerful inquiry. We greet as fellow workers all who are casting out this demon, whether in our name or not. We rejoice in the stand many of our sister churches have taken. We hail every helping force, from the prayers of saints to the ballots of citizens.

METHODIST RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, 1. That we are convinced that intemperance is actually and historically the cause of humanity's most numerous and aggravated disorders, sorrows and crimes; a constant menace to the social peace, and one of the most stubborn obstacles that hinder the progress of Christianity and civilization.

2. That the traffic in alcoholic beverages, which creates, fosters, and perpetuates intemperance, is crime against humanity, and therefore its legal license cannot have moral sanction and support.

3. That, as an enormous license fee does not lessen the enormity of the evil licensed, we cannot give our support to the delusion and false notion that the drink traffic is to be licensed out of existence by any tax short of that which is equivalent to absolute prohibition.

4. That, loyal to the temperance principles which have been advocated and defended by the Methodist church from its origin to the present time, and rejoicing in the advancement of temperance convictions and of prohibition legislation already achieved, we pledge our influence as Methodist ministers to the cause of total abstinence and of legal prohibition.

Mrs. John Greenway of Syracuse, N. Y., wife of the late millionaire brewer, has been adjudged a habitual drunkard by a jury, and unable to take care of her vast property.

By order of Governor Ames and council, no wines, malt, or spirituous liquors were furnished by the State to the Massachusetts delegation to the Constitutional centennial celebration at Philadelphia.

Elk Presbytery, Tennessee, took a firm position in regard to temperance, declaring that church members should not use liquors as a beverage in any form, neither sell their fruit or grain to the distilleries.

The temperance people of Missouri City, Mo., bought up all the liquor in the vicinity and had a grand mass-meeting and bon-fire on a recent evening.

The president of the World's W.C.T.U., Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas, of London, and Miss Frances E. Willard, vice-president for the United States, and Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, of Philadelphia, Secretary, have sent out a call to Christian women in every land and of every denomination who are interested in the temperance reform to observe the 12th and 13th of November next as days of prayer for the success of the great work in which they are engaged.

A CALL FOR A SABBATH CONVENTION.

The undersigned, ministers and members of churches, feeling that the prevalent desecration of the Sabbath is injuring the churches, promoting infidelity and provoking the just anger of God, unite in calling a convention of Christian people who sympathize with us in this feeling to meet in Elgin, Illinois, November 8th, 1887, at 7:30 P. M.; to continue in session through the following day. The purpose of this convention is to consider and pray and act in reference to this matter as God shall direct. The place of meeting will be subsequently announced.

The above call, agreed upon by the brethren named, is now sent out with the earnest request that all Christians, especially all Christian ministers, will aid in making the convention a success. To this end, 1st. Let every one approving of the meeting cut out the call, paste it upon a sheet of foolscap paper, append his own name and secure others. 2nd. Present it to churches and other religious bodies and ask its endorsement. 3rd. When this work is done, forward the call with its signatures and endorsements to Rev. John Mitchell, Sycamore, Ills. He will combine the signatures from all quarters. 4th. Plan to be at the convention with your friends. Let us rally for the Sabbath.

—Rev. J. W. Dill of Mediapolis, Iowa, has preached his farewell sermon at Lind Grove, and with his family have gone to teach at Selma, Alabama.

—The evangelist Moody is now laboring in Toronto, Canada, where his appeals to the unconverted are having their usual effect, under God, and many are pressing into the kingdom.

—Lyman Abbott, editor of the Christian Union, has been engaged as a pulpit supply for Plymouth church, pending the selection of a permanent pastor; and he will begin his duties in November.

—The Chicago Evangelization Society, of which D. L. Moody is president, is doing grand temperance work in the worst localities on the North Side, with its Gospel tent. The tent is now pitched in the Sixteenth Ward, the most destitute, spiritually, of any ward in the city, there being but one evangelical church to each 18,000 souls. Its population is 36,000, of whom 25,000 are Germans. One Saturday night 131 signed the pledge, thirty taking the iron-clad triple pledge, among them three policemen. During the month there have been hundreds of conversions, and the work still goes on.

—The Wesleyan Methodist General Conference meets at La Otto, Indiana, October 19. This is the twelfth meeting of this body, which convenes but once in four years.

—Consul General Cardwell, of Cairo, Egypt, in a report to the Department of State, calls special attention to the successful labors of American missionaries in the valley of the Nile. Nearly 6,000 native pupils are in attendance at the schools that have been established.

—Messrs. Clagett and Birch have been holding a series of evangelistic meetings in Hamilton, Canada, and as a result many profess to have found the Saviour. A number of the converts have expressed their determination to connect themselves with the churches of their choice.

—The Forty-first Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association will be held at Portland, Maine, on October 25. The Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D.D., will preach the sermon.

—The revival still continues in the Reformed church of Glennville, N. Y. Between fifty and sixty have openly professed their interest in Christ.

—Our foreign visiting yachtsmen put our American yachtsmen to shame by their observance of the Christian Sabbath, says an exchange. Lieutenant Henn of the Galatea made an enviable impression by his observance of the day of rest in all that related to the work and sailing of his yacht. Captain Barr, of the Thistle, attended service at the Dutch Reformed church, on Sabbath, while his vessel lay all day at anchor. His antagonist, the Volunteer, spent the morning in sailing down the Bay, accompanied by a fleet of admirers. This is the nobler victory won by the Scotch yacht.

—In Kochi, Japan, the city occupied by the missionaries of the United States Southern Presbyterian church, work was begun only two years ago. Now there is a Presbyterian church of over two hundred members. The gain in the whole of Japan for the last two years has been seventy-seven per cent.

—The sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper were administered recently in the Japanese Presbyterian church of San Francisco, Cal. A large company of young men were present on the occasion. Two young men were baptized, having been received into the church from heathenism on confession of their faith in Christ, and two others were received by letter. The church now numbers fifty-six members.

—The presence of four young missionaries on their way to Japan brought together an unusual number at a late weekly missionary meeting in the Presbyterian rooms in this city. Rev. Messrs. Hayes and Haworth, graduates of McCormick Theological Seminary, with their wives and the sister of Mr. Haworth, will sail from San Francisco, Oct. 20, on the Oceanic, to be stationed at Kanazawa, on the western coast of Japan. Rev. G. W. Knox, who has been for the past ten years connected with the mission at Tokio, made a vigorous address, showing the importance of reinforcing the Japan mission promptly, fully, and suitably. While no missionary should be sent to any field who has not moral, intellectual, and physical force of a high order, it seemed to him that the present state of Japan made it more necessary than in any other country, that all missionaries should be picked men, chosen with as great care as is used in the calling of pastors for American churches. The Presbyterian and Congregational churches of Japan, lately united, numbers 10,000 communicants, and of the over 100 congregations more than half are entirely self-supporting. He predicted that within fifteen years that empire would cease to be a foreign mission field.

—The Presbyterian church has twelve theological seminaries—Princeton, Auburn, Allegheny, Lane, Union, Danville, McCormick, San Francisco, German, Dubuque; German, Newark; Lincon, Biddle—which had last year 705 students against 499 ten years ago, and 437 in 1870. Princeton leads with 161; then comes Union with 134, and McCormick with 113; Allegheny is next with 68. The total of graduates last year was 198—57 from Princeton and 50 from Union.

—The Presbyterian church is said to be the most numerous body in Protestant Christendom. According to Dr. McCosh, in an historical paper read at the tri-centenary celebration in Philadelphia, in 1872, the total number of Presbyterians then in the world was 34,351,387. According to Rev. Mr. Kerr, in his admirable little book, entitled "Presbyterianism for the people," the total number now in the world is about 40,000,000.

—Dr. Barnardo, a somewhat distinguished philanthropist and physician of London, has carried out a pet benevolent scheme by purchasing 5,000 acres of land in the northwestern part of the Dominion of Canada, and proposes to make of the tract an "industrial farm" where homeless lads of London may be sent. Dr. Bernardo has been singularly successful in reclaiming the little waifs of the British Metropolis, and giving them practical, moral and intellectual educations.

—The Reformed Presbyterians, or Old Side Covenanters, in this country have eleven presbyteries, 119 congregations, 103 ministers, 10,833 members, and 12,102 attendants at the Sabbath-schools. Last year they contributed to foreign missions, $14,735; home missions, $2,607; Southern missions, $3,548; Chinese missions, $1,736; Theological Seminary, $3,034; education, $15,839; sustentation, $2,380; church erection, $17,817; pastors' salaries, $83,900; miscellaneous, $65,304; total, $201,201. The increase in membership for the year over the previous year was 111.

—The revision of the Kaffir Bible has at length been brought to completion. For nearly twenty years the Board of Revisers have faithfully carried on this great work. Several of the brethren who were associated with them, among whom were Rev. John W. Appleyard and Rev. Tiyo Soga, have been called to higher service, but the word went steadily forward. The work of revision has been carefully, minutely and prayerfully carried on. The first session was held on the 4th of November, 1868, and the fifty-sixth session saw the completion.

Literature.

Eminent Americans. Brief biographies of men and women who have been eminent in American history. By Benson J. Lossing, LL. D. 5 5 pages, cloth, 75c, half morocco, $1.00; postage, 13c. New York, John B. Alden.

Thirty-two years ago Dr. Lossing, who had already made good his place as an eminent chronicler of American history, put forth a volume of biographical sketches of the "Leading Statesmen, Patriots, Orators and others, Men and Women, who have made American History." He has from time to time made additions to this work, so as to keep it abreast of the time. The latest edition brings the scenes down to this present year, 1887. It forms a compact volume of more than 500 pages, containing about two-thirds as much matter as a volume of Appleton's Cyclopedia. There are also about 125 portraits, with facsimiles of the signatures of the subjects of the biographies.

"Such persons have been selected, as examples," Mr. Lossing says, "who seemed to illustrate by their lives some special phase in the political, religious, and social life of our country during its wonderful progress from its earliest settlement until the present time. I have endeavord to present such prominent points of character and deeds in their lives as would give the reader a general idea of their relative position in the history of their times; and have also aimed to make the brief sketches so attractive and suggestive as to excite a desire in the young to know more of these characters, and their historical relations, and thus to persuade them to enter upon the pleasant and profitable employment of studying the prominent persons and events of our Republic."

The biographies are arranged in chronological order, beginning with John Winthrop, the second governor of Plymouth colony, who died in 1649, and ending with Capt. Eads, who died in 1887. The portraits are a very valuable feature of the work. Mr. Lossing, artist as well as author, has himself drawn many of them, and they have all been engraved under his special supervision. The extended circulation of such a work as this must have a great and healthy influence on the rising generation, and it is fortunate that it is published at a price so wonderfully low, considering especially that it is a copyright work, as to be within the reach of every one. It well deserves a place in every home library.

Zenobia, or the Fall of Palmyra. By William Ware.
Vathek. By William Beckford.
Out of a Besieged City, a tale of the Revolution. By Prof. Charles W. Hutson.

These three small volumes from the enterprising and popular publisher John B. Alden, of New York, are issued by him with the purpose to supplant the cheap trashy modern novel with imaginative literature of a higher class. William Ware was the son of Dr. Henry Ware, professor of divinity at Harvard and a champion of Unitarian doctrine with Dr. Channing. William Ware was for years pastor of Unitarian churches and also for some time editor of the Christian Examiner. Zenobia was published first in 1837 in the Knickerbocker Magazine. It is a fine example of classical style and is especially instructive in its descriptions of Roman and Oriental society during the reign of Aurelian in the third century. Vathek is termed by Christopher North the "finest of Oriental romances as Lalla Rookh is the finest of Oriental poems." It is surpassing in beauty of description and power of imagination and the final chapter is worthy the pen of Dante. Aside from its literary character, however, the book has little worth above similar Oriental fancies. Its author was a most remarkable character and literary genius. The last-named work is a story of the Revolutionary war, based, we understand, on actual events in and about Charleston. It is not our rule to approve of ordinary novels, but there are features of more than ordinary interest in the above.

"Self-deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy" is the title of a neat pamphlet by Rev. Jacob Helffenstein, and published by Rev. A. Sims, of Uxbridge, Ontario, Canada. It very clearly sets forth the nature and forms of this evil condition of the soul, its danger, consequences and remedy, and is an excellent book for all, but especially for those afflicted with this grave form of spiritual malady. Such cannot fail to profit eternally by a careful reading. The price is 15 cents.

The English Illustrated Magazine opens a new volume with the October number. A charming "Portrait Study" forms the frontispiece, and old English scenes are happily reproduced in "Coaching Days and Coaching Ways." But more happily are English views presented in "Summer in Somerset." "The Mediation of Ralph Hardelot" is a story of five centuries ago in England which will attract many readers.

The October number of the Cosmopolitan opens with a beautifully illustrated article entitled, "The Passing of the Buffalo," by William T. Hornaday, giving a graphic account of his recent buffalo hunt, and showing how the buffalo have been recklessly exterminated. Another timely article is "The Pigmy Kingdom of a Debauchee." The author describes the present condition of the Hawaiian Islands, the causes of the recent revolution and the character of the drunken Freemason, King Kalakaua, and his subjects. The third illustrated article is the last of the series by Arnold Burges Johnson on "Charles Sumner." Two new portraits of the great statesman and many striking and characteristic anecdotes regarding him are given. The article that will, perhaps, attract the most attention is that by J. Henry Hagar on "The Second Wife of Napoleon I." It is based upon new materials just published in Europe, and shows that she was in every way unworthy of her husband, being narrow-minded, vain and unfaithful to her marriage vows. Frank G Carpenter, in an article on "The Tours of the Presidents," presents much interesting information apropos of President Cleveland's Western trip.

The Illustrated London News in its American edition of October 15th furnishes as usual many pictures upon a variety of subjects, including a double-page picture, "Deer Stalking in the Highlands," three pages devoted to the British mission to Morocco, a most pleasing and instructive picture entitled "A Sad Dog's Day," "Sketches of Life on Board a Man of War," "The Home of Florence Nightingale," etc. The supply of reading matter is also abundant and interesting while the number complete costs at retail only 10 cents. The office of publication is 237 Potter building, New York.

The unusual interest in the discussions of the late American Board meeting at Springfield, Mass., has led the Republican of that city to print a full report of all documents, reports, speeches, etc., with portraits of prominent members. Our thanks are due for a copy. The Independent of New York, which has been a champion of the old faith against the probation theories of Andover, has also a very full and excellent report in its last two numbers.

The Oct. 14 number of Science has a carefully prepared article on the Nicaragua ship canal accompanied by maps, which give a ready view of the general plan of the canal with its seven locks. Since it is becoming more certain that the Panama scheme must fail, the Nicaragua route is again receiving attention as when General Grant became president of the company in charge of its interests.

Lodge Notes.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Missouri, in session at St. Louis Thursday, sustained the law forbidding lodges to accept as members any person engaged in the saloon business. There are at present a number of liquor dealers in the ranks.

A Grand Army celebration will be held at Cincinnati, Oct. 26-28. Representatives of all the posts in Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky are expected, and Grand Army men from other States are invited to participate. General Hickenlooper will be commander of the gathering.

Taber Skinner, formerly a Knight of Labor, has brought suit against Grand Master Workman Powderly and the general executive board of the Knight of Labor to recover $460 24, his bill for work done in repairs and alterations upon the new Knights of Labor palace in Philadelphia.

Knights of Labor at Erie, Pa., have commenced a crusade against Sunday work. They commenced suit against several employes of the Northwestern Transportation Company Monday, charging them with unloading a boat in violation of the act of 1794, prohibiting all labor on Sunday except that of charity or necessity.

It is reported that on last Wednesday night, after Michael Davitt, the Irish agitator, had addressed the Knights of Labor convention at Minneapolis, a secret meeting of the leading officials was held. Mr. Davitt was made a member of the order and a Knight of Labor organizer, it being proposed to have him organize the members of the Irish Land League into a special district of the Knights of Labor. Much opposition is expected to this project from English and Scotch knights, and it has been kept a profound secret by the leaders up to this time.

Knights of Labor, Dubuque county, Iowa, have nominated a full county ticket. A strong effort is being made by the Knights to secure a union with the Republicans in order to defeat the Democracy, but they insist on the Republicans endorsing their nominations. A few Republicans are in favor of the movement, but a large majority violently oppose it. It is regarded as a scheme to further the interests of the Knights, who have been in control of the city affairs for the past few months, and who have excited the antagonism of the business interests of the city.

The Knights Templar Grand Commandery of Ohio met at Columbus last Tuesday. The parade was prevented by rain. At the meeting of the Grand Commandery reports were submitted showing that 456 new members were made during the year. The "Eminent Commander" condemned illegitimate Masonry, and cautioned the Templars to distinguish between the true and false. Total receipts for the year were $16,158.27; disbursements, $3,775.87; membership Aug 1, 5,487. Newark Commandery has died out, leaving the present membership 5,643. The charter of Cyprus Commandery, of Zanesville, was revoked and the Eminent Commander expelled. A banquet and ball were given to close.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

LIFE ON A PLAGUE SHIP.

The Rev. Dr. Maynard, the lecturer, was one of the passengers on the plague-stricken steamer Alesia, which arrived in New York a couple of weeks ago. He was seen by a reporter recently, and told the following story of the sad voyage:

"I do not know the exact number of emigrants who were taken on board at Naples, but it must have been about 600. Among them was a party of forty from Palermo, a plague-stricken city. None of the few cabin passengers were, of course, aware of the occurrence at the time, and yet a circumstance which occurred before we started aroused in my mind an undefined suspicion that everything was not all right. The day before we left the steamship people gave a reception on board the Alesia to the Neapolitan municipal authorities, who attended in grand state. It was a delightful occasion, and I am convinced now that it was intended to mollify the authorities on account of the company's action in taking the Palermo passengers.

"During the earlier part of the passage all circumstances seemed to conspire to produce pleasure to all on board. For a couple of days a sirocco came across the Mediterranean from Africa, but did not make the temperature unbearably hot. We were a gay company, the Italian emigrants particularly so. The discomforts attending an emigrant voyage seemed to have no effect upon their spirits. They chatted and laughed and sang and danced all day long and well into the nights, which were made more pleasant by moonlight. Among the emigrants were many of the better class of Italians, and their really beautiful singing added greatly to the charm of these delightful evenings.

"We were about twelve days out when the plague broke out. A young Neapolitan died. It was given out that heart disease was the cause, and there was at the time no ground for supposing otherwise, and yet, in some unaccountable way, all on board of ship became seized with a misgiving. Nothing on the part of the captain, who was a particularly jolly fellow, or the doctor or other officers, indicated that the Neapolitan's death was out of the ordinary run of such misfortunes, yet it caused a sudden fear to fall upon the emigrants, the like of which I never before, in a very long and very varied experience of travel, met with. From that time not a sound of mirth was heard; the dancing was ended; not a note was sung.

"The funeral of the Neapolitan was a sad and impressive sight, and, if it was possible, it increased the general dejection. I have no doubt that the condition of mind of these people had a good deal to do with the swift headway which the disease made after it began its work. I never saw such a complete surrender to misfortune as these people made, and it presented all the more startling appearance on account of the light-heartedness which they had at first displayed. They seemed as limp as rags. They made no struggle with fate, but sat or moved about listlessly and lifelessly, and seemed actually to invite death by their dread of it.

"I can not give any particulars regarding the progress of the disease or the number of the victims. Strange to say, the disease first struck the Neapolitans, and the proportion of the stricken among them was greater than among those from Palermo, who imported the disease. The discipline on board was perfect, and the doctor and his assistants were untiring in their efforts. The captain maintained his jollity of demeanor throughout the entire trial in a manner which I now confess was inspiring. There were no more funerals after the first. Concealment of the true state of affairs lasted but a short time, and the victims were given to the deep, one after another. I believe that no one really knows how many died on board. Every day brought its fatalities."

HOW TO PROMOTE HEALTH.

After all that has been stated of the effects of the atmosphere in high altitudes or at the level of the sea, the influence of forests and ocean, of sea coasts and interior places, humidity and dryness, cold and heat, the winds, electricity, and ozone, and no matter what of other conditions, the paramount considerations for the promotion of health are an abundance of pure air and sunshine and out door exercise. Without these, no climate is promotive of health, or propitious for the cure of disease; and with them, it is safe to say, the human powers of accommodation are such that it is difficult to distinguish the peculiarities of any climate by their joint results on the health and longevity of its subjects.—Bell's "Climatology."

If you keep your feet warm it is almost impossible to take cold.

The most healthful form of exercise is that which involves exhilarating out-door activities.

Will the coming girl breakfast at 8 A. M. in bed, while the mother is busying herself at the house work?

Pulverized borax sprinkled on shelves and in corners of store-closets, is a safeguard from ants. If pulverized borax is mixed with Persian powder, the powder will be more effective.

Liver as Food.—The California Scientific Press says. We cannot too strongly denounce the use of liver and kidneys as food for man. These organs are constantly charged with the worn-out excrementitious matters of the system, the presence of which when rightly understood are disgustingly offensive to the taste. Their presence is evinced by the fact that these portions of an animal are always the parts first subject to decomposition. They make very good food for hens and dogs, but for man—never!

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. Farm Notes.

FARMING BY GASLIGHT.

Howard county farmers residing in the vicinity of the great Shrader gas well, near Kokomo, Indiana, go on record as harvesting the first wheat by natural gas light. A dozen self-binders and men shocking wheat was a truly novel scene, which was witnessed by hundreds of people, who surrounded the fields of grain in carriages. The constant roar of the Shrader well can be distinctly heard eight miles away, while the light can be plainly seen at Burlington, fifteen miles west of here. The estimated flow of gas from this well is 15,000,000 cubic feet every twenty-four hours.—Indianapolis Journal.

Thirty years successful use of salt upon all kinds of crops has proved its value to me. It should not be used on cold, heavy or moist soils, and if any one does he will be disappointed in the result, as its tendency is to keep the ground cool and moist. It will do such soil more harm than good. It should not be cast upon very young or tender plants of any kind, as it will be very sure to kill them. Judgment should be employed in using so strong an agent. I had a friend who heard me recommend salt on onion beds, when I strictly urged that it should be dragged or worked in before the seed was sown; but, forgetting what I said, he did not salt until the onions were about two inches high, and it killed them all; but, sowing another crop properly, it turned out spendidly. Had he waited until the tops were as big as a large pipe stem, he might have covered the ground an inch deep, and his onions would have done finely. Onions should be sown on the same ground year after year, as they continue to improve. There are yards a hundrd years old, and their yield would astonish the common grower. The tops when cut off should be scattered over the ground (do not leave them in lumps) as they make the best food for the growing onions; then sow salt, and put on a coat of manure. Salt is not much of a fertilizer in itself, though plants take it up, as you can tell by tasting and by the stiffening and glazing of straw of a plant grown in a salted ground. I think it acts upon and assimilates the gross matter in the soil, so as to make it available food. It should be in every garden.—Cor. London Horticultural Times.

Poultry need lime in some form; unless it is provided there will be shelless eggs and weak legs. In the summer, when hens have a free range, they will be able to pick up a generous supply in their rambles; but in winter, when the ground is frozen and covered with snow, lime must be supplied. Shells, bones and mortar are favorite forms for feeding lime. Some farmers throw a great mass of shells into the road and depend upon passing teams to crush them. Others bake the shells in a hot oven and then crush; when thus treated they crush easily, and seem to be preferred by the hens. Old plastering or mortar of any kind, when crushed, will please the hens.

One of the first things to do at this time of year is to clear from the grounds all the scattered weeds, some of which have already reached a foot or more in height and are beginning to form seeds. By promptly eradicating them, a numerous crop another year may be prevented. Single plants of some of our common weeds, when they have full scope, ripen several thousand seeds, and it is economy to prevent it. The true way is to destroy weeds before they reach the light, when the labor is small, or in other words, keep the ground always perfectly clean—it is much the cheapest in the end.—Country Gentleman.

During the fall, especially when rains prevent outdoor work, is a good time to overhaul the stables to see that cracks are stopped, so as to keep out the cold of coming winter. Cows cannot do well in cold stables, particularly when exposed to draughts. The mangers, ties, box stalls for calving cows and calves, and the bull pens should be put in order. It is also a good plan to give the entire stable a thorough coat of whitewash, adding a little carbolic acid to kill any vermin that may be about.

Small, sound potatoes fed to horses in connection with other feed will be found very beneficial, and will be thankfully received by them.—Farm Journal.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,
BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

PERSECUTION
By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.
BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

News of The Week.

THE PRESIDENTIAL JUNKET.

The Presidential party left Madison, Wis., Monday morning, and arrived at St. Paul at 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon. Along the route they were welcomed enthusiastically by the citizens. The reception given them by the city of St. Paul was very cordial, but was rivalled by Minneapolis.

The party expressed much surprise at the beauty and magnitude of the West as observed Wednesday from the windows of their special train. Short stops were made at Sioux City, Omaha, St. Joseph and elsewhere. At Kansas City a reception was held and in the evening there was a procession of "the priests of Pallas" and a ball.

Great preparations were made at Mountain Grove, Mo., to salute the President's train. Just before the arrival of the train a fruit jar filled with powder exploded, fatally injuring two young men. The train did not stop, and the party passed on, ignorant of the sad accident. The President and party reached Memphis, Tenn., Friday evening. The reception they received in the South was very hearty. At the stations on the way from Kansas City, crowds gathered to cheer the visitors, and, if possible, to grasp the Presidential hand.

At Memphis Saturday forenoon President Cleveland was formally welcomed by Judge Ellett, an aged gentleman. While the President was replying Mr. Ellett sank down in his place and expired. Three men were also drowned in the river during the display of fireworks the evening before. The President's party went on to Nashville and spent a quiet Sabbath with Gen. W. H. Jackson on the celebrated Belle Meade farm.

CHICAGO.

The Chicago Stock Yards' Company, of Chicago, filed articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State at Springfield, Ill., Friday. The object is to establish and maintain stock yards, etc,, and the capital stock is $10,500,000. Robert D. McFadden and William A. and James P. Gardner are the incorporators.

An old man and his wife were suffocated and burned by a small fire caused by the breaking of a kerosene lamp.

George Francis Train, who came to release the anarchists, entertained several audiences with his crazy babblings until the city officers perceived the anarchists preparing to follow him, when their meetings were suppressed, and will not be permitted until after Nov. 11th.

The International Encampment has been attended by about 2,500 troops and musicians of all kinds, and four sham battles have drawn large crowds; but the affair has been in large degree a failure. Many of the companies have gone home and hardly any will remain to the end.

COUNTRY.

The Attorney General of Texas has rendered a decision against granting a charter to the Metador Land and Cattle Company, organized in Scotland with a capital of $2,000,000, and having for its object the securing and improving of land in Texas.

The cotton crop of the United States this year is estimated at 6,550,000 bales, against 6,505,000 bales last season.

The Greenback nomination for Secretary of State of New York has been accepted by Thomas K. Beecher.

The funeral services over the remains of Minister Manning were held in Trinity Chapel, New York, Friday morning. Among the pall-bearers were Generals Sherman and Beauregard. The body was sent to New Orleans, where the interment will take place.

Superintendent Luckey began at Pittsburg Friday the examination of eleven Sisters of Charity, who have petitioned for certificates to teach in the public schools. The affair causes much comment in religious circles.

Randolph J. Tucker, of Virginia, has been retained in the case of the Chicago anarchists. It is the general opinion that the selection of the able Virginian as an associate of General Pryor was an excellent one, as Mr. Tucker's long service as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the lower House of Congress adds weight to the cause he is to advocate. Black and Salomon, the Chicago lawyers, were last week consulting with Pryor and Tucker in New York expecting to appeal to the Supreme Court this week.

ACCIDENTS, ETC.

Fire broke out in the Northern Ohio Insane Asylum at Newburgh, near Cleveland, Wednesday evening. A high wind prevailed and the flames spread with great rapidity, so that with difficulty the fire was prevented from reaching the main building, where 675 patients were confined. The greatest consternation prevailed, and a great horror was narrowly averted. As it was part of the building was destroyed and six incurable inmates lost their lives, besides two others employed in the asylum.

The Bryn Mawr Hotel, a great Philadelphia resort, was burned Tuesday morning. All the guests escaped, and the baggage was also saved.

An accommodation train on the Missouri Pacific Railroad, consisting of four passenger coaches, left Independence, Mo., Thursday morning crowded with passengers for Kansas City. Near Rock Creek station the accommodation was telescoped in the rear by the Wichita express, consisting of eighteen coaches, all heavily loaded. A lady standing on the platform of the station was killed by the debris and a number on the train were severely injured.

At Kouts, Ind., Monday night, a freight crashed into a passenger train on the Chicago and Atlantic Road, and thirty persons were killed or burned to death. The coaches took fire and the unfortunates buried in the debris were burned up before the eyes of their friends, who could do nothing for them. The scenes were heartrending. An entire family of six persons lost their lives. A rigid examination will be made.

The Pacific Express safe, on the Iron Mountain road, was robbed between Little Rock and the Texas line of about $60,000. An old and trusted messenger, J. B. Owens, is reported missing, and detectives, it is said, are unable to trace him.

Train-robbers attacked the mail car attached to the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio express, near El Paso, Texas, Friday night, with dynamite bombs. The car was broken to pieces, and the agent stunned. His senses returned, however, and he filled one of the robbers with bullets, killing him instantly. The others of the gang fled.

Five bandits who recently abducted Senor Berrera in Starr county, Texas, and held him until ransomed by the payment of $15,000, are reported to have been caught and lynched.

A portable saw-mill exploded Wednesday eight miles from Jackson, Ohio. Two men were blown to pieces, and the engine and mill were utterly ruined.

FOREIGN.

At a meeting of anarchists in London, England, Friday night, Prince Krapotkine said that if the Chicago anarchists were executed their comrades would be justified in avenging their death. Stepniak, the author of "Underground Russia," also made a speech.

Quelito, a town on the southern coast of Mexico, is reported to have been destroyed by a storm, during which many lives were lost. The entire coffee and orange crops in Sinaloa are also said to have been destroyed.

It is supposed that the cities of San Blas and Mazatlan, in Mexico, were partly or wholly destroyed by the recent hurricane and tidal wave, which are said to have been the most severe ever known. Thousands of people at Guaymas are anxiously awaiting tidings from the fated towns.

The relations between Germany and Russia are becoming more embittered. No mask is now worn on either side. The press of St. Petersburg and Moscow is now permitted to indulge in its natural disposition to abuse the Germans. The inspired press is not backward in responding in kind. Diplomatic intercourse between the two governments is limited to unavoidable communications, which are exchanged with frigid civilities. The Czar will return to St. Petersburg on the 18th inst., and will go thence to Moscow. The official expectance is that he will denounce the Berlin treaty, claiming entire freedom on the part of Russia to take her own course.

The suit brought by the United States in the Supreme Court of Utah to appoint a receiver for the property of the Mormon church was argued last week, and the country eagerly waits for the result. The District Attorney is assisted by the U. S. Attorney of Colorado, and a strong case is made against the Mormons under the statute of 1862, which provided that the property of the church should be limited to $50,000. Governor West in his annual report attacks the late constitutional convention as promising nothing against the institutions of Mormonism.

The Good Templars are unwilling to let go the advantage they had in the Prohibition party through John B. Finch, and are making all possible use of his memory. They proclaim a three months' mourning season, wherein all members of the order are to wear crape on their sleeves—"during the whole of that time," reads the order. They have arranged a memorial service in Chicago on the evening of November 30th, following the meeting of the National Prohibition Committee and preceding the general conference. Dr. Talmage, who has proved himself a suppliant agent of the lodge, has been asked to make the address. But, most unhappy stroke of all, Miss Willard has been persuaded to issue a call to all the local W. C. T. Unions in her great army of women that they all hold memorial services and fill the land with mourning for a man whom their cause had much reason to dread.

The negligence of Attorney-General Bradford of Kansas to attend to cases involving the legality of the prohibitory laws of his State, which we noticed last week, has a very serious side. Should the case go by default, and a judgment be entered for the saloons, it would saddle upon prohibition the burden of paying for the distilleries, breweries and saloon stock. Mr. Samuel W. Packard, an able lawyer and prohibitionist, and Anti-mason also, marked the danger and hastened immediately to Washington hoping to postpone the judgment on the Kansas case until one could also be brought up from Iowa and the two argued on their merits. Mr. Bradford will perhaps be given another chance, as the Supreme Court is unwilling so important a case should be decided until all the arguments are heard. It is rumored that the opinions are already written reversing the decisions of the State courts and unfavorable to prohibition.

The Illinois Masonic Grand Lodge met a few days since in Central Music Hall in this city. Several years ago when they met in the same hall there was great indignation on the part of the managers at the filthy and disgusting condition of their premises when the Masons were gone. The same tobacco-saturated crowd filled the corroders this year. Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., ejected some years since from the Rock River Conference for heresy, did the religous part of the meeting, and was reappointed Grand Chaplain. The Grand Master in his report approved the expulsion of McGarigle and his fellow-boodlers. The election resulted in putting Gen. John C. Smith in the East as Grand Master. Some weeks ago the Cynosure called attention to his probable election and its bearing on his well-known aspirations to succeed Gov. Oglesby. The people of Illinois have had enough of these lodge-made politicians, and they should say so with emphasis.

The interest taken by the public in the matter of international arbitration has had some impetus from the visit of Mr. Jones, M. P., to President Cleveland and by his addresses in several of our large cities. His visit to Chicago was ill-managed. The press reports of his address were liberal but the audience was small. If, however, there was little positive interest in the noble cause he represented, there was some in the wretched picture of war which some respectable citizens of Chicago attempted to paint in a West Side driving park, where the remnants of the much advertised International Encampment were being turned over to a receiver, so as to save a few shillings to divide among the mad creditors. The affair was run on wind until it fairly blew out. A subscription guaranteeing all payments was made up on the poorest kind of promises, and the business men whose names were down refuse to pay because false pretenses were employed. The whole affair was a notorious and beautiful failure, and it will be many a day before Chicago men attempt to raise money by sham battles and sham camps.

The labor party labors like the mountain to produce a political "boom," but has yet brought forth nothing but mice. At Springfield, Illinois, a few people met a few days since as a National Industrial Reform convention and adopted a platform which included prohibition, woman suffrage, national ownership of railways and telegraphs, arbitration, heavy taxation of unused land, direct vote of the people for all public offices, the distribution of one cent per month for each inhabitant from the U. S. treasury to be used for internal improvements, the printing of $1,200,000,000 to redeem outstanding U S. bonds, that all laws be ratified by the people, and that the Government provide a home for all homeless and worthy families. Mrs. Belva Lockwood of Washington presided over the committee which formulated this remarkable document, and the inevitable Dr. Kirby turned up in time to be made chairman of the meeting, while two of the four names with which we are acquainted are B. G. Haskell, an anarchist, late of San Francisco, now running a revolutionary sheet in Denver, and old mother Emiline B. Wells, the high priestess of Mormonism and editor of the woman's organ of that infamous system, whose two daughters with the young reprobate John Cannon are famous examples of Mormon piety. This piebald convention closed with a ranting, ridiculous speech by the crazy George Francis Train. Any cause would make itself scandalous by such a meeting. Another labor party meeting is incubating at St. Louis to be held in December, and to harmonize all the conflicting elements under a new name which may be National Free Soil party. Labor is true nobility, but most of our labor agitators, so-called, are ignorant and blind followers of self-interest.

The Chicago anarchist case was argued in the United States Supreme Court last Friday. Roger A. Pryor, Randolph Tucker, Ben. Butler and two Chicago lawyers appeared before Justice Harlan, who informed them that to save time the whole court would hear their argument. Pryor spoke while the others assisted by suggestions. It is not the custom to admit the public to hearings in the chambers; but when Justice Harlan arrived at his room and was informed that parties had asked leave to be present, he replied: "Certainly, let them all come in if they can get in. The Supreme Court has no secrets. The Chief Justice limited the lawyers to a single point. "The only question for this court," said he, "is whether the Illinois statute was constitutional. If the lower court erred in its administration of the statute that is a question for the State courts." The State court has already affirmed the judgment of Judge Gary, and the case is brought within a narrow limit. Having presented their case the lawyers were dismissed until Monday; but Attorney General Hunt of Illinois having been summoned that the argument of the State may be heard the decision is not expected until the last of the week. The opinion prevails that the decisions of the courts here will not be disturbed, and the law will take its course. Large mass meetings were held last week in this city, New York and Boston, but no public sympathy has been aroused outside of well-known anarchist circles.

VACCINATING AGAINST THE SMALL-POX OF SECRETISM.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

A recent number of The Forum contains a brilliant and spicy argument from ex-President Andrew D. White on College Fraternities, reviewing some of the objections which many of the wisest educators have alleged against their feature of secretism. The ex-President is no apologist, as I understand, for secret organizations in general and on principle. He rather deplores them, and admits that a bitter enemy hit the point when he likened secretism to small-pox.

But President White seems to me to miss his point when he allows the secretism of the College Fraternity as a prophylactic against the grosser infection of lodgery. He says the Fraternity "might perhaps be considered as a vaccination." Were it not nearer the truth to regard it as an inoculation?

The ex-President's remedy seems to me to be like the vaccinating against drunkenness which those "true temperance," "personal-liberty" men, the brewers and vintners, are pleading for, who want to flood the country with beer and wine so as to wash out the uncleanness of the brandy and whisky debauch. They are terribly down on the stronger drinks because they provide and want to sell the so-called milder ones. Some have been deluded by the sophistry, as plausible as Mr. White's, but when confronted with the facts, many, like the distinguished Dr. Holland (Timothy Titcomb), have abandoned the theory as vicious and deluding.

If it is really desired to protect our young men against the abominations of the oath-bound organizations, it is not well to attach to the inceptive steps which tend that way the powerful and seductive influences which the aid and prestige of great educational institutions certainly afford. What is the chief fascination of the lodge anyhow but the glamour of its grandiloquent titles? Why, a plain, simple soul who has never borne a more distinguishing name among his fellows than John or Tom Smith, swells with an intumescent consequence nigh to bursting when he finds himself hailed as "Most Worshipful," "Most Sublime," "Past Grand" and the rest.

Now add to this the dizzying idea that he is standing on the "Pinnacle of the Temple" of learning, away up among the graduates and faculties, and he imagines his head is among the stars. Church, chapel, prayer hall—why these are common-place vulgarities compared with his eminence. Vaccination! It is the first step on the glorious ladder that leads up among those nobilities of the lodge, the Grands, the Worshipfuls, and those in the seventh heaven still above. As well might our peace-loving Quakers expect to eliminate the martial spirit, seemingly inherent in our blood, by furnishing our children with gaudy paper caps, crimson plumes, drums and cornstalk rifles, as for college presidents and other teachers of youth to extirpate the rage for lodgery by fostering fraternities in connection with their education. Like inoculation, the remedy is better calculated to produce the disease than like vaccination to prevent or moderate it.

THE LORD'S DAY SABBATH.

TWELVE ARGUMENTS FOR THE CHANGE OF THE DAY.

BY REV. J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

1. The change was possible.

The strength of the Sabbatarian (or Seventh-day) argument is that Divine law is unchangeable. This is the main reliance. It is true that some laws are of such a nature and character, and so in harmony with the nature of God and the nature of things that they are called "moral natural," and are considered unchangeable. But many other laws are so related to changeable things that they are called "moral positive," and may be changed in form or abolished altogether. The whole ceremonial and typical system was of this character, and has passed away or has been adjusted to the new dispensation. Circumcision has been changed into baptism and the Passover into the Lord's Supper.

The admission is freely made that the great body of the Decalogue is "moral natural" law and unchangeable. But the precise time of the Sabbath is so manifestly changeable that it changes with every degree of longitude in its hours, and the day itself is changed in the circumference of the earth. There is no man living that knows when the law was first enunciated, or what precise time corresponds to the time of the first Sabbath. The first day may be nearer than the seventh, and the second nearer than the first. Hence a change may be made in the relative matter of Sabbath time, without any violence done to the absolute obligation of Sabbath service. The change is also possible in the addition of a more important creation work. This possibility may have its development in the material earth, or in man's body or spirit or both, and the luster and value of the new may—not to say must—be a warrant for some change of time and method suited to that "which exceeds in glory."

2. The change was necessary. To this we are brought by the presumption of the prior argument.

The original dispensation of nature allowed a fall that made "the whole creation groan and travail in pain." The stars have been turned into darkness and the moon into blood. "The gold in man's character has become dim and the most fine gold changed." Sin has brought death and all our woes into the world. Man has become dead in trespasses and sins, and the ground is cursed for man's sake—and all this that there might be a new and grander display of the Creator's power and wisdom and grace. The new heavens and new earth; the new creature in man himself, made of "incorruptible seed that liveth and abideth forever," "the life more abundant"—"the far more exceeding," even the "eternal weight of glory" that shall be revealed in us, that shall change all time and eternity itself into an unceasing Sabbath, should be considered, and is considered worthy of Sabbattic recognition and celebration. Hence Paul in Hebrews 4: 10, says, in most unquestioned reference to Christ and his work: "For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from his." Eleventh verse: "Let us labor, therefore, to enter into that rest." This last, grandest, even saving work of Christ is here certainly urged as an obligation to enter into his rest. This work and glory is all-comprehending, and while it fulfills the law in one sense, becomes a law in another, "so that we are not without law to God, but under the law to Christ."

3. Christ was competent to make the change. This is by the Saviour himself claimed in his language, Mark 2: 28: "Therefore, the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath."

Having in the preceding verse asserted that Sabbath law was, in its earliest and strongest form, so subordinated to man's interest, for whom it was made, as well as for the glory of God, that its operation might be suspended in cases of necessity and mercy, in this verse Christ declares its subordination to himself as the Mediator and Saviour. This involves a true principle of Christian philoscphy that Christ, who satisfied the law or fufilled it on our behalf, can not only free us from some of its jots and tittles, but from the burden of its obligation and penalty. He, then, who "is the end (fulfillment) of the law for righteousness to those that believe," authorized his apostle to say to believers: "Ye are not under the law, but under grace." This must needs be exhibited in some form of our moral obligations, that it might be evident we "are under the law to Christ." The "moral positive," or relative feature of the Fourth Commandment in reference to the day was the salient point for the emphasizing of the fact that Christ is Lord of the Sabbath day. His character, then, both as Lord and Lawgiver, make him entirely competent to the change.

4. The change was predicted.

In this matter we have one of the few instances in which we have interpretation of prophecy that is inspired. Paul in Heb. 4: 7, after having spoken of the seventh day in the fourth verse as the creation Sabbath and in the fifth verse of the Jewish Sabbath by quoting from Psa. 95: 11, says the Spirit of God spoke by David of another day in Psa. 95: 7, in the language, "to-day, if ye will hear his voice." Paul not only quotes this language in Heb. 3: 15 as a test of being partakers with Christ, but twice in this verse to make it emphatic that the prediction by David was fulfilled by a new Sabbath day.

It is important in this connection to note that there are three Sabbath dispensations alluded to by Paul in this chapter: the creation Sabbath as a covenant of works on the seventh day; the Jewish Sabbath given on Sinai, introduced by Joshua in Canaan, Heb. 4: 8; then the Christian Sabbath as Christ's rest, Heb 4: 10, predicted by David, Psa. 95: 7, quoted and explained by Paul, Heb. 4: 7. This was in each instance a sign of the covenant, the first two using the seventh day, the last having, as Paul says, "another day."

We have also in the 118th Psalm, 24th verse, a clear historico-prophetic allusion to a Sabbath day which he identifies with the stone (Christ) being made head of the corner. "This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." Here is not merely the rest but the day alluded to. In Ezek. 43: 27, the prophet sums up the New Testament features of Divine ordinances by saying, "And when these days are expired, it shall be that on the eighth day and so forward the priests shall make your burnt offerings upon the altar . . . and I will accept you, saith the Lord God." This three-fold cord of prophecy cannot be broken.

5. The change is recorded and the third Sabbath introduced by name.

The argument that the first day is never so much as called Sabbath is very plausible, and with many conclusive. The defect of our English version is very injurious in this matter. But if the idiom of the Greek language had been properly understood and rendered into English, there had been no Sabbath question and controversy.

In Matt. 28: 1, the Spirit of God by Matthew teaches an end of Sabbaths, by the words "opse d Sabbatoon, the word Sabbatoon being in the genitive plural, must either be rendered "weeks" or "Sabbaths." But Sabbaths is the original and essential idea of the term, and where used even in the sense of weeks (which it never is in the plural either in Septuagint or New Testament Greek) it refers to that which is marked by Sabbath and begins and ends with rest on the Sabbattic idea. Thus the primary, natural and almost universal meaning is Sabbaths.

Then the fact that there was a creation Sabbath and a Jewish Sabbath, as Paul shows in Heb. 4, makes the statement clear and unmistakable. It was the end or fulfillment of the covenant of works and the typico-gracious covenant of Sinai, with their "signs," in a Sabbath. These covenants Christ came to fulfill and terminate in the interest of salvation, and if he did what he came to do, viz., "fulfill all righteousness, he fulfilled these Sabbaths or signs of these covenants. Then we have the statement, "as it began to dawn" (eis mian Sabbatoon) toward "the one of Sabbaths." This may be peculiar language, but it is very emphatic; the numeral being cardinal (one) and not ordinal (first), the noun being, in every case of the seven it is employed, omitted, the adjective virtually becomes a substantive and should be rendered "the one." Then we have "Sabbatoon," the very same word used in the preceding clause, and always with two exceptions rendered Sabbath in the New Testament and always in the Septuagint; those in the New Testament being in the singular and translated "week."

Then the conclusion becomes most clear that we have in this verse the record of the termination of the two prece ing Sabbath institutions, and the introduction of a third, which is not only Sabbattic in its nature but in its name: and this is rendered even more certain from the general use of Sabbatoon to indicate this day.

6. Our sixth argument is, the day was observed by the apostles as a Sabbath day. They met upon it and used it for prayer, preaching and sacramental purposes (Acts 20: 7). This course was followed by most of the early Christians, some observing it exclusively, others observing it with the seventh day, until the minds of Christians became so convinced of the propriety of its observance that it became substantially universal; and we only wonder that any one with the Spirit of Christ and in the mind of Christ can fail of esteeming and using this day as the most precious of all time, and the guarantee and pledge of the future life.

7. It was blessed as a Sabbath.

(1) By the presence of Christ with his disciples. How uniformly he made his appearance to them on this day is one of the most important facts of the Gospel narrative. Their eyes were sure to be greeted with this blessed vision as they met to observe this Holy day; and how often has the eye of faith beheld the crucified one in sanctuary service on this, "the one of Sabbaths."

(2) By the gift of his Spirit. For this they waited, and did not wait in vain. For forty-nine days they watched and prayed for "power from on high," and the Pentecostal shower at length came. The fiery baptism was an event most anxiously awaited, most graciously vouchsafed, and most thankfully enjoyed. Who can fail to see that the grant of such a boon would make the day as memorable as the grace of God itself. This Lord's day, made so precious to John on Patmos by his being "much in the Spirit," has been ever since a day of gracious bestowments, and "the day of all the week the best" on that account.

8. Its privileges are guaranteed.

Paul in Col. 11: 16 says, "Let no man judge you . . . . in respect to the Sabbaths." If here we were to be limited by Judaizing teachers; if the consummated work of our precious Saviour was not allowed to be magnified in our view, and celebrated on our Sabbath, the zest of our joy would be taken away, and the zeal of our service much diminished. Christian liberty and service both need and are secured the felicity of triumphant joy in the Saviour and his work. We then feel sure that however men may judge in this matter, and of us concerning it, the Judge of all the earth will judge favorably those who by Sabbattic rest honor him and his day.

9. The duty to enter into Christ's rest is commanded.

In Heb. 4: 11 the great Apostle of the Gentiles, in the form of entreaty, but with all the force of command, requires us to "labor to enter into that rest," referring, doubtless, to the rest into which Christ has entered, "having ceased from his own work as God did from his."

The last clause here makes it evident that the analogy is designed between the creation and the redemption Sabbaths. True, our critics may say it is kata pausin in the Greek, and not Sabbatoon. But they gain nothing, for this word involves the princi ple of Sabbath observance, and the form is alluded to in the preceding verse (9th), when the word rendered rest is sabbatismos, a sabbath-keeping (see margin). True, these passages have been understood and explained in reference to heaven, but the use of either of these terms gives no warrant, nor does the context, and the fourth and tenth verses undoubtedly refer to the Sabbath.

10. The acceptance of this day is urged, Heb. 4: 1: "Let us, therefore, fear lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." The term, "His rest," must, in the light of Heb. 3: 14, be understood of Christ's rest, for we are made partakers with him in this, as in all other matters. The promise alluded to is contained in the prophecies already quoted. The main one in the 95th Psalm being quoted in both chapters. The failure of unbelieving Jews, to enter under Joshua into the Jewish dispensation and Sabbath in Canaan, being used as a warning.

11. The very general acceptance of the change.

This should carry with it very great weight. We would not despise the views of a very small minority. But when the majority is so overwhelming, eminent men, reformers, churches and nations with one accord, their views are not to be despised.

12. The providences of God, with thunder tone, have made the observance of the first day a blessing and its violation a curse.

It would certainly be passing strange if the God of the Sabbath would not make his voice to be heard and his will to be known, by providential tokens in the eighteen centuries of the Christian Era. How does it come that men have been, and communities have been so blessed in temporal and spiritual things with the load of guilt upon their heads which the views of the Sabbatarian would imply? And, then, it has been noted that the desecration of the Christian Sabbath has been followed by the terrible judgment of fire pronounced in Jer. 17: 27—the great London fire and the great New York fire of 1836 following the repeal of Sabbath laws. The Chicago fire, the Portland and the Boston fires of more recent date, and commencing on the Sabbath, emphasize God's displeasure at the violation of this precious day of Sabbattic rest to the Christian belivers and the ruling Saviour.

I will conclude with an answer to a few objections.

1. "The seventh day is frequently called the Sabbath." This no one denies. It was so called because it was the Sabbath during the whole Jewish economy.

2. "The first day is never called Sabbath." This is the mistake of our translators. It is called Sabbath seven times in the Greek of the New Testament.

3. "The seventh is still called Sabbath under the New Testament." This is because it is still a legal Sabbath to the Jew, who "is a debtor to keep the whole law," because circumcised. But "we are not under the law but under grace."

4. "The command was to keep the Sabbath holy." This we obey when we properly observe the Christian Sabbath.

5. "God did not rest the first day as he did the seventh." True; but Christ "ceased from his own work as God did from his." Heb. 4: 10.

6. Christ is three times called Lord of the Sabbath, to show his right to alter it.

7. "In Matt. 28: 1, they are referred to as different days." This is so only in the English translation. In the original Greek it is by precisely the same word.

8. "The meeting of the disciples on the first day was for fear of the Jews." True, because the keeping of that Sabbath was peculiarly offensive to the Jews. They, therefore, met in private.

9. "Breaking bread, Acts 20: 7, does not mean the Lord's Supper." It does when associated with preaching and prayer.

10. "Paul kept the seventh day." He only made use of it to reach the Jews in synagogue service. He also kept the first day by preaching to Christians.

11. "The women following Jesus kept the seventh day." This was before the change.

12. "Christ kept the seventh day." True, it was thus he fulfilled the law. He also met with and blessed his disciples on the first day.

13. "There is no special command to keep the first day." The example of the disciples is equivalent to a command, but the command is made specific in Heb. 4: 1 and 11.

14. "The Romish church changed the day." This is mere assumption. They have sense enough to keep it, as they do many other New Testament ordinances. There is no historic proof of its change by them, but there is that the first day was kept long before there was a Romish church.

15. "It is better to obey God than man." Very true, but we obey God when we honor Christ, and follow Christ's example and enter into his rest.

SABBATH BREAKING BY TRAIN AND CAMP.

BY A RAILWAY AGENT.

I have read from time to time the criticisms in the Cynosure on the inconsistency of temperance and other reform societies in the matter of Sabbath-breaking and the baneful influence this has on society. I am surprised to find any difference of opinion among earnest Christian people, and wish to tell you what I know on this subject, from an outsider's observation.

First, I will say that I was always a strong temperance man and observer of the Sabbath, from education and practice, and believe it unwise to make any compromise with the world, which is always so ready to take advantage of the least encouragement in these matters. In the capacity of railroad agent I have been in a position to quietly weigh these inconsistencies, which I am sure count more for evil than good.

As a matter of policy railroad companies pretend to observe the Sabbath; and do, as far as possible, stop all work, except the running of through trains and excursions to satisfy a public demand. This demand comes mostly through churches and temperance organizations. In my position as manager of excursion business my company accepted my opinion and abolished all excursion business except of a religious character. I truly believed said excursions were productive of good, until an experience of three years taught me otherwise. I was surprised and disgusted. Our camp grounds and park were in use every day for two months some seasons; and I say truthfully, out of all the different classes of people I handled (on some days over two thousand) the religious excursions gave us the most trouble and annoyance. This may have come in part from the fact that we relied upon their moral character to insure order. But there is a reckless class in every community who are sure to be on every excursion and at every camp-meeting. These are the "mashers," hucksters, patrons of games of chance, curiosity seekers and others, all of whom are earnestly looking out for prey in their several occupations, and never impressed by the exercises, of whatever fame the speaker may be. It required the greatest vigilance to keep down this element. The reputation of the company was at stake, to say nothing of the imposition many good people were exposed to. One example will illustrate it better than anything I can say.

On the Sabbath J. Ellen Foster spoke to three thousand people. We noticed drunken men here and there, and supposed it the work of pocket flasks; but later on the thing became too general for such a source to supply, and, watching the tide of a certain element I was able to scent it near a water melon pile, and there lost the trail; but after a time by the aid of winks and nods I located the saloon inside of the melons, sold by a man who had been keeping lunch stand for years at similar meetings.

Of course it is hard to control such things, but, don't the occasion furnish greater license and opportunity to such, and lessen the respect for the day? While much good may be done in the way of reunions and inspiring discourses, at the same time it is necessary to have a money-making wing to the business in order to defray necessary expenses, as they say. This gives an air of business to the occasion, which in the eyes of the world lessens its respect, and turns the day into a day of frolic for the young. Are such meetings necessary when you take into consideration the character they give to the Sabbath?

In the second place, it is my candid opinion, if it were not for the profits the occasion offers, there would never be such Sabbath-breaking. I have been in a position to observe all the inside workings of these meetings. There seems to be one object with all kinds of people—namely, money. The same is true of all the speakers, from those of greatest national reputation down. They must have from fifty to one hundred dollars a speech. To raise this money and make a good profit for themselves, the managers, who are often persons of elastic consciences, will resort to unscrupulous methods to make the money. I have seen them advertise "strictly religious services—everything free—no money-making scheme." Ministers and speakers make wonderful appeals for the Lord's Day and against Sabbath-breaking, at the same time receiving a commission or rebate on every ticket sold by the railroad company. To appear consistent some shut off the gate fees and refreshment stands, but add to the rate the company makes, and thus get the same thing. Others add to the rates and charge gate fee also; sell stands and other privileges, often violating the rules, which forbade anything but lunch stands on Sabbath. Some fellow will offer half he makes to run a swing; and I have known managers to get mad because we refused. On the following day, when the returns are in from all stations and the managers come to the General Office to receive their rebate, then their true character stands out. Like so many sharks, they are grabbing at every thing in sight, and ready to swallow each other,—such back-biting and abuse of each other as one seldom hears, especially if they don't make as much as expected. They allege a dozen reasons for failure, lest the company think them not a success in the business.

Then I have been present in the making up of the programme, and reviewed the correspondence of very many prominent temperance speakers in the country, and I must say, with a few exceptions, the chief consideration seemed to be the ducats, and nothing moved them but a guarantee of a good fee; it matters not how urgent the occasion be, or whether it be local or National. But those same speakers invariably proclaimed that they were working for the Lord and humanity.

But these managers say they must have the Sabbath for the benefit of laboring classes. I think rather it is because they can get the largest crowds on that day. When I applied to my superiors for favors for this class of business on account of its religious character, they told me I would find them just like all others. I thought it prejudice against temperance ideas, and insisted; but I soon found that they had given each other this reputation; and it is the reputation the world has of them generally.

What has been my experience I find true in a greater or less degree of all the temperance and camp meetings I have attended,—and I have been to many in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. On the whole, their influence is against the Bible Sabbath, and had better be dispensed with entirely. In all of our large cities as soon as the Sabbath day is fairly open the city begins to empty itself of its population,—horse cars and steam cars, all crowded with human freight; beer gardens, dancing halls, base ball, camp meetings—each place gets its thousands. First the car fare, then the gate fee, and the many other fees on the inside. It looks pretty much as though all make the same use of the Sabbath day. Is not the tendency to weaken the influence for good with the world? It matters not what the object of the enterprise, the world takes advantage of the example set before it by men who profess high moral and religious convictions.

CHRIST SHUT OUT.

Christ is not included in various religions of the earth, hence he is excluded. This is peculiar to the Masonic lodge, for in their oaths and obligations and prayers they do not use the name of Christ, and so exclude and set him aside as the author of moral and religious obligation, which proves Masonry to be one of the many anti-Christian worships now in the world. The Christian religion is found only in the Christian church, and, as in theory the lodge excludes Christ, so in practice; thus subverting the authority of the church. The Masonic building is considered a temple, and the master Mason's room the Holy of holies. The first prayer, in opening the lodge, proclaims that they have met in the name of God, or deity, and desire to do all in his name that they do while together. Their prayer asks admittance for lodge men to the temple eternally in the heavens, as a result of their discordant passions being subdued by the sublime principles of Freemasonry, which was invented by man, and based upon a religion of theism. Hence, in their openings there is a careful exclusion of the name of Jesus Christ, the only Mediator and way of access for a human being to his God. As the lodge is to divorce men from any higher obligation than that which it enjoins, there is a propelling, underlying motive which keeps the lodge together, in whose realm there is none other than terror to bind. This is strictly a heathen motive, and not a Christian; is not terror, but love. Hence, all who continue to engage in lodge rites are thereby thrown off their guard, their natures defiled, their conscience somewhat debauched, their minds slowly blinded, and their hearts gradually hardened and sealed to the god of this world. See 2 Cor. 4: 4: "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not."—John Harshbarger in Gospel Messenger.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

BRIEF NOTES OF THE WESLEYAN GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Chicago, Oct. 22, 1887.

My brief stay at the General Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Convention at La Otto, Ind., was in every way agreeable. Arriving on the morning of the 19th I found friends in waiting at the depot, who assigned me to excellent quarters very near the church.

One session of the brethren, preliminary to organization, had been held the day previous, and President N. Wardner took the chair and promptly called to order at 10 o'clock A. M. Most of the morning session was occupied in perfecting organization, and constituting committees. Sixty-two responded to the first roll call, and the number steadily increased by fresh arrivals. To look in the faces of these noble and devoted servants of Christ, who have convictions and dare to assert and maintain them, was itself an inspiration. Some of the veterans of other days were gone, but there were enough of the patriarchs left to give dignity and stability to the body, and guide the younger members in their deliberations.

I left before the bulk of the real business of the conference was entered upon and while it was being prepared for submission by proper committees, but some matters of great importance were considered and acted upon. The reports from the work on the Pacific Coast were deeply interesting, and the appointment of Rev. D. F. Shaperdson as evangelist and organizer upon that field was one of the most important acts of this conference. One reason urged for this step was that there were many Christians in those regions who would not unite with churches fellowshiping the lodge, who were asking for a church home. They had been shown the way more perfectly by the holiness association, which does not organize churches, and having come to the light they wanted to find sympathy, shelter, and a home with others like-minded on these great and living questions.

The conference accorded to me as representative of the N. C. A. ample opportunity to present its work, and appointed Rev. L. N. Stratton to represent the Wesleyan Methodist connection, of over 17,000 members, at its next anniversary convention at New Orleans in February next. The committees on order of religious exercises assigned me an evening, and I spoke to a large and appreciative audience as God gave me utterance, and noticed that allusions to the lodge and to prohibition were received with "Amens" that evidently came from the heart. It would give me great pleasure to mention the names of many friends with whom I have labored and prayed in other days, but the list which is written in heaven would be too long for insertion here. Other engagements compelled me to say "Farewell," and I departed leaving only pleasant recollections, and with a new inspiration for the work to which I feel called of God.

UP AND DOWN IN ALABAMA.

An old Alabama town—Its welcome of the N. C. A. agent—A southern Chicago—A good field—The Baptist pastors—A comrade of African memory.

Montgomery, Ala., Oct. 13, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—From Marion, Alabama, to Tuscaloosa, the old capital of the State, the road runs through a country in the main quite productive and with large cotton plantations. Rural villages in Alabama are generally not calculated to inspire admiration and it is only as you get into the mining and manufacturing regions that you see signs of prosperity. Tuscaloosa, however, is having a renewed growth. Its broad, shaded streets have been invaded by the street car, and the sound of the steam whistle is arousing the Rip VanWinkles from their long slumber. New buildings are going up and the town is having a moderate "boom."

I found my old friend, Rev. P. Musell, who was forty years a minister in the colored Baptist church, still vigorous and still at work. He had not abated one jot of opposition to the lodge system, in which he has had much experience. The present pastor of the Baptist church, Rev. Jas. Mason, also expressed his hearty sympathy in my work. The Presbyterian Theological School is not largely attended. The president and professors were away at presbytery, but they are doing a good work, and aim at thoroughness rather than to make a show of numbers.

As my time was limited I did not stay to lecture, but went on to Birmingham, "the Chicago of the South." I had heard much of this new and wonderful city, and was not surprised to find great business activity and many fine buildings in process of construction. I was surprised to see large fine residences and handsome streets, separated from the rest of the city by a long interval of primitive forest, which is being held too high for improvement. I was surprised at the excellence and speed of their steam railway system. The broad streets admit of two tracks with dummy trains which equal in celerity and convenience the cable cars of Chicago.

I preached Sabbath morning in the Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Schnell, pastor, a graduate of Talladega and late pastor at Louisville, Ky. Like all those who have received their education at that institution he is in full accord with our reform and was glad of my aid in the conflict with the lodge system, which here, perhaps, more than in almost any other city in the State, is the rival and adversary of the church. His congregation is increasing and the church is exerting an excellent influence in the place.

At 3:30 P. M. I preached in the large new African M. E. church, Rev. J. M. Goodloe, pastor. This brother, having seen the inside of the lodge and known its practical influence on the church, has learned to abhor and oppose it. He said that he regarded it as one of the greatest hindrances to the Gospel, and heartily thanked me for my earnest admonitions. Another brother who heard me and whose pastor is a Mason besought me to come and preach the same sermon in his church. He said it was just what they most needed to hear.

Sabbath night I attended Episcopal service with the gentleman with whom I stayed, who is an ardent churchman and a devoted Mason. Monday forenoon I attended ministers' meeting in the First Baptist church, Rev. W. R. Pettiford, pastor. They have a large, new and beautiful house of worship. The pastor has been a student of and co-worker with Bro. Woodsmall, as well as a reader of the Cynosure. He expressed a most hearty sympathy with my work and invited me to occupy the time in addressing the meeting, which embraced most of the colored pastors of the city and a number from neighboring towns. Although several wore the emblems of their orders, all listened attentively and a majority expressed approval. The chairman and others thanked me for my remarks and thought the time of the meeting had been well spent.

It was my great pleasure to meet in Birmingham my brother and co-laborer in Africa, Rev. J. K. Billheimer, for a number of years missionary of the United Brethren and American Missionary Association boards. For a good many years he was treasurer of the United Brethren Board of Missions, while Mrs. Billheimer, now in Ohio, was president of the Woman's Board. It was no small satisfaction to recall the scenes and incidents of our African life and to compare notes as to the outlook for the race for which we have labored.

Monday night I came down to Selma and for two days enjoyed needed rest at the pleasant and hospitable home of Rev. C. B. Curtis, who with his excellent and talented wife are doing much, both for the spiritual and temporal interests of the people. On Wednesday I addressed the students of the Selma University. This is the school formerly under the care of Rev. H. Woodsmall. Rev. Pierce is now president. There are already in attendance 165 students and the prospect of a considerable increase. I spoke on the evils of the lodge system, and received the thanks of the president and the professors.

At night I attended a pleasant prayer-meeting at the Congregational church and to day came to Montgomery, where I addressed the students of the new university, which has just opened under the care of Pres. Patison, formerly of Marion. In spite of all opposition the school opens favorably, occupying a large Baptist church, an old store, and an abandoned saloon. To-morrow morning (D. V.) I go to Mobile.

FROM THE FIELD.

A KIND OF REFORM CROP REPORT FROM BRO. BUTLER—THE CONVENTION APPOINTED FOR SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI.

Rev. John Stahl, writing from Augusta, Ill., says: "I am inclined to think favorably of the work done at the late meeting of the Illinois Christian Association. Money and agency are both doubtless indispensable in the prosecution of the work. In the arrangement of meetings, take us in at least locally, we will do something financially. You are doubtless aware that a part of us United Brethren church people are engaged in a trying warfare with the official and moneyed power of said church, who are actively engaged in trying to break down our constitutional law and testimony against secret societies. While this conflict continues moral and financial aid would seem to be our only weapons. When or how this trial will end is alone known to God."

Bro. Alexander Thompson, of Bartlett, Ill., also writes: "Shoulder to shoulder I stand by you for a kind and clear expression of the truth in regard to the lodge. Should you desire to come to Bartlett I will notify you of a suitable time and co-operate with you with all my strength."

A few words from Bro. S. Blanchard, of Oregon, Mo, will doubtless be read with interest. He says: "I would like much to be at the Princeton meeting, but cannot. I do hope, however, that you may be prospered greatly in all your labors against secret societies, for I regard them as a curse to America." This friend also informs us that his part of the country has never had any lectures, and refers to others in Holt county who would perhaps be interested in an agitation.

Marshall Jones, Esq., of Jamesport, Mo., writes: "I would like to attend your meeting at Princeton, Oct. 25. Would like to see Blanchard, Stoddard, and all who take an interest in something higher than cruel Masonry." This man speaks whereof he knows, for he has been through the Blue Lodge.

Rev. Ira B. Ryan of Leon, Iowa, indites: "I am glad to hear from you, also that the cause of the Redeemer is prospered against the Baal worshipers, but my health and circumstances are such that I can't be with you at Princeton. It would please me to be with you and to help the cause of God against the Christ-rejecting devil-worshipers. I have been doing some good in the cause at a meeting where there were five of Baal's members, and one of them a Royal Arch. I told them that it was a God-forsaking and Christ-rejecting institution, and that no man could be a Christian and reject Christ in his prayers. Three of the five acknowledged it." The above writer has been a lodge high priest, and, if we remember aright, organized the first U. B. church west of the Mississippi.

N. F. Murray of Elm Grove, vice-president of the Missouri State Horticultural Society, and formerly an active worker in our reform, replies: "It will be impossible for me to attend your meeting. While I still endorse most of the American party platform, there are two planks in it I could not endorse, to wit: extending the franchise to Indians and Chinamen, or any other class that does not at present enjoy that right, except women, who should be allowed to vote; the other classes, only when they can read and write. Our local option cause has just been defeated in our county [Holt] by ignorance and whisky. Hope you will have a good meeting, and that you may be blessed and prospered in the cause of reform."

Rev. J. K. Glassford, the veteran reformer and seceder, of Carthage, Mo., is very busy in his mammoth apple orchard just now, but heartily endorses a district meeting for south Missouri any time in November. He favors Carthage, but will try to attend elsewhere. He says: "I wish you and Bro. Stoddard to come here and hold a meeting anyhow. We can give you a good hearing for there are quite a number of Antis here. I wish you to come and spend a week. It needs a good revival here, and we can have it if you will come."

Elder Wm. M. Love of Osceola, Mo., writes: "I am glad the meetings are to be held, and shall pray and work for their success. From what I can learn in the short time since notice of intention to hold a meeting in southwest Missouri has been received, I believe we are all decided as to time and place: time Nov. 1 and 2, and place, Greenfield, Dade county. I do not know of a better place. It is central and accessible, and a stronghold of the lodge."

I received a letter from Bro. J. W. Thompson of Dadeville, fully approving time and place as above for holding a district meeting below the Missouri river. Other letters should be mentioned, but enough for this time.

Have been speaking through Gentry county; good audiences and good meetings; and now I am off for Princeton to complete local arrangements. Crops are short and times are close in north Missouri, yet we work and pray for a revival and a new impetus for the cause at the coming meeting. Yours in the cause,

M. N. Butler.

THE IOWA STATE CONVENTION.

A MEETING OF GREAT POWER AND INTEREST.

The State Convention opened in College Springs on Tuesday evening, October 18, with a large audience in attendance.

The presiding officers of the Iowa Christian Association not being present, Rev. Wm. Johnston, D. D., was chosen temporary chairman, and Rev. J. H.

Wilson, secretary. The third chapter of John was read, the praise of God sung, and Rev. Dr. Brown of Coin led in prayer. The large audience was gathered in the United Presbyterian church, of which Dr. Johnston is pastor.

After a few remarks by the chairman, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of Kansas was introduced and spoke on the "Relation of Secret Societies to the Church of Christ;" after which Rev. J. A. Cole of West Africa told how he was made a member of the Kofong lodge in Africa.

One of the pleasant incidents of the convention was the attendance of the delegates on the morning exercises of Amity College, where between one and two hundred students were gathered in the new and commodious chapel. They listened to a short talk from Bro. C. F. Hawley, who responded to President Kennedy's invitation in a brief but very happy speech on the great topic which the convention had gathered to discuss.

The morning session which immediately followed this visit was opened by devotional exercises; after which much of the routine business of the annual meeting was transacted. There was an attendance of about fifty in the morning and some 150 in the afternoon, and 400 or 500 at the evening sessions.

Among the items of this business was the election of Rev. W. C. Williamson, D. D., of Keokuk, as delegate, and Elder Samuel Smith of Beaconsfield, as alternate, to the Sabbath convention to be held at Elgin, Illinois, November 8th and 9th. It was voted that Rev. Dr. Johnston represent the State Association in the N. C. A. convention to be held in New Orleans during the winter, and that a fund be raised by the State Agent to defray the expenses of his journey. It was also voted, after some discussion, to send a delegation to the Prohibition conference to be held in Chicago December 1st; and Revs. C. F. Hawley, C. D. Trumbull, C. E. Harroun, Jr., and Dr. J. N. Norris and C. T. McCann were appointed to represent the Association in that capacity.

The following officers were chosen for the year: President, Rev. William Johnston, D. D., College Springs; Vice-president, Rev. George Fry, Wayne; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. C. D. Trumbull, Morning Sun; Recording Secretary, Rev. J. H. Wilson, College Springs; Treasurer, James Harvey, Pleasant Plain.

The resolutions were adopted as follows:

Whereas, The secret society system belts the world, and paganism, infidelity and selfishness are found intrenched therein; therefore,

Resolved: 1. That as the religion of Christ is opposed to all secret associations that unite the followers with the openly profane and impious, it is inconsistent for his followers to unite with such associations.

2. That the profane and horrid oaths and promises of such institutions are contrary to the teachings of God's Word, a profanation of God's ordinance of the oath, and destitute of all binding obligation. The taking of them is a sin—not the breaking of them.

3. That the religion of these societies, professing as they do to save Christian, Jew, Mohammedan and Parsee, without any regard to the atonement of Christ or the work of the Holy Spirit, are subversive of the Christian religion, which teaches that there is no other name under heaven or given among men whereby we must be saved, but by the name of Christ Jesus.

4 That they enslave the individual, destroy the unity of the family, are antagonistic to the church, and subversive of justice in the state; and the safety and pros-

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE W. C. T. U. AND GOOD TEMPLARISM.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Oct. 20, '87.

A prominent Good Templar at Colfax, Wis., says, "I shall always esteem the order, because it was in it I first met my wife." This accords with what I have heard so many remark about the Good Templars, that the one distinguishing feature of the order is the courting fecilities it affords young people. A minister at Eau Claire remarked that he had often heard it said that "Matches were made in heaven," but he was disposed to believe that many of them were made in Good Templar lodges.

How much grander has been the life of Frances E. Willard, in building up such an organization as the W. C. T. U., compared with that of John B. Finch, in devoting so much of his life to the cause of Good Templarism. The one is the offspring of prayer and Christian consecration; the other is the development of the selfish and dividing spirit of secretism. The one unifies the best Christian sentiment in defense of God, home and native land; the other creates jealous and harmful divisions in the ranks of reformers. The one has attracted to it the most devoted Christian workers of the age; the other has drawn to it the giddy, pleasure-loving, worldly people, whose chief object is recreation and social enjoyment. The one is exerting an ever-deepening and widening influence for good, and will continue until the last enemy to the home surrenders; the other is even now being deserted by the better class, and many of their lodges are dying out because of the sensuous, godless spirit that ruled them.

Elder Thos. Barland of the Congregational church, Eau Claire, says that John B. Finch, when he lectured there a few years ago, admitted that he could do very little for the cause of Good Templarism in and around Chicago because of the influence of the National Christian Association. It is cheering to have such testimony from Mr. Finch.

I find at Eau Claire and Chippewa Falls strong, wide-awake Young Men's Christian Associations, with comfortable parlors and reading rooms, well supplied with prohibition and other reform papers. In both their reading rooms I find the Cynosure on the rack, and kept in a conspicuous place. It relieves a lonely hour to drop in and read over its pages. Any one to whom God has given wealth could not invest it better for the cause than to put the Cynosure in all such reading rooms. It would be a good way of laying up treasure in heaven.

Good Templars universally say that if Mr. Finch had lived he would have been their candidate for President in 1892. But God has ordered it otherwise. He has done much for the prohibition cause. Few of our platform speakers were more accomplished, and have published more convincing arguments. But we believe his life work was greatly marred by his connection and leadership in a dark, scheming, wire-pulling organization, employing in a good cause the secret tactics of those whose deeds are evil.

NATIONAL REFORM WORK IN EASTERN NEW YORK.

Newburgh, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1887.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Last Friday I visited Goshen and Middletown in the interests of National Reform. The first has perhaps 4,000, the second 12,000 people. In the former I interviewed Rev. R. B. Clark, Presbyterian pastor. He is in the fullest accord with our work and stands ready to open his church for a meeting. In the latter I talked with Rev. Gordon, Presbyterian pastor. He was raised in the Free Church of Scotland, accepts our reformation principles in toto, and was perfectly willing to do all he could toward having a successful meeting in their city.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the American Reformed church of Newburgh, Rev. H. V. S. Myers, D. D., pastor. This is a large congregation. There was an audience of 500. Rev. Finley, the United Presbyterian pastor, and Rev. Thompson, the Covenanter pastor, and also Hon. Benj. B. Odwell, mayor of the city, were present. The people listened as though they regarded that as an entirely new message. We do not yet see the fruit of this work; but we are reminded that success in God's sight is something very different from what it is in man's sight. "What the world has regarded as the bitterest failure," writes Farrar, "has often been in the sight of heaven the most magnificent success. When the cap, painted with devils, was placed on the brows of John Huss, and he sank dying amid the embers of the flame, was that failure? When St. Francis Xavier died cold and lonely on the bleak and desolate shore of a heathen land, was that failure? When the frail worn body of the Apostle of the Gentiles was dragged by a hook from the arena and the white sand scattered over the crimson life blood of the victim whom the dense ampitheatre despised as some obscure and nameless Jew, was that failure? And when, after thirty obscure, toilsome, unrecorded years in the shop of the village carpenter, One came forth to be pre-eminently the 'Man of Sorrows,' to wander from city to city in homeless labors and to expire in lonely agony upon the shameful cross, was that failure? Nay, my brethren, it was the life; it was the death of Him who lived that we might follow in his steps. It was the life; it was the death of the Son of God."

Samuel Small, the evangelist, lectured in the Trinity M. E. church Monday night. The house was filled, the standing room being taken. He gave an account of his own career. The drink habit which he had acquired grew upon him. He heard Sam Jones on "Conscience Record and the Judgment." He was convicted and at last gave himself up to Christ. He felt that his sin had been public and his confession must be so too. He sent out posters announcing that he would preach that evening in the public square of Atlanta. Thousands came out to hear the story of his conversion. And ever since, two years and one month, he has been preaching Christ. He thought too many pulpits had padlocks on them on the liquor question. One thing he was sure of, they could never spike his gun. He would keep close around the end where the touch-hole is. At the close a collection was lifted for a colored school near Atlanta in which he is interested.

Cornwall-on-Hudson, three miles below here, is the home of E. P. Roe, the celebrated author, and Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D., editor of the Christian Union. This is a great summer resort for New Yorkers. But those who can live amid the glories of creation are not released from the responsibilities of life. The wise and holy St. Edmund of Canterbury said, "Work as though you would live forever; live as though you would die to-day."

BRO. GAULT AND NATIONAL REFORM.

Menomonie, Wis., Oct. 14, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—Bro. M. A. Gault lectured here in Menomonie in the court house (the 10th and 11th) Monday and Tuesday of this week. The attendance was rather small, but the lectures were truly excellent. It is a sad pity, yet a fact, that audiences, especially in cities and large towns, are apt to be in inverse ratio to the excellence or worthlessness of the subject and the speaker, unless some world-wide celebrity, like Beecher or Talmage, is announced; no matter how many papers condescend to give notice, or how many bulletins are displayed at places of public resort, or how much time, muscle, and shoe leather are invested in advertising the good things to be heard. The champions of reform work know all about this, and often their endurance and pluck are put to a severe strain; but they are not easily discouraged, for they know that "God and truth are marching on" to victory, not death; and every well-meant effort shall have its due reward.

Bro. Gault is not, as he told us, a circus. His vast and expensive perambulations won't make one of him, or any other reformer. If they did, then he might come to Menomonie and carry away more money than it takes to support all our pastors and run our churches. But Bro. Gault and the rest can afford to take their chances in the long run. Fadeless crowns, substantial honors, and everlasting habitations await them.

Monday evening Bro. Gault presented the points of parallel and of contrast between the government of the United States and the republic, or united states, of ancient Israel. He holds, with the Bible, that the "powers that be are ordained of God," and hence bound to act in accordance with his law, and must do so or fail; hence, also, the propriety and duty of a recognition of God in the Constitution.

Bro. Gault strongly advocates woman suffrage, and declares that the nation of Israel was thousands of years ahead of ours in this matter. Deborah judged Israel forty years. The women hurrahed for David, shouting, "Saul has slain his thousands but David his ten thousands." Woman suffrage prevails in the family, why not in the state? In settling the question which young men find it so difficult to ask, woman has a voice and throws the casting vote. And I would like to say in passing that it should be emphasized every day in the week that the women of our land, with the ballot in their hands, would "fix things" and sweep the country of beer and whisky, and secret societies into the bargain.

On Tuesday evening Bro. Gault advocated the Bible as the text book for the schools. There is no other. The government owes it to itself that the teachers have an authoritative book of instruction as to moral conduct, just as much as a dictionary for the pronunciation and definition of words. Teaching without moral instruction makes educated rascals, giants in iniquity, and enemies to the welfare of society and the state. The government must protect itself, therefore, by the moral instruction of the young in the public schools; for the Sunday-schools have scarcely one-third of the children, and they only about an hour once a week. Sectarian or denominational instruction is not asked for, but the moral precepts of God's law. The republics of Switzerland and Holland were cited as the most peaceful and prosperous on the globe. In their school systems the Bible has a prominent place.

Sabbath observance would naturally follow. No government or people can permanently prosper that disregards it. Our government and government officials are Sabbath breakers. Bro. Gault was very much exercised with regard to the course of President Cleveland last Sunday at Madison. He, together with Postmaster General Vilas, was expected to attend a certain church. Pews were reserved and decorated, and ushers were waiting; services were delayed a long time, but no President and no Postmaster General appeared. The fact was that when the bells were ringing for church Grover was still in bed, and at 11 o'clock he was taking breakfast. He should have risen early, Bro. Gault thinks, and studied the Sunday-school lesson for one hour before breakfast, and then after breakfast sallied forth to Sabbath-school and addressed the school. Then after dinner he should have visited and addressed the Y. M. C. A., and in the evening gone to some church. Instead of this he spent several hours of the afternoon dictating official correspondence; and doubtless a good many besides Bro. Gault and myself will not vote for Grover Cleveland; albeit I would, with Bro. G., sooner vote for him than for that Presidential aspirant who would not, when he had the chance, vote to banish the liquor curse from his own State. Such public functionaries set a bad example, and the people should demand, as God demands, a reform in this matter, not by enforcing, or trying to enforce Sabbath observance, but by creating a public sentiment that will induce a cheerful recognition of God's day, and the proper observance of the same.

Friends of reform, if you want to hear an able discussion of National Reform questions, invite Bro. Gault and give him a good congregation, and if possible, money enough to pay expenses.

THE OLD MASONIC ARGUMENT IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

El Monti, Cal.

We are glad to report some falling off in the subscription of our little paper Fire and Hammer on account of the sketch of John Brown's family and some other matter copied from the dear Cynosure, and this too from some so-called holiness (?) people. We welcome all such, with slander and over-ripe eggs, which have been our portion in this notorious place to which we have been called to assist Wm. Shepard in holding a holiness meeting.

This is a small town twelve miles out from Los Angeles on the Southern Pacific Railroad. It has some three or four hundred inhabitants and is ruled by a Freemason lodge and three whisky saloons. It is said that more murders have been committed here than in any other place in Southern California. The leading men of this moral cancer of course are Freemasons. Drunkenness and crime abounds. We have by the grace of God exposed and denounced the worship of Baal in the lodge and of Bacchus in the saloon. These institutions have sent upon us a horde of backsliders from the dead churches that belong to, support and uphold them. Crowds of drunken hoodlums make night hideous by their blood-curdling oaths. The Justice of the Peace (?), an accidental justice, was one night in with the drunken mob and threatened to have us arrested if we did not cease denouncing sin in the bold manner we were doing. Last night the preachers were treated to the Freemason and saloonites' very best argument which so fully represents in the strongest point their morals and principles, a free delivery of principles, to-wit, a shower of rotton eggs. We do not feel bad towards them in the least for considering the mental and moral imbecility to which sin has reduced them. They did the very sweetest and best thing they could. Two churches in the vicinity, the Christian and the Methodist, dominated over by Freemasons, holiness-fighting demagogues, have had quarrels among themselves, and the church buildings were soon in ashes.

The Baptist church of this place is too dead to have the sign of a prayer-meeting, but the Freemasons have their hall over the church, which is said to be one of the oldest Protestant church houses in California. This is truly symbolical, as the "square and compass" and letter G stands out in brazen gilt affrontery over the church of God. The curse of God rests in desolation upon the whole concern.

The Lord is with us in power and he has a few true saints here that are walking with him in white. Some have been seeking the Lord in our meetings. Old residents say they never saw the lodge-ridden, rum-sodden sink-hole of iniquity so shaken before. Bro. Shepherd, though a young man, is an unflinching Timothy that boldly stands for the faith of the Gospel and unsparingly deals out the truth. You will be glad to know that God is raising up many such "valiant-for-truth" soldiers on this coast. Pray for us, and God bless more and more the prayers of the blessed Cynosure and its band of martyr-spirit contributors. Amen. W. T. Ellis.

STANDING FOR CHRIST.

A CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH PRONOUNCES AGAINST THE LODGE.

New Iberia, La., Oct. 14, 1887.

Dear Editor:—A very interesting meeting was held in the Congregational church of this place last Tuesday night, at which the subject of secret societies was brought up by the pastor, Rev. Byron Gunner. He has often spoken against them from the pulpit and platform during his three years' ministry here, and has induced many of his members to withdraw from those they were in, and persuaded others, who expressed an intention to join them, not to do so.

But at the meeting referred to he spoke of introducing a resolution at some future meeting, that would make it a violation of the rules of the church for a church member to belong to a secret society; saying that he would prefer a membership of fifty that were pure and living according to the teachings of the Bible, than two hundred who were indulging in anything that was contrary to the principles of Christianity. He regarded secret societies as opposed to the teachings of Scripture, and invited those present to express their opinion on the subject. Many spoke, and quite intelligently.

One man said he had belonged to three: the Tabernacle, Odd-fellows, and Freemasons, and he found them all bad and left them; for he had determined to belong to nothing that would interfere with his religion, and he thought no one could belong to any of those societies and be a good Christian at the same time.

Another said, though they promised to put a person in a nice coffin when he died, and give one a respectable funeral, he would not belong to a secret society if they promised to bury him in a coffin of gold, for he believed it was wrong, and he meant to save his soul no matter what they did with his body. He said many had tried to persuade him lately to join the Knights of Labor, and his employer threatened to discharge him if he did not; but he said it was against his religion and he couldn't do it.

Another said many joined them just to hear the wonderful secret that they expected to hear, but he said "it wasn't nothin'" when it was told. Others who could not read, said as they understood the Bible as it was read and explained to them by their minister, they believed it wrong to belong to secret societies, and they would be glad to have it made a rule that no church member should belong to one.

PITH AND POINT.

THE YORK CENTENNIAL.

The United States have had four capitals: Philadelphia, York, New York, and Washington. York, Pa., was the capital for nine months in 1777 and '78. Here the "Articles of Confederation" were considered and adopted. York is one of the most famous old cities in the United States. It raised the first troops south of the Hudson River. Next week I will send you a report of the late centennial here written from the anti-secret standpoint. Let us push things this winter.—E. J. Chalfant, York, Pa.

WEST VIRGINIA GRANGES SINK UNDER DISCUSSION.

There were once a great many grange organizations in this region of country. Now there are only two or three in two counties. The grange at Sink's Grove, Monroe county, broke up with a discussion on the merits and demerits of the system. Some of the members became convinced that it is morally wrong and proposed to withdraw. Those who were strong in the faith of grangerism asked them to attend one more meeting and discuss the question. They did so, and that grange has never had a meeting since, though eighteen months have elapsed.—J. W. Claypool, Green Brier Co., W. Va.

THE PINE BLUFF SCHOOL.

I find I can do a great deal among the ministers in traveling around, and as I happen to know many of the ministers personally, I can urge on the fray, direct the battle and shout with the victors. I will try and be at Camden to the State Convention (Baptist) and do what I can. Our Presbytery gives me liberty to visit any points I choose, and solicit aid for our church and school. At present we are bending every effort to build a schoolhouse. Our prospects for success are good. We need a place where there can be free discussion.—Lewis Johnston, Pine Bluff, Ark.

A GOOD REASON FOR LEAVING.

I am well pleased with the sample of the Christian Cynosure. I have read it over and over again. I am glad that I have found such a paper. I withdrew from Chillicothe Lodge, No. 115, I. O. O. F., about two years ago, on account of their rottenness. They played cards in the hall on Lord's day. They had frequent dances of the very lowest character, together with low-down drunken rows.—Jos. Ball, Chillicothe, Iowa.

AN OLD MAN'S BLESSING.

I feel a deep interest in the good old Cynosure. It is my best paper. I think it is doing a noble work. It strikes at the root of infidelity showing up the anti Christ of the secret systems whose devotees bow and worship at an altar and worship an unknown god, without a Christ. It is truly a light that shines in a dark place. I would that it could be sent through all the land.—B. Williams, Warren, Ill.

Bible Lesson.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI.—Nov. 6.—Confessing Christ.—Matt. 10: 32-42.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 10: 32.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Duty of Confessing Christ. vs. 32-33. Confession in the Greek means speaking one language, hence a oneness, an agreement, as of two people in such perfect concord that they are literally like one person. Now it is plain that this is the kind of confession required of us by Christ. It is a kind that nobody can mistake. The testimony of the lips may be contradicted by the life, but the testimony of the life admits of no contradiction. We are not obliged to suppose that he will need to confess or deny us in so many words before the assembled powers of heaven. He himself, his whole divine character, will bear witness whether or not we are one with him.

2. The Trials to be Expected. vs. 34-39. In the lapse of eighteen centuries men have not learned that to preach Christ faithfully will always bring division—that kind of division which separates the wheat from the chaff. So they try to suppress God's truth about popular sins, thinking thus to have peace, but it is the peace of the stagnant pool spreading miasma and death wherever its foul exhalations rise. In all civilized lands the era of religious persecution is now over. No Christian fears that his dearest friend will turn informer and deliver him up to the civil magistrate. But the dividing line between those who accept Christ and those who reject him is just as closely drawn now as it was then. There can be no more soul union between the household of God and the children of Satan than in the days of Nero and Domitian. Truth never changes, and if Christ were on earth to day his preaching would be in substance the same to us that it was to the Jews. The Gospel cannot be taught or lived in its entirety without causing offence to some. Here the modern American pulpit makes its great mistake in failing to preach practical righteousness. The converts made in this way will not bear the stress and strain of temptation but will fall away. This has been abundantly proved in many a so-called "great revival" which left the standard of public honesty no higher than it found it, and the altars of secret false worships undisturbed and flourishing. This should not be. The influence of a true revival will extend to the counting room and the ballot box, and it will either convert Masons "from the lodge to Christ," as Finney puts it, or make them antagonistic. God's seal on a work of grace that it is indeed of him is in this very point—that it sifts and divides, showing who are on the Lord's side and who prefer the enemy's. Christians must expect cross-bearing. "Life" is expressed both in Greek and English by the same word, but it is used in different senses. There is the life of this world which dies with the body—a fleeting dream, a tale that is told; and there is the real life which we live unto God, which shall endure eternally, the life of self-sacrifice and self-denial. To lose self is to find God, and that is to find the very fountain of life. We need a stronger grasp on this truth. He that makes this lower life his all must miss forever the true life. In Robert Browning's poem, "Easter Day," a man dreams that the judgment has come, but the only judgment which befalls him is to stay forever on the earth, engrossed in his chosen pursuit, and he finds it the worst of imagined hells. The life of the senses is the mere husk which wraps the life of the spirit. Who would choose the useless husk and throw away the life-giving ear of corn within?

3. The Reward of Humble Service. vs. 40-42. He who receives the Son receives the Father; so he who receives the lowliest of Christ's messengers receives Christ himself. All cannot preach or go as missionaries, but he who denies himself to help support those who can, or who ministers to the wants of needy saints, though the service he is able to render be only a cup of cold water, shares in their divine reward. In the heavenly kingdom love holds the scales, and every deed is golden that is done for Christ.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"I came not to send peace, but a sword." There can be no peace between truth and error, light and darkness. The mission of Christ was aggressive, and so also is the Gospel aggressive. It has for its object the overthrow of the kingdom of darkness, and the rescuing of men from the power of sin and Satan. The truth, the Word of God, is indeed a sword, a spiritual weapon, sharper than any two-edged sword (Heb. 4: 12), and wherever proclaimed will separate and cause divisions, conquering and making friends or arousing the hostility of obstinate foes, a savor of life unto life to the one, and a savor of death unto death to the other (2 Cor. 2: 16). The ultimate object of the Gospel is peace, peace with God, and then peace among men. But in a world of sin, like ours, this can only be attained through conflict. Strifes and divisions are, therefore, necessary results, arising from the cruel and rebellious nature of evil.—G. W. Clark. A sword is the symbol of war. The first coming of Christ always brings war, whether to the individual soul or to the community. War is the stalk, peace the ripened grain. Rom. 7: 23 depicts the sword; 7: 25 and chap. 8, the peace.—Abbott.

"He that loveth father....more than me, is not worthy of me." The test of love, according to Christ, is not emotional experience, but obedience (John 14. 21); hence this declaration is substantially embodied in Matt. 6: 24. No man can serve two masters. For illustration of loving Christ more than father or mother, see Matt. 4: 21, 22. For parallel and illustrative teachings, John 21: 15; 2 Cor. 5: 14, 15; Phil. 3: 7-9. We are not asked to love parents and children and friends less, but to love Christ more. Indeed "supreme love to Christ never diminishes and eviscerates; it invariably exalts and intensifies, all other legitimate loves." The more we love parents, children, and friends, the better, if only that love is sanctified and purified by a love to Jesus which is supreme above all. This supreme love transfigures the other affections into that perfect love which the saints and angels feel in heaven.

"He that taketh not his cross." 1. We take up our cross when we mortify the deeds of the flesh for the sake of the Spirit (Col. 3: 5), or when we gladly suffer the loss of all things that we may be found in Christ (Phil. 3: 8-10), or share his sufferings and self-sacrifices that we may minister to his suffering ones (Matt. 25: 35, 36).—Abbott. 2. All self-denials for Jesus' sake are a taking up the cross. The cross is the symbol of death, and the spirit of taking up the cross implies the willingness to suffer for Jesus even unto death. But often many small self denials, a continual enduring of little crosses, are more difficult to bear than martyrdom, and are as real a sacrifice of the life to Jesus. 3. Each one must take up his own cross; the one the good Father lays upon him. 4 He must take it up voluntarily. 5 He must bear it after Christ, in Christ's spirit, in his way, in doing his work. 6. Every person needs a cross to make him better in this world and fit him for heaven. No true life is lived without some cross. 7. There is always a crown surmounting the cross.

Farm Notes.

WHEAT IN AMERICA.

Concerning the introduction of wheat into America, reliable information is obtainable. It may be difficult in the present day to realize the fact that wheat was at one time unknown in America; yet prior to the discovery of this continent by Columbus, there was no cereal in America approaching in nature to the wheat plant. It was not until 1530 that wheat found its way into Mexico, and then only by chance. A slave of Cortez found a few grains of wheat in a parcel of rice and showed them to his master, who ordered them to be planted. The result showed that wheat would thrive well on Mexican soil, and to-day one of the finest wheat valleys in the world is near the Mexican capital. From Mexico the cereal found its way to Peru. Marie D'Escobar, wife of Don Diego de Chauves, carried a few grains to Lima, which were planted, the entire product being used for seed for several successive crops. At Quito, Ecuador, a monk of the order of St. Francis, named Fra Jodosi Bixi, introduced a new cereal; and it is said that the jar which contained the seed is still preserved by the monks of Quito. Wheat was introduced into the present limits of the United States contemporaneously with the settlement of the country by the English and other European settlers.—Milling World.

MANURING CANNOT BE OVERDONE.

The venerable Peter Henderson thinks manuring cannot be overdone, and says: It is a great blunder to attempt to grow vegetable crops without the use of manures of the various kinds. I never yet saw soils of any kind that had borne a crop of vegetables that would produce as good a crop the next season without the use of manure, no matter how rich the soil may be thought to be. An illustration of this came under my observation last season. One of my neighbors, a market gardener of twenty years' experience, and whose grounds have always been a perfect model of productiveness, had it in prospect to run a sixty foot street through his grounds. Thinking his land sufficiently rich to carry through a crop of cabbages without manure, he thought it useless to waste money by using guano on that portion on which the street was to be, but on each side he sowed guano at the rate of 12,000 pounds to the acre, and planted the whole with early cabbages. The effect was the most marked I ever saw. That portion on which the guano had been used sold off readily at $12 per hundred, or about $1,400 per acre, both price and crop being more than the average; but the portion from which the guano had been withheld hardly averaged $3 per hundred. The street occupied fully an acre of ground, so that my friend actually lost over $1,050 in crop by withholding $60 for manure. Another neighbor, with a lease only one year to run, unwisely concluded it would be foolish to waste manure on his last crop, and so planted and sowed all without. The result was, as his experience should have taught him, a crop of inferior quality in every article grown and loss on his eight acres of probably $2,000 for that season.—National Stockman.

Orchards should be top-dressed with manure every autumn, or at least biennially. Let the top-dressing cover the whole surface, avoiding the common mistake of spreading the manure a few feet only on each side of the tree. This treatment will not only give the trees more vigor, but will add to their fruitfulness; and not only add to their fruitfulness, but produce larger, fairer and better fruit.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The Christian Cynosure.

Editors.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1887.

A NEW ANTI-MASONIC LEAGUE.

"Manual of the Anti-masonic League. Marshall, Ill., Church-Progress Printing House. 1887."

The above is the imprint on the title page of a pamphlet of 35 pages, just received. It strikes us as a sign of the times of no ordinary magnitude. We have but just glanced at it. We shall read it with care and then the readers of the Cynosure shall have our mature thoughts and advice concerning it, and our duty in relation to this Roman Catholic Anti-masonic League.

This pamphlet informs us that a Jesuit priest, Father Regnault, was about to start for Rome, and the author of "The Manual of the Anti-masonic League" requested him to hand a copy to the Pope and get his judgment on it. Father Regnault did so, and the Pope read it and wrote his warmest approbation and most earnest advice in favor of the league, urging the circulation of the Manual among the masses, taking pledges of all who can be brought to sign. The pledges bind the signers never to vote for a Freemason, and never to take a newspaper edited by one!"

It is intended to form these leagues not only in our country but in all others wherever there are Roman Catholics. Mr. Ezra A. Cook, our former publisher of the Cynosure, has now under way and will soon issue a book on "The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," which rite now owns the Masonic temples and rules the Masonry of the world. This book will show that this ruling rite of the Masonic world originated in the Jesuit College of Clermont, Paris, but was, by the addition of eight degrees, modified and increased to thirty-three degrees, the present number, by Morin, Mitchell and Dalcho, in Charleston, South Carolina. Count de Grasse, who aided Washington in the taking of Cornwallis, was initiated and took this Americanized degree back to Europe where it now prevails. The Supreme Council was formed in Charleston in 1801. There is abundant historic proof that Ramsay and the Jesuits originated this rite and used it in their endeavor to replace the Stuarts and popery on the British throne. And now, behold, a Jesuit is organizing an "Anti-masonic League" and the Pope (Leo XIII.) endorses and sanctions it!

The first impression which this news will make on our readers is that which the wooden horse made on the Trojans: "Timeo Danaos et donaque ferentes." "I fear the Greeks even bringing gifts." But we must not be of those "who will not do good even if the devil bids" us do it. Dr. Lyman Beecher used to say to us, "The Roman Catholics hold to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. They furnished the Bible by which Luther, under God, produced the Reformation; and God may yet bring a blessing to the world out of that apostate communion."

This Roman Catholic Anti-masonic pamphlet not only opposes lodges but "godless schools." And this may be the cat hid under this good meal. But, taking the terms literally, we are as much opposed to godless schools as they are. Then a considerable minority of the American Board at Springfield, Mass., voted to send missionaries to the heathen who hold to a qualified purgatory for some heathen after death, and the Andover Seminary is, virtually, in favor of founding churches on their hypothesis that there may be such a post-mortem probation or purgatory, and if there is there should be prayers for the dead; and Andover, the old mother Protestant seminary, is now a half-way house to popery and prayers for the dead.

We hope this Roman Catholic "Anti-masonic League" pamphlet will be circulated extensively, and read by the opponents of the lodge. And when this great and significant movement shall have been studied and sifted by our anti-secret presses, and such men as the late Dr. Kerr of Pittsburgh, of whom we have many still living, we are in favor of hailing this movement as we hailed the good Father Matthew, the apostle of temperance who moved thousands on thousands against the saloon.

—Two State meetings have recommended to anti-secrecy friends the holding of meetings after the pattern of concerts of prayer for missions and against slavery in the struggle with that sin. Some are now starting out on this suggestion, and we trust it will become general. We need help from above in this contest with principalities and powers, and it is ready wherever two or three shall agree in asking for it in faith.

PREACHING ON BOSTON COMMON.

A note from Charles street jail, Roston, states that an additional $100 is needed to properly set the case of Bro. William F Davis, the evangelist, before the people of Massachusetts and arouse them to the fact that their most precious rights under their own constitution and of the United States are set aside by a city council. Our Boston letter describes an inspiring scene in Music Hall when Dr. Fulton's audience gave their protest against the outrage.

The trial for which Mr. Davis has waited all summer, being vexatiously postponed from time to time, at last took place September 26th before Judge Staples of the Superior Criminal Court. The Judge, while commending Bro. Davis for his integrity and as a man entitled to general respect, was yet constrained to interpret the law as already decided in the Supreme Court of the State maintaining the validity of the city ordinance. The argument in brief is that the Council must in some manner control the Common, else it will have no power to prevent the speeches of anarchists, socialists, and other disturbers of the peace. The mayor is therefore given authority to allow or forbid speaking of whatever nature. The fallacy of this law is that it makes it possible to forbid all speaking, whereas it is intended to restrain only a part; and advantage is taken of this very evident defect. A petition for the privilege of preaching on the Common signed by eight reputable citizens was ignored a while since by the Boston officials.

Bro. Davis argues thus with great force and clearness:

"The second article of the Bill of Rights of Massachusetts says:

'It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society, publicly and at stated seasons, to worship the Supreme Being, the great Creator and Preserver of the universe. And no subject shall be hurt, molested or restrained, in his person, liberty, or estate, for worshiping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; or for his religious profession or sentiments, provided he doth not disturb the public peace, or obstruct others in their religious worship.'

"Now the right so granted is a general right and it is limited only by two considerations, the public peace and the same right of others to freedom of religious worship. Section 2, Chapter 42, Revised Ordinances of the City of Boston, 1885, under which these complaints are brought, is a general prohibition of the public and free exercise of religious worship on Boston Common, subject to only one limitation, the will of the mayor, and that is ecclesiastical dictatorship, a form of religious administration which is fundamentally antagonistic to the whole spirit and letter of our institutions touching religion. The justification which is offered for this ordinance is the city charter, but the city charter only authorizes the city council to pass such ordinances or by-laws as are not repugnant to the laws of the Commonwealth.

"The theory of liberty, as it has been laid down by our jurists, is that it means liberty from prior restraint, that is from restraint previous to action. For instance, this theory of liberty obliges the city government to allow all kinds of people to go upon Boston Common. If a man goes there and abuses that liberty by committing an assault or picking pockets, or by disturbing the peace by outrageous behavior, then the law steps in and arrests him under the particular statute provided for dealing with that particular offence; but under our theory of the functions of the government, I hold that the city council cannot pass a law or ordinance for the purpose of prohibiting these criminal acts which shall forbid the liberty to go upon the Common excepting in such cases where the man who goes gets a special permit from the mayor. The city council has attempted to restrict the liberty of the tongue unconstitutionally, and in a manner different from that which has been attempted with reference to any other member of the body—a restraint which is not even applied to the carrying of deadly weapons."

THE ELGIN SABBATH CONVENTION.

The pastors of the Elgin churches say that the Christian people of that city will receive as guests those who attend the Sabbath Convention in the First Baptist church of that city, Nov. 8th and 9th.

Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D., Rev. C. E. Mandeville, D. D., Prof. S. I. Curtis, D. D., Rev. Henry Wilson, and other speakers are expected. The four Theological Seminaries in and near Chicago have been especially invited, and it is hoped that others beside the Chicago Seminary, which has delegated Prof. Curtis, will be represented.

Four principal topics will be presented: The Sabbath business enterprises, the Sabbath travel o railway lines, Sabbath pleasuring, and the Sabbath newspaper. The prepared addresses will be brief, affording time for all those who wish to present their views, to do so.

Every minister, every church, every seminary, every college, every Christian who desires to preserve the Sabbath should be present, or represented at this meeting if possible.

The Sabbath Argument.—A few friendly readers of the Cynosure have doubted the propriety of publishing articles on the change of the Sabbath, but as we mentioned some weeks ago it seemed just to many who have heartily sustained the reform that their reasons for the seventh-day be fairly given. It was also noticed that the first-day argument would follow, and a sermon by Rev. J. M. Foster of Cincinnati on Sabbath observance would close. The final argument for the change of day by Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of Kansas was mailed during the first days of September and lost probably in the Chicago office. Two other letters from him immediately following were also lost here by some wretched official carelessness, but were recovered. Bro. Milligan has kindly reproduced the lost article and it appears in this number. Whatever may be the opinions of our readers they will confess it one of the ablest arguments ever written for the first-day Sabbath. While the long delay must be regretted, yet the publication of these articles seasonably for the Elgin Sabbath convention will give them additional interest and value. It has long been one of our strong reasons for protest against the secret lodges that they, while professing morality, are yet among the most potent agencies for breaking down the authority and violating the sanctity of the holy day. The subject is therefore a legitimate part of the lodge discussion.

—The Knights of Labor Convention at Minneapolis broke up last week, but we are under the necessity of postponing a report of it till next number.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from LaOtto Saturday morning and hastened to Bro. Butler's aid in Missouri Monday evening. He was greatly cheered with the enthusiasm of the Wesleyan General Conference for reform.

—The success of the glorious Iowa meeting is largely due to the wise prevision of Rev. Dr. William Johnson, whose counsel prevailed largely in selecting the speakers and placing them where their batteries would do the most execution. Dr. Wishart of Illinois and Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of Kansas were among the effective speakers, and it is a unanimous opinion that some means should be adopted to give them more frequent opportunities of exercising their gifts for the benefit of the reform.

—Pres. J. Blanchard left Chicago Saturday morning for the annual meeting of the American Missionary Association this week at Portland, Maine. He stopped over the Sabbath at Detroit with brethren Clark and Foote. He hopes to encourage the Association in their efforts to rid their churches and schools in the South of the lodge curse, so that they may all follow the excellent example of Bro. Gunner of New Iberia, Louisiana, reported on the 6th page of this paper. He speaks also at the New Hampshire Convention.

—A note from Bro. Butler in Missouri regrets that the editor of the Cynosure could not attend the meetings in that State where he would be welcomed by many friends. But meetings in New England seem to have a prior claim. Bro. Butler finds the local option fight a well-contested one in old Gentry county. He addressed one night a crowd that overflowed the house and filled the windows, a few miles east of Albany. He spoke near Mr. Needels' place last week Monday. After a few days' more work in Gentry he goes to Hamilton and Mercer counties. In this part of the State he is at home, and speaker and hearers are full of enthusiasm.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. Henry Avery of the Congregational church of College Springs, Iowa, has been gone three months in Colorado for his health, and his people fear he will not return to them. He has for some time been partially disabled.

—Rev. T. B. Arnold, publisher of the Free Methodist in this city, was lately wedded to Miss Tressa Richardson of Emporia, Kans. Our warmest congratulations to Bro. Arnold, who has, we trust, received a wife from the Lord.

—Miss Anna Milligan, daughter of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, the able defender of the Lord's day in the present Cynosure, has accepted a professor's chair in Campbell University, at Holton, Kansas. She is now taking a course in Cornell University, N. Y.

—Not only was Elder Barlow disappointed in not being able to attend the Iowa State convention, but Rev. C. D. Trumbull of Morning Sun, who has perhaps done more than any other single man for the success of the State Association in late years. Bro. Trumbull was taken sick the night before he was to start for College Springs.

—Bro. J. Augustus Cole made a short call at the Cynosure office on his way to the General Conference at LaOtto, Indiana. In the vicinity of College Springs in southwestern Iowa he addressed a number of meetings and raised $300 for his African Mission. He also secured another volunteer for his missionary band, Rev. Geo. H. Hemingway of College Springs, so the company now numbers eight. Bro. Cole leaves for England early in December.

—Elder J. L. Barlow returning from a visit to friends in Kansas, came by Chicago to take part in the ordination of his successor, Rev. Mr. Waterman, at Wheaton on Thursday of this week. His recent loss in the death of his wife, together with her long sickness, has had its effect on Bro. Barlow from which he will not soon recover. He is hopeful in regard to his work in Grundy Center, Iowa, though the difficulties are not few or small. He greatly regretted his inability to be at the State meeting at College Springs.

—Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes, our correspondent in Greece, with his family, left home in Andros, Greece, in September, for a visit to this country. Letters from Terragona and Valencia, Spain, state that they are on board the steamer Mississippi bound for Montreal, which port they do not hope to reach before November 1st, as their vessel is picking up a large cargo in Spanish ports. Their many friends will await their arrival with eager anticipation. Mrs. Zaraphonithes's immediate relatives live in Peoria county, Illinois.

NOTICES.

THE SOUTH-WEST MISSOURI MEETING.

From Bro. Butler's field report elsewhere it will be seen that the friends in Southwest Missouri select Greenfield, the county seat of Dade county, as the place, and Nov. 1 and 2 as the time for their convention against the lodge. Bro. Butler has written as follows to a number of friends in that section: "There will be a district meeting of the American cause at Greenfield, Dade Co., Mo., beginning on the evening of Nov. 1 next and continuing through the following day and evening. Able speakers are expected. Try and attend and urge others to. The harvest is ripe. The people are ready for the light. The cause is moving on. Other States are up and doing and old Missouri must be in the forefront May God give us faith and courage for the right."

THE OHIO CONVENTION.

TIME, PLACE, AND GENERAL PROGRAMME.

Columbus, O., Oct. 20, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—I am glad to report definitely the time of our State Convention, and trust every possible energy of the friends interested will be given to make it a success. The time is November 16th and 17th; the place, New Concord, Muskingum county. The programme is not fully arranged, but will be somewhat as follows:

Convention to open at 9 A. M. Wednesday, with Devotional Exercises; 10 A. M., Address of Welcome by one of the pastors (Rev. J. M. Faris is always ready on that line); Response by President Smith; Reading of Minutes and Appointment of Committees; 2 P. M., Short Addresses by Revs. W. J. Coleman, Wm. Dillon, and others; also Reports of Committees; 7 P. M., Address by the Secretary and General Agent J. P. Stoddard.

Thursday, 9 A. M., Devotional; 10 A. M., Short Address by President C. A. Blanchard, and Question Box; 2 P. M., A Discussion, opened with a paper by the State Agent, subject, Wherein Lies the Power of the Secret Lodge and How may it be Overcome? The closing address will be given by President Charles A. Blanchard. Entertainment as usual will be provided those coming from a distance. It is especially desired that all churches in sympathy appoint at once as large a delegation as they may think best to represent them at this convention.

I am requested by the State officers to send this call, as they are too busy to attend to details just now. I shall try as far as possible to visit friends in Muskingum county previous to the convention. Do not wait, friends, but commence to make your arrangements at once, and come praying that the Lord may give us a glorious blessing, that we may go forth stronger to work for him in the future.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

William Jones, the Secretary of the English Peace Society, was granted, on September 23rd, an interview with President Cleveland with the object of conveying to the United States Government the strong desire felt by the friends of peace in general, on both sides of the Atlantic, for the negotiation of an arbitration treaty between Great Britain and the United States, definitely stipulating that any and every dispute which may henceforth arise between the two nations shall be submitted to the decision of an impartial body of arbitrators, or to some permanent court of international reference, to be constituted for the purpose.

Mr. Jones presented letters of introduction and of support of the object in view by the Hon. John Bright, John Greenleaf Whittier, and George W. Childs, proprietor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and ventured to express his personal hope that the President would show himself no less favorable to the principle of arbitration as a substitute for war, at least in many cases if not in all, than some of his distinguished predecessors in office, including Presidents Grant, Hayes, and Garfield, each of whom had taken a most satisfactory position in relation to this great question.

The President, in reply, stated that the subject thus brought before him was one with which he might confess himself to have been but little acquainted hitherto; and further, it was a matter respecting which it behooved him to speak cautiously, He was, however, glad to be furnished with the information upon it which Mr. Jones had placed in his hands. But he might acknowledge that he had been impressed by the statement, made by General Sheridan at the Centennial Banquet of the previous week, that the tendency of modern warfare is to become less and less a test of skill, strategy, and courage, and more and more a system of sheer organized murder. The President said that he regarded this tendency and the collateral growth of public opinion in favor of arbitration as two kindred movements converging towards one end—namely, the abolition of war among civilized people, and the establishment of some form of a High Court of International Reference for Arbitration as a substitute for the decision of the sword. He added that as to himself personally he was most averse to war, in common with every right-minded man.

Active preparations are already in progress for the long session of Congress, which will meet on the first Monday of December. Many Congressmen from the neighboring States can be almost daily seen on the thoroughfares of the Federal City, seeking out their winter quarters, and looking after the immediate wants of their constituents. It is the general opinion of well-posted politicians that the Fiftieth Congress will be a busy and stormy body, as much important legislation will be considered, especially in regard to the surplus, the tariff, and pensions (seven of the latter bills already being in course of incubation), to say nothing of projected legislation on the labor and railroad questions. And then, each of the great parties believes that it is possible to practically decide the next Presidential election by its course next winter. Another indication of the near advent of Congress is the stir and bustle in the various Federal Departments incident to the preparation of the annual reports—some of which have already been submitted to the Secretaries.

The report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is of special interest on account of the wide-spread and far-reaching frauds that have been uncovered in the acquisition of the public lands by soulless syndicates and reckless adventurers. It is shown that within the past two and a half years more than thirty-one million acres of land have been reclaimed by the Government; that about five thousand land entries were secured by means of perjury, and that many other disreputable and irregular methods were employed by these swindlers to defraud the United States.

Civil Service Commissioner Oberly's aggressive and progressive sentiments, lately promulgated, find no favor with partisan spoilsmen, but meet with the cordial endorsement of all who would purify the public service of political influence and manipulation. It is hoped that the conservative views of Mr. Oberly will be adopted as the pronounced policy of the Civil Service Commission, for such a course would undoubtedly be a substantial gain for the cause of reform that would meet popular approval.

Mr. Graves, Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, is having trouble with the Knights of Labor order. He claims that better work can be done with other machines than with hand presses, in the printing of Treasury drafts, bonds, stamps, and silver certificates. The Knights say they will bring the controversy to the attention of Congress—having already framed a bill embodying their grievance.

An interesting case that will be presented before the Supreme Court this week is the appeal of the Chicago Anarchists. It will be argued before Justice Harlan by Gen. B. F. Butler, Gen. Roger A. Pryor, and Hon. Randolph Tucker. One of our Washington judges has a decidedly original way of disposing of a "boycott," our country's troublesome importation from the Emerald Isle. He decides it to be a common conspiracy,—"only that and nothing more."

The movement to have the next National Democratic Convention meet in Washington has materialized into a call for a public meeting to consider the project. As a means to the desired end it is the purpose of the Washingtonians to give the Democratic Committee a grand entertainment at its session here next winter, in the effort to capture that organization.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

EVANGELIST WM. F. DAVIS IN JAIL.

Stopping almost in the middle of his discourse on Romanism last Sunday afternoon in Music Hall, which was thronged mostly by Protestants, with here and there a sprinkling of the opposite element, Rev. Dr. Justin D. Fulton said: "I read in last night's paper that Rev. Mr. Davis had been imprisoned for preaching the Gospel on the Common (a voice: "By Catholics!"). As many present that desire a petition sent to the mayor, Catholic as he is, for his release, please raise their hands."

Nearly four thousand hands ascended heavenward.

This act was a decided expression of the sentiments of the Protestant element of Boston concerning the arrest and subsequent imprisonment of the plucky Mr. Davis. There are some, however, who are inclined to consider Mr. Davis's attitude as Simon-pure stubbornness rather than pluck. Those who have interested themselves enough in the matter to investigate, or rather, read the statements of both sides, are confident that Mr. Davis stands for principle; that he believes his case a precedent in the constitutional prerogative of preaching the Gospel untrammeled.

No doubt efforts will be made by the friends of justice, free speech, etc., for the release of the incarcerated preacher. Free tracts on what they term the outrage on the rights of honest citizens are being circulated. One which lies before me contains the following extract from the Quill of Philadelphia:

"The 'Hub' will be better known hereafter as the 'Plug,' since the mayor and some of the members of the council of that great city (Boston) graced with their presence the presentation of that $10 000 belt to John L. Sullivan, the lawless, plug-ugly prize-fighter, wife beater, drunkard, and rum seller. These are the gentlemen who prohibit the reading of the Bible on the Boston Common on Sunday, for fear of disturbing the peace; sent to jail the man who attempted to do it; yet standing by and encouraging a fugitive from justice, one of the worst criminals in America, whose whole life and business are unlawful, cruel and brutish. These are the politicians who govern the refined, cultured, fastidious, bean eating Bostonians."

There will also shortly appear in print, for distribution, a pamphlet reviewing the charge made by the Judge of the Superior Criminal Court, showing it to be insufficient to demonstrate the validity of the ordinance prohibiting free preaching.

On the most conspicuous bill boards throughout the city a flaming bill is posted, bearing the following indignant composition:

FREEMEN! CHRISTIANS! AWAKE!

It is high time to awake! In this heathen city—this Christ-hating, misgoverned city—a man of God, an ordained minister of Christ,

WM F DAVIS,

IS IN JAIL FOR PREACHING THE GOSPEL ON BOSTON COMMON,

and may be kept there a year, with the probability of returning thither when liberated, unless you, honorable men and voters, replace the present officials with good men, and REPEAL THE INIQUITOUS ORDINANCE that is but a trap to make criminals of good citizens; instead of a lawful, wholesome rule of government. Please communicate with the undersigned for concerted action to restrain, if possible to convert, the bad governors of this city, and to do away with the present intolerable ordinance and despotism. A pamphlet, free, treating on the above subject, will be given to applicants.

W. Kellaway, 30 Exchange St.

Although it is claimed that the presiding judge in Mr. Davis's case was exceeding lenient, yet true to the requirements of his office, there are expressions of dissatisfaction against his decision. However, let us hope; let us remember that "all things work together for the good of them that love God." D. P. Mathews.

The Home.

OCTOBER.

The months have had wings, not feet, this year,
The beautiful summer has sped away,
And brown October has hurried here;
Oh, things were fair if they would but stay,
And if life were long
It were full of song!

Yet, 'tis far to look back to the primrose spring,
To the nightingale's lay and the cuckoo's call:
The promise is now a forgotten thing,
For the gifts foretold are bestowed on us all,
And the blossoms of May
Are the fruit of to-day.

We have had our summer of light and song,
And our fields and orchards filled with food;
If the days are shortened they have been long;
And God has covered the land with good.
O, give him praise
For the summer days!

And the beautiful things are not wholly gone!
Some roses there are on the generous trees,
The sun in its splendor still shines on,
Though some flowers are kissed to death by the breeze,
And the leaves in the town
Are faded and brown.

My life is like the October time!
The prodigal season is past and gone,
And over forever the wealth and prime
Of the long, glad day when high deeds were done,
And quiet and rest
Are for me the best.

And I cannot afford to lose an hour
Of the shorter day that is left to me,
Nor carelessly fritter away the power
Of head or of hand, since there soon shall be
No moments here
Of my life's short year.

But I thank my God for that which has been,
Of strength and sunshine, of flower and song;
And I will not shrink from the wintry scene,
Though the days are short and the nights are long,
Let the shadows fall,
For this life is not all!

A PLEA FOR THE HARP.

Gently the youth drew the harp of his fathers from its resting-place. The dust of years lay heavily upon it.

Though it had slept mutely and ingloriously in obscurity, its very existence almost forgotten, he strove to waken it to life again.

He touched its strings with a careless hand, and from its rising cloud of dust there issued a quaint melody that charmed his soul and filled it with dreams of rambles beside the rivers of Elysium.

Again he swept his hand across its strings, and the past lost the harshness that embittered its memories; the present was radiant with joy, and before him beamed the future, teeming with love and happiness.

He heard the strains that floated heavenward from David's harp when it soothed the troubled breast of Saul, and when it sounded praises to his God in the perfection of love and adoration. And the youth saw that its symphony found entrance into the Divine heart and called down blessings from the Giver of every good and perfect gift upon the worshiper.

He heard the harps of the harpers in the holy Temple service, as in unison they praised the Almighty and gave utterance to the worship of a great and favored nation—the "peculiar people" of God—in the house that David and Solomon had reared for the glory of the Lord.

He saw also, in his dreams, the one hundred and forty-four thousand saints sealed of God gathered about the Lamb on Mount Zion, and heard voices from heaven as of many waters, and the harpers harping with their harps as they sang the New Song before the throne—that grandest of melodies, which none but the redeemed may sing.

Again, he heard the harps of the harpers on the great sea of glass, as they raised the song of Moses and the Lamb to heaven's highest arches—the song of the redeemed of all ages, tribes, and tongues—and ascribed honor, and power and glory to the Bridegroom and to Him who liveth and reigneth forever.

Then he felt in his soul that the harp, above all other instruments of man's invention, has been most honored; blessed in the sacred devotions of the Hebrews and the wild minstrelsy of the Gaelic nations of the North; while throughout the globe its music, never-dying, pervades all realms of melody, carrying joy and consolation to many a weary heart, and inspiring the purest of thoughts and aspirations.

HONORABLE LABOR.

There are some people who seem to regard labor as dishonorable and beneath their proper dignity. They are mistaken in this estimate, for God has ordered that men should labor. A Puritan minister, named Carter, coming upon a Christian brother who was busily employed in his work as a tanner, clad in the begrimed and filthy garments appropriate to his calling, gave him with his salutation a friendly slap upon the shoulder. The tanner looked back and said to the minister,

"Oh, sir, I am ashamed that you should find me employed in this way."

"My friend," said the minister, "may the Saviour, when he comes, find me doing just so."

"What," said the tanner, "doing such dirty work?"

"Yes;" said the minister, "faithfully performing the duties of my calling."

Dirty work sometimes makes clean money, and no man has a right to be ashamed of faithfully following an honest calling.

Years ago a student from one of the Southern States came to attend the Theological Seminary at Andover. When winter set in he purchased a cord of wood for his stove. But how to prepare it for his fire was the difficulty. He could find no extra hand to chop it for him. There were no circular saws and steam wood-splitting works going then. In his perplexity he went to Professor Stuart to advise him. The learned professor, who knew how to use his hands as well as his head, made short work of the matter.

"Young man," said he, "I am in want of a job myself; and, if you have no objections, I will saw the wood for you, and split it up."

The student concluded that he would not trouble Professor Stuart to saw the wood for him, but preferred to do it himself.

A story is told of a young gentleman who purchased some provisions in a Boston market, and when looking around for some one to carry home his purchase, at last found a quiet man who was willing to do it, and he was so pleased with his conversation and appearance, that thinking he might be glad to employ him again, he asked him his name. After some questioning he found out that the man who had served him so satisfactorily was "Billy Gray," the merchant prince of Boston, the sails of whose ships whitened every sea, and who, perhaps, could have bought out a hundred such men as the one whom he had consented to serve.

Are there other examples? Yes, "for the Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Let him be our pattern and example.—Common People.

BUILDING MEETING HOUSES.

A preacher in a New England city started out one day with a subscription paper, full of zeal, to secure money to build a new meeting house. Presently he met a wise old minister, to whom he confided his plans, telling him of the encouragement he had, and how sure he was that the work could be done. The aged man listened attentively, and then a conversation occurred somewhat as follows:

"Do you like your church?"

"Certainly I do."

"Of course I do."

"Then you had better go home and put up that paper. I have known many instances where ministers have built meeting houses, and when they were done they had to leave them. The people did not want to hear them preach any longer.

The man pondered on the counsel given, went home and hid his subscription paper, and for many years preached on at the old church as before.

The lesson is well worth considering by those who are full of enterprise and zeal, and anxious to push and drive and accomplish great things. Frequently when doing this they lose spiritual life, and while building meeting houses, fail to build up the people in their most holy faith, and so when people have built a new meeting house they then want a new minister.

There are times, it is true, when meeting houses need to built or repaired, but frequently there is not half as much need of a new meeting house, as there is of a new church inside of the old one; and the best builder is he who, on the One Foundation, builds with living stones the temple of the Lord. And it will not be easy to discover a poorer way for a minister to invest his own money, if he has any, than in a meeting house, where he can be monarch of all he surveys, and manage matters to suit himself. Did any one ever know a church or a minister to prosper under such circumstances? Almost any snail can provide himself with a shell if he is not too particular about it; though William Taylor once told us a story of a snail who got sick of his old shell and had a new one made of alabaster, and froze to death the first night after he got into it!

No doubt there are many men who have great talent in the way of meeting-house building and money raising, but it may be there are others who could in due time accomplish the same work quite as effectively, but who have never been called of God to the ministry of his Word. It was a good thing to serve tables and care for widows in apostolic times, but it was not needful that the men whom the Lord had endowed with the Holy Ghost that they might preach the Gospel, should leave the labor which they were especially charged to perform, and attend to work which other people were both able and willing to do. Sometimes the word of the Lord comes to a prophet, saying, "Arise and build." But in many instances the inward desolations are greater than the external, and the servant of Christ will best fulfill his ministry by preaching the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, and keeping steadily to his work, and leaving other duties in the hands of those whom God may call to perform them. "To every man his work."—Christian.

"HE CANNOT SIN."

1 John 3:9.

Does this text teach that it is impossible for a true Christian to commit sin? That were to contradict observation, experience and Scripture. A misunderstanding of the word "cannot" lies at the basis of such an interpretation. When Nehemiah was engaged in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem his enemies sought to allure him to a conference. He replied, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down," Neh. 6:3; which language, of course, means that he was not physically but morally unable to do so. In 1 Cor. 10:21 we read, "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils." So far as physical ability was concerned these persons could do both. The idea intended to be expressed is obviously that Christian consistency placed them under moral constraint not to do so. In like manner if I, a total abstainer, were asked to take wine with a friend, I might reply, "I cannot do so." He and every one would understand me as meaning, "My principles do not allow me to do so, and therefore I will not."

I submit that it is in this sense that the word "cannot" is used in the passage under consideration.

So explaining it, whilst it does not teach that it is impossible for a Christian to sin, it does teach that he is under the strongest possible obligation to avoid sin, and that so long as acting in character, he avails himself of the strength which is in Christ Jesus, he will not sin.—Holiness Advocate.

THE PLAN THEY TRIED.

A TRUE STORY.

Two such woe-begone, draggled little figures! They came back to the house, one behind the other, as slowly as if they were going to their great-grandmother's funeral, and indeed they looked like chief mourners.

The nurse had caught them playing in the brook, an amusement strictly forbidden at this time of the year, and a whipping was inevitable.

The whippings didn't come very often in this family, but for direct disobedience they were as sure as fate.

"Letty," said the older of the two little sisters, "I'll tell you what let's do."

"Well, what let's do?" asked Letty, in a depressed tone.

"Why, the first lick mamma gives, let's holler like we were bein' killed," whispered Sue, "then she won't whip much."

This naughty plan seemed to work well. Both little girls yelled so loud that mamma was scared.

"My switch must be too keen," she said, and left off.

"It didn't hardly hurt me a bit," said one little girl gleefully when mamma was out of hearing.

"Me neither," said the other.

Just then they heard a rustle of a newspaper in the library, and peeping through the half-opened door, they saw papa. After that the children went about like culprits with a rope round their necks, expecting another whipping. But mamma was trying a new plan.

"Mamma, please take this splinter out of my hand," said Letty, "it hurts me."

"O, no!" said mamma, quietly. "You are hollering before you are hurt;" and the poor little finger festered and got sore.

"Please give me a drink of water," said Sue, "I'm so thirsty."

"I reckon not," said mamma. "You always holler before you are hurt, you know;" and Sue had to go to the kitchen for water.

Every petition was treated in the same way, until they could stand it no longer.

"We most haven't got any mamma," sniffed Sue.

Then they took courage, and made a clean breast of their misery:

"Is is 'cause papa told you what we did 'bout bein' whipped?" asked Letty.

"Yes," said mamma gravely, "that's the reason I treat you as if you never told the truth."

"O, mamma," they both cried, we'd rather be whipped!"

"But this is God's plan with his big children," answered mamma. "Ananias and Sapphira were punished quick and sharp like a whipping, but mostly God leaves liars to get their punishment by degrees. And it always comes: as soon as people find out that you have told a lie they quit believing anything you say; and I've just been showing you how uncomfortable that is."

"But, mamma," said Letty, "if we say we are sorry, and won't do so no more, won't you believe us then?"

"Yes," said mamma, with her brightest smile. "That's God's way, too; as soon as anybody is sorry and wants to do better, he says he is 'slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy.' "

I never knew Letty or Sue to act another lie.—S. S. Times.

DOES JESUS CHRIST LIVE HERE?

A lady was sitting on her verandah in India reading. She heard the tramp of some one running very fast, and presently a boy bounded into her presence all out of breath.

"Does Jesus Christ live here?" was his cry.

The lad was about twelve years old. His hair was coarse and matted with filth. His clothes were dirty. Flying up the steps and crouching at the lady's feet, he again inquired, "Do Jesus Christ live here?"

"What do you want of Jesus Christ?" she asked.

"I want to see him. I want to confess to him," was the reply.

"Why, what have you been doing that you want to confess?"

With great earnestness the boy said, "Does he live here? I want to know that. Doing? Why, I tell lies. I steal. I do everything bad. I am afraid of going to hell, and I want to see Jesus. I heard one of the teachers say he can save from hell. Does he live here? Oh, tell me where I can find Jesus Christ."

"But Jesus Christ will not save people who do wickedly," said the lady.

"I want to stop doing wickedly, but I cannot stop," said the boy. "I don't know how to stop. The evil thoughts are in me, and the bad deeds come of evil thoughts. What can I do?"

He was told he could do nothing but go to Christ, but that he could not see Christ as he evidently expected to see him. He was no longer on the earth in bodily form.

As he heard this he gave a quick sharp cry of despair. But he brightened up when the good missionary lady told him she was a follower of Jesus, and that she had come to India on purpose to tell people how to be saved.

"Tell me, oh, tell me about him!" was his eager cry. "Only ask your Master, the Lord Jesus, to save me, and I will be your servant, your slave for life. Do not be angry; do not send me away. I want to be saved, saved from hell."

We may be sure the simple story of the cross was soon told this poor Hindu lad, and he was easily led to trust with all his heart in Him who came hither to save lost sinners.—Buds and Blossoms.

LOOK IT UP.

Mr. Eggleston gives his readers good advice in telling them to look up the location of all places of which they read, and to test the accuracy of all statements that involve calculations. Such a practice tends to cultivate the habit of exactness, and will give to reading much additional enjoyment. In his book, "The Big Brother," he says:

"It will not hurt you, boys and girls, to learn a little accurate geography, by looking up these places before going on with the story; and if I were your school master, instead of your story teller, I should stop here to advise you always to look on the map for every town, river, lake, mountain, or other geographical thing mentioned in any book or paper you read.

"I would advise you, too, if I were your school master, to add up all the figures given in books and newspapers, to see if the writers have made any mistakes; and it is a good plan, too, to go at once to the dictionary when you meet a word you do not quite comprehend, or to the encyclopedia or history, or whatever else is handy, whenever you read about anything, and would like to know more about it."—Exchange.

TEMPERANCE.

DEVIL AND LICENSE

VERSUS GOD AND PROHIBITION.

BY S. CALVIN HART.

Liquor dealers, human vampires,
Death-dispensing host;
Price of blood to heaven crying,
Is the wealth they boast.

Lo! the weeping wives and children
And the loved ones slain;
Priceless sacrifice to Bacchus,
Fruit of rum's dread reign.

License laws, vile man, will never,
Quench this fiery dart,
On it speeds to ev'ry victim,
Through some woman's heart.

Rally, then, throughout the nation,
With your voice and vote!
Victory for prohibition
Sound in clarion note.

"God and home and native land,"
Our inspiration be;
Then united heart and hand,
We'll set the nation free.

O! thou God of prohibition,
Unto thee we call!
For we know thou dost not license
Any sin at all.

TEMPERANCE CONSISTENCIES.

In church and state the question of temperance is the all-engrossing one. Every one who is interested in the cause is doing what he can to help it along. This is my excuse for writing—I want to do what I can; and, at the risk of repeating commonplaces on a well-ventilated subject, I would like to call attention to a study that has greatly amused and interested me, and may afford that pleasure and profit to others. It consists in gathering the daily remarks and actions we hear and see on the temperance question, and fitting them to each other. I will group some of these, by way of illustration, under the head of Temperance Consistencies:

1. License the traffic as respectable, then discipline a church member for engaging in it.

2. Advocate keeping temperance out of politics, and thus help rummies to keep rum in politics.

3. Confess temperance to be the broadest and most urgent of questions; decry the only party that adopts it as narrow and hot-headed.

4. Urge speedy education of popular sentiment in this direction, and refuse to use the most powerful means to that end—viz.: the ballot.

5. Urge the doing of "something practicable," and refuse to do the most practicable thing—vote.

6. Declare that the "third party" has done nothing; then admit that it has created the present healthful public seniment, which all claim is the first and most necessary thing to be created, thus laying the best possible foundation for its prohibitory laws.

7. Claim loudly that "license" means "taxing an evil," then word it so as to "foster" and "protect" a "respectable business."

8. Acknowledge that liquor drinking has alarmingly increased under license, and that there is nothing inherent in the system to check this rapid increase, and yet claim stoutly that it "restricts." Restricts what? Possibly the number of saloons, but not the drinking.

9. Roundly exhort action for the best interests of the whole nation, then instantly seek local relief (?) at the expense of the cause and the entire land; or, stated in another way, snatch half a loaf at home, and rob the country at large of all bread.

10. Assert serenely that half a loaf is better than none, when you know that the whole is necessary to save the life.

11. Take pains to point out that local and State action are defective because of governmental interference, then rake a man for half a day for his folly in wanting to make it a national issue.

12. Prove light wines and beer to be non-intoxicants, then get drunk on them.

13. (a) South, declare Prohibitionists in league with Republicans; (b) North, declare Prohibitionists in league with Democrats; and, as the only consistent way of reconciling these seemingly conflicting statements (c) declare that Prohibitionists are in alliance with "rum power" and for "free rum;" then cap the climax and (d) confess that liquor men would rather see the devil than a red-hot Prohibitionist.

14. Finally, shout yourself hoarse for "reform," then turn the reform over to politicians bound hand and foot, and sold, body and soul, to the evil that is to be reformed.

Each one can multiply examples for himself, and in such a study get curious insights into human nature. A closing word—high license is a narcotic, a poisonous soporific. It sets the community asleep, imagining great good is being done and much health and strength being gained, until the miserable poison is too deeply imbedded to be removed, and has reached the life center. But we are gravely informed that "the people" are not yet "educated up" to anything better. The rum seller belongs to the most ignorant class, and yet he has education enough to know what prohibition means and can do, so that he will fairly froth at the mouth when it is broached. The trouble is we have failed to realize the extent of popular education on this point. The difficulty with the Christian church and community is not lack of education, but lack of action. The only way to get all to act is for each one to act. If we would learn to trust the average intelligence on the temperance question, and push straight out and on for principle and right, ceasing to belabor and bemoan the "ignorant public," we would do more, and find that they know more, than we ever suspected. The quickest way to get them to know something by experience is to actively take the field. McClellan-like, we are afraid our troops need a little more drilling and educating and shielding and housing, till the mischief has been done, and then we lead out the few we have so finely educated to find that the practical power and influence and the strategic positions are all in the hands of the enemy.—Rev. W. W. Scudder. Jr., of Alameda, Cal., in the Pacific.

SHE WAS TOO POPULAR.

THE FALL OF MR. BLAINE'S PRIVATE SECRETARY.

A Haverhill, Mass., dispatch to the N. Y. Herald says: Years ago a bright, open-hearted and honest girl was private secretary to James G. Blaine. To-day a physical wreck, broken down mentally, with no social standing, she earns her daily bread by washing dishes and doing other work in a Haverhill restaurant.

Born in the pretty village of Gardiner, Me., on the bank of the swift flowing Kennebec, she passed the days of her childhood. The public schools of her native town furnished her early education, and later she was sent to a seminary, where she was graduated with honors. Her parents were wealthy and held a high social position. She was the belle of the village, and a bright future opened up before her. When she was twenty-three years of age she became private secretary to the "Plumed Knight," James G. Blaine. As such she became a general favorite in society, and there are many people in Washington to-day, who, should I mention her name, would at once recognize this once brilliant woman. At one time her name frequently appeared in society journals as a leader at fashionable watering places, and on many well known occasions of national importance she was present as a special guest.

But society was her ruin. In her early days she had one lover, a bright and promising young man who now lives across the river in Bradford and fills an important position in the manufacturing world. Their engagement was announced about the time she became secretary to Mr. Blaine. But the demands of society led her away from her boy lover, and it was not long ere the engagement was broken by her. That was many years ago, and now comes the dark side of the story.

One night last winter a well known gentleman of Bradford was on his homeward journey; his way led along near the river road; the wind was blowing a gale, and the storm was increasing every minute. He saw an object down near the river bank, and on investigation it proved to be a woman, who, thinly clad and apparently the worse for liquor, was wandering aimlessly about. The man took her home and his wife cared for her. This woman was the bright and fascinating private secretary of former times. As soon as she was in condition to do so she told her story.

Why had she come to Haverhill? Simply to see once more the boy lover whom she had jilted in the Pine Tree State. In her pocket she had one of his love letters written years ago, and it seems she had carried it with her for many years. When private secretary she acquired the habit of drinking wines at receptions and other social events. Wine led to something stronger,and finally she gave up her situation with Mr. Blaine. The habit of drink was strong and she soon fell from her position in society. Of late years she has supported herself as best she could doing housework and the like.

perity of civil and religious institutions of the country demand the abolition of all such institutions.

5. That if the ostensible objects they propose to accomplish are the real objects sought, they can be better promoted by open than secret methods.

6. That all secrecy is damaging to a good cause, as it always leads men to conclude that there is something concealed that will not bear the light. Christ says, "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil."

7. That they are gigantic conspiracies against the Lord and his anointed, "saying, Let us break their bands assunder, and cast away their cords from us."

8. That the only way to enlighten the world is to bring it to Christ "who is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

9. Resolved, That we heartily endorse the W. C. T. U. in the work of education and reform, and especially approve of the open Christian methods employed, and that we should regret any concession of its open, honorable methods to secure favor, or form an alliance with the Knights of Labor, Good Templars, or any other department of the secret lodge system.

10 Resolved, That Rev. C. F. Hawley be continued financial agent and State lecturer for one year from date; and that he be authorized to receive subscriptions, donations and collections to pay his salary and expenses: and that the friends of the cause, and especially pastors, are urged to aid him in his work.

The ninth resolution was unanimously adopted by rising vote, the convention thus manifesting their deep interest in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and their reprobation of the methods of some leaders in that noble organization, to degrade it by covert lodge affiliation. The resolutions were discussed with great ability by Dr. Wishart of Illinois, Revs. J. S. T. Milligan of North Cedar, Kansas, Stannard of Shenandoah, McKee of Clarinda, Smith of Beaconsfield, Brown of Coin, Coe, of West Union, W. I. Phillips of Chicago, Rev. P. H. Wylie of Kansas, and others.

It was voted on motion of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan that the delegates from this convention to the national mass convention of prohibitionists to be held in Chicago be instructed to urge the continued recognition of God's authority in government, and the Bible standard of legislation, in the platform of the Prohibition party, and to add thereto the recognition of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler of nations.

The audience room of the large United Presbyterian church was well filled on the second and last evening of the convention, and after the usual devotional exercises, a few brief business items were attended to. The chairman then requested W. I. Phillips to speak of the organization, work, and present outlook of the N. C. A. Then followed, for half an hour, a very interesting address in which Rev. Dr. Wm. Wishart of Monmouth, Illinois, gave reasons for objecting to secret societies. The chairman introduced as the next speaker Rev. B. W. Coe, a seceded Mason, as one who knew what Freemasonry was. He not only spoke of how he came to join and was made a Mason, but of the long struggle through which he passed to reach his present position of freedom. What he supposed to be the binding character of the oath, and the fear that the penalty would be exacted should he renounce, kept him in bondage for some years, after he was convinced of the evil character of the lodge. The convention closed with an address by Bro. J. S. T. Milligan, which summed up the whole matter in a few words, which being brilliant, eloquent and forcible, fittingly closed this very pleasant and successful State convention.

Mr. Fred. Nelson, the well known friend of reforms, was at the train for delegates, and the writer is under great obligation to him for the use of his team and the pleasure of his company whenever a team was needed, during the three days' stay at College Springs.

The weather was perfect. The number of delegates enrolled was one hundred and thirty-five. If more attention had been given by the speakers to such minor orders as the G. A. R. and K. of L., it would have been more profitable to the cause.

The attendance of ministers from different parts of the State was very good considering the cost of getting to the convention; and several from outside the State were present. W. I. Phillips.

—During the prevalence of scarlet fever in Plainwell, Mich., all the churches were closed. The Baptist minister sent his sermon in a printed sheet to all his members.

A CALL FOR A SABBATH CONVENTION.

The undersigned, ministers and members of churches, feeling that the prevalent desecration of the Sabbath is injuring the churches, promoting infidelity and provoking the just anger of God, unite in calling a convention of Christian people who sympathize with us in this feeling to meet in Elgin, Illinois, November 8th, 1887, at 7:30 P M.; to continue in session through the following day. The purpose of this convention is to consider and pray and act in reference to this matter as God shall direct. The place of meeting will be subsequently announced.

—Pres. L. N. Stratton, who has been attending the western Wesleyan conferences, mentions, in his report to Syracuse headquarters, the names of several old friends whose names often appeared on convention rolls of our reform in years past. Among these are J. M. Kent and J. W. Snyder, whose good deeds are yet fragrant in Iowa and Illinois.

—At a recent meeting of the Brooklyn Presbytery, the Rev. Samuel T. Spear, D. D., the oldest member of the Presbytery, made a personal statement of his religious experience and relations to that body, of which he said he could no longer be an active participant. His remarks were received with the deepest sympathy and affection.

—In New York "Prisoners' Sunday" will be October 30. The committee who have had the matter in charge earnestly recommend that on that day the churches throughout the State, in their services and sermons, give prayerful consideration to the duty of Christian people towards the criminal classes; both to those who are in and those who are out of prison.

—Professor Henry Drummond and his co-laborers have induced a band of athletic young Christian men to devote themselves to work among the tenement houses of London. The professor thinks that this spectacle will do more to inspire a belief in Christianity than a whole library full of books on dogmatic theology.

—The largest Baptist church in this country, says an exchange, is to be built in Philadelphia. "It will seat 4,600 persons and costs $100,000. A thousand scholars will be accommodated in the Sunday-school room, five hundred more in the infant department. A dining room, kitchen, parlors, and a large entertainment room will also be provided. All this is to give room and scope enough for the ministry of Rev. Russell H. Conwell, Yale College student, soldier, lawyer, emigration agent, special correspondent in Europe for American papers, traveler, lecturer, author, theological student, Baptist minister." Let him take one more roll of the stone and become an apostle of holy, Christian living, and clean out the money-catchers and world-worshipers from his church, and he will give good proof of his ministry.

—The American Missionary Association holds its forty-first annual meeting in Portland, Maine, this week. This missionary body is a national organization and draws its support from Christian people in in every State and Territory in the Union. Its missionary labors, which are both evangelistic and educational,are devoted especially to the poor and neglected classes. Its missionaries number 445, of of whom 355 are in the South,56 among the Indians and 34 among the Chinese. In its schools are 10,717 pupils. Its range of teaching includes the industrial. At the South its work is chiefly among the colored people.

—Mr. Moody has arranged to have Ying Lee,proprietor of a Chinese laundry at Hartford,Conn.,enter his Mount Hermon School at Northfield, Mass., to prepare himself for the ministry. He is a remarkably bright Chinaman, far in advance of the great mass of his race.

—A sod church in Nebraska is described in Our Church Work. Its dimensions are 20x36 outside, 14x30 inside, walls 3 feet thick, built of sod, except the doors and windows; the floor is the natural soil; a tree serves the purpose of a coupling pole;the pews have backs when some one sits in them; the interior is plastered and white-washed, and the ceiling is made of mosquito netting. At the dedication of this church not a few walked fifteen miles.

—Chaplain McCabe reports encouraging progress toward the million mark for the Methodist Mission fund. He telegraphs from Saginaw City,Mich.:"Des Moines Conference, increase, $6,000; Detroit Conference, increase, $2,000.

—A union meeting was recently held at Oak Grove, Ky., by J. B. Lowry and W. H. Archey. It continued twelve days. The visible results are, the church greatly revived and encouraged, and sinners awakened. Sixty professed faith in Christ, and forty-eight united with the churches.

—With but a single exception, says the Independent, every Evangelical religious newspaper in the country sustains, most heartily, the policy and recent action of the American Board, and, what is very important now to consider, every such paper would instantly and firmly condemn that institution if it should permit its missionaries to teach the "dogma" of future probation.

—By appointment of the International Conventions of Young Men's Christian Associations, the second Sunday in November has been observed each year since 1866, as a Day of Prayer for Young Men and Young Men's Christian Associations. In 1875 this season of prayer was extended to cover an entire week. The blessing attending the observance of this season has been very marked in many places, and in numerous instances the churches which have united in the keeping of this week, or a part of it, have received an impulse in their work which has been felt throughout the winter. This week of prayer begins this year on Sabbath, Nov. 13. Pastors are requested to preach sermons intended to increase an interest in special effort for the salvation of young men.

—In Philadelphia the various congregations of "Christians," Disciples and Free Baptists have formed a practical Christian Union. Some months ago the pastors of these churches came together and decided that all interests would be furthered by immediate consolidation. Upon the basis adopted each congregation was left in perfect liberty as to the management of its own affairs,all distinctive denominational appellations were discarded for the one name Christian,and the whole bodygiven the title of the United Christian Churches of Philadelphia, of which there are ten or eleven already enrolled. The churches do not withdraw from their denominations, but they drop their denominational names and form a union independent of denominational lines. As might be expected, this action has resulted in giving great encouragement to the weaker congregations of the union, and infused a spirit of more aggressive work among all the ministers associated.

—The Swedish Augustana Synod has been very energetic in establishing its educational work. At Rock Island, Ill., it has its theological seminary with three professors and forty-five students. Instruction is imparted through both the Swedish and the English languages. One of the professors, Dr. Weidner, who teaches dogmatics, is entirely English; the other two are Swedish. In the four colleges of the Synod there is an attendance of 740 students, and instruction is imparted by 49 teachers. The oldest college is that of Rock Island, with 170 students, of whom 125 have the ministry in view—certainly a large percentage. The faculty numbers 13 men. The institution was founded in 1870. In 1876 Gustavus Adolphus College was established at St. Peter, Minn. It now has a faculty of 17 members, and an attendance of 200, of whom 40 are ladies. Of these 160 males, about 40 propose to study for the ministry. Bethany College in Kansas was opened only six years ago, but now has an attendance of 300 students, and a teaching force of 12. The Luther Academy at Wahoo, Neb., was opened in 1883. It has 70 students, of whom 25 will enter the Lutheran ministry. There are three professors. A remarkable sign of the interest taken by this whole body in the cause of education is seen in the fact that one student for every eighty communicants is in attendance at one of the church colleges.

Literature.

In the Faith Missionary, devoted to the advancement of Faith Work in foreign lands, beside a number of interesting letters from the brethren now laboring in India, the report of the Linwood Convention for Faith-healing and the promotion of a holy life is full of interest. The meeting itself was one of power and resulted in the formation of a permanent organization of which Deacon O. M. Brown of Oberlin is the president.

The last Literary Magazine is sure to have readers for such discussions of current social topics as "The Growth of Co-operation in England" by George J. Holyoake,

"French Peasant Proprietors," "Young Married Women," "Present Life and Thought in China," and "The Abolition of Poverty." Biography has "Samuel Taylor Coleridge," a very instructive and discriminating article, and "Socrates" by Prof. Blackie of Edinburgh. In science there are "The Creatures we Breathe," "The Honey-Bee," "The Redemption of Astrology," "Great Men and Evolution," "The Coral Reefs and Evolution," and "Prehistoric Trephining." A sketch of early discoveries in America by Scandinavian voyagers is a valuable article.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly is as entertaining in Fall as when Spring bursts out in bloom with useful notes about orchards, bulbs, fairs, etc. Now we are filling the south windows with our winter flower gardens such companions as "Vick's" are always welcome.

Demorest's Monthly for November will be of special interest to Prohibitionists for its fine portraits of Miss Willard and the late J. B. Finch Other illustrations are of fine order. The sanitary, bill of fare, fashion and house-decoration departments of this magazine are of the first class.

The Lincoln Life in the forthcoming November Century has to do with the period after Lincoln's election, and before his inauguration. In this installment will be given to the world for the first time fourteen letters of President Lincoln. These are written to men like General Scott, Mr. Seward, Mr. Raymond, Mr. Gilmer, and others. There are also important letters from W. H. Seward, and interesting letters and extracts from letters by Horace Greeley, E B Washburne, Simon Cameron, General Scott, Thurlow Weed, Thomas Corwin, W. C. Bryant, and John A. Dix.

LODGE NOTES.

The Delta Kappa Epsilon (D. K. E) secret college fraternity held a convention in Chicago last week.

The national meeting of the Brotherhood of Engineers meeting in Chicago last week were addressed by Gov. Oglesby. No business of public interest was transacted, but the order had a banquet and a "good time."

Rev. Dr. Kane, London, Eng., Grand Master of the Orangemen, denies the statement that he repudiated Chamberlain's proposals for separate treatmeat of Ulster, and states that he is in full sympathy with Chamberlain.

C. H. Harris who some time since gained a doubtful reputation as the retailer of low humor over the name "Carl Pretzel" has become editor of a weekly Sunday sheet in this city and was also lately made a Knight Templar—business and lodge relation fitting well to each other.

MacCalla, a Masonic authority, issues the following: "We consider it a part of the obligation of Masons to transmit to their successors all of the essential forms and ceremonies of Freemasonry as they received them including the very verbiage of the craft." For instance: Masonry is sometimes called Geometry, the "oblong square," "hermaphrodite," "murder and treason not excepted," etc, etc.

Grand Secretary Parvin of Iowa proposed some time ago to donate his valuable private "Iowa historical collection" to the Grand Lodge Library, if cases should be made to keep it intact and it should bear his name. It reveals the intelligence of men who are educated in the lodge literature and philosophy that there were objections made to the proposal by influential Masons and it was withdrawn.

Some time since a correspondent signing himself "Mason" wrote to the Standard of this city about pastoral supplies in Nebraska, closing his remarks on the subject with the lodge lingo, that men "free-born, of lawful age, well recommended, duly and truly prepared, worthy and well qualified" could be had by writing to J. W. Osborn or C. C. Pierce. Such a shameful attempt to fill Baptist pulpits with Freemasons cannot be too severely denounced.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D D: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now"
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverential y devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

In Brief.

A rich deposit of rock salt was found at a depth of 470 feet, at Hutchinson, Kan., Wednesday. The product is claimed to be as fine as any found in the country.

In an address at Dubuque, Congressman Coffin stated that in the past nine years the old-fashioned car coupler and hand-brake had killed 441 railroad employes in Iowa, and crippled for life 1,439 persons.

It is stated that the principal sugar refiners of the country are endeavoring to form a "trust," for the better protection of their interests, and that the combined resources of the firms mentioned is about $50,000,000.

Although the best of the public lands have gone, it is encouraging to note that there remain unsurveyed about 9,000 000 acres in Colorada, 12 000,000 in Arizona, nearly 30 000,000 in California, 49,000,000 in Dakota, 7,000 000 in Florida, 44,000,000 in Idaho, 7,000 000 in Minnesota, 39,000,000 in Nevada, 74 000 000 in Montana, 41,000 000 in Utah, more than 20,000,000 in Washington Territory, and so on.

A magazine published in Philadelphia in 1818 gave the following as an item of news: "In the course of the twelve months of 1817, 12,000 wagons passed the Alleghany mountains from Philadelphia and Baltimore, each with from four to six horses, carrying from thirty-five to forty hundredweight. The cost of carriage was about $7 per hundredweight, in some cases as high as $10, to Philadelphia. The aggregate sum paid for the conveyance of goods exceeded $1,500,000." To move a ton of freight between Pittsburg and Philadelphia, therefore, cost not less than $140, and took probably two weeks' time. In 1886, the average amount received by the Pennsylvania Railroad for the carriage of freight was three-quarters of one cent per ton per mile. The distance from Philadelphia to Pittsburg is 385 miles, so that the ton which cost $140 in 1817 was carried in 1886 for $2.87. At the former time the workingman in Philadelphia had to pay $14 for moving a barrel of flour from Pittsburg, against twenty-eight cents now. The Pittsburg consumer paid $7 freight upon every 100 pounds of dry goods brought from Philadelphia, which 100 pounds is now hauled in two days at a cost of fourteen cents.

Cygnet, Ohio, is a town of tanks. It is at Cygnet that the Buckeye Pipe Line Company has already built a dozen 35 000 barrel tanks, and will build without delay as many more. A few months ago, where Cygnet now stands the wind whistled through a poor potato patch, and sighed among the trees of the Black Swamp. Now trees, potato patches, large clumps of golden rod, and beautiful bunches of blue asters must all get out of the road of the tank men. "The greatest gusher in the world," recently mentioned in the Blade, was next visited. Wonderful as are the stories told of other wells in other fields, this well certainly stands without an equal in the world. The well, which is only a short walk from Cygnet, had been flowing at the rate of 250 barrels a day when Mr. Parker said "Shoot it," and Mr. W. J. Morrison, of Findlay, dropped the "go devil." Never before in the history of the oil fields has such a result been achieved. The oil burst forth in a mighty volume, and it seemed as if the fountains in the center of the earth had been broken up and were being forced up by an unseen and unknown force. Through four lines the oil poured, and the tanks shook and the earth in the vicinity of the well trembled. The thunders from the well can be heard all over Cygnet. In less than an hour and a half the well flowed 500 barrels into the tanks, and this will give the "oil volcano" a capacity of 8,000 per day. The well is keeping up its reputation for being the greatest gusher in the world, and at the rate it is flowing now all the 35,000 barrel tanks at Cygnet will soon be filled from the "oil volcano."

A striking instance of the extent to which labor saving machinery is carried nowadays, says the Industrial Journal, is shown in the tin can industry. Everybody knows that tin cans are manufactured by machinery. One of the machines used in the process solders the longitudinal seams of the cans at the rate of fifty a minute, the cans rushing along in a continuous stream. Now, of course, a drop or two of solder is left on the can. The drop on the outside can be easily cleaned away, but it is not so easy to secure the drop left on the inside. It wouldn't do, of course, to retard the speed of the work—better waste the drop, it is only a trifle, anyhow, and to 99 men in 100 it would not seem worth a minute's attention. The hundredth man worked for a firm using one of these machines, and he set about devising an ingenious arrangement for wiping the inside of the can, thereby saving that drop of solder and leaving none to come in contact with the contents of the can. He was encouraged by his employers to patent his invention, did so, and has already received several thousand dollars in royalties for its use. As the machine solders 20,000 cans a day, the solder saved by his invention amounted to $15 a day. It pays to think as you work.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

HOW FRENCH BREAD IS MADE.

One summer's day we stopped to call at the stone farm house of Monsieur Duval. Ernestine, the eldest daughter, was housekeeper in her dead mother's place, and she it was who brought out the amber-colored cider, the goat's cheese, and the heavy, hard, country bread. It is an essential of French peasant hospitality to offer these things to visitors. The loaf she took from the shelf was one of half a dozen leaning against the black wall. These loaves resembled cart wheels, and had been baked in six-quart milk pans. Ernestine cut the loaf with a small saw made for the purpose! Nothing less than such a saw, or a pirate's cutlass, could sever that homely but wholesome pain rassis. These loaves, we knew, were baked only once a month. Bread day in a Norman peasant family is like washing day on an American farm, in the respect that it comes at regular periods. We judged that bread day in this cottage was approaching, from the fact that only six loaves remained of the original thirty or thereabout. After our luncheon Ernestine took us through the orchard to a picturesque stone building, where the bread was wont to be made. This building had once been part of an ancient abbey, and amid its ivy-colored ruins we could still trace fine sculpture and bits of armorial designs, but inside there was no trace of art or architecture. It was really a Norman hen house. We saw several pairs of sabots or wooden shoes hanging from the wall and looking as if they had been whitewashed. In one corner of the place was a large space inclosed with boards. This was empty, but, like the sabots, it suggested whitewash or mortar making. Ernestine told us that this was the family dough trough. Hither, once a month, came her father and the hired man to "set" the yeast a-rising. Flour and water were stirred together with the huge wooden spades shaped like our snow shovels which hung with the sabots upon the wall. When the mass, thoroughly beaten together, had risen and assumed a dark color and leathery consistency, then came the tug of war. The two men put on the sabots over their ordinary shoes, jumped in upon the dough, and began the kneading. Their way was to hop and prance and flourish like opera dancers, to stamp and kick like horses, exerting themselves till the perspiration streamed off them and they had no strength left. After this process the dough was put into the pans, and then baked in the huge oven at the rear of the abbatial hen house. In all Norman towns half clad men may often be seen lounging about bake house doors. Their legs and feet are bare and floury, and as they tread the streets we know that they have just come from or are returning to their usual occupation of kneading bread. —Epoch.

FIGHTING SLEEP WITH TEA.

The practice of taking tea or coffee by students, in order to work at night, says Dr. Mattieu Williams, is downright madness, especially when preparing for an examination. More than half of the cases of breakdown, loss of memory, fainting, etc., which occur during severe examinations, and far more frequently than is commonly known, are due to this. I frequently hear of promising students who have thus failed; and, on inquiry, have learned—in almost every instance—that the victim has previously drugged himself with tea or coffee. Sleep is the rest of the brain; to rob the hard-worked brain of its necessary rest is cerebral suicide. My old friend, the late Thomas Wright, was a victim of this terrible folly. He undertook the translation of the "Life of Julius Cæsar," by Napoleon III., and to do it in a cruelly short time. He fulfilled his contract by sitting up several nights successively by the aid of strong tea or coffee (I forget which). I saw him shortly afterward. In a few weeks he had aged alarmingly, and become quite bald; his brain gave way and never recovered. There was but little difference between his age and mine, and but for this dreadful cerebral strain, rendered possible only by the alkaloid (for otherwise he would have fallen to sleep over his work, and thereby saved his life), he might still be amusing and instructing thousands of readers by fresh volumes of popularized archæological research.—Sel.

Dr. Fehling testifies that the influence of the nurse's diet on the child is illusory; the nurse or mother can, with impunity, eat sour articles, such as lemons, oranges and vinegar, without thereby influencing the child. How many mothers have, for days and weeks after their confinement, been denied satisfaction to their cravings for lemons, fruit and salads, by the Sarah Gramps ruling over them in their times of trial, the attending surgeons calmly, cruelly consenting, on account of the imaginary danger of colic to the puling infant.—*Med. Next Monday, Nov. 7th, is the semi-centennial of the murder of Elijah P. Lovejoy at Alton, Illinois, for his efforts against slavery. The eloquent sketch of Rev. C. C. Foote in these columns two weeks ago is worth re-reading on that day as is also an able article upon the martyrdom by Dr. J. E. Roy in the Advance of last week. This generation can do no better than to keep in vivid memory the deeds and characters of such men who could dare to die for the truth. Such men the world will have until the end. The Christian must still pass through Vanity Fair.

The Supreme Court at Washington heard the arguments in the anarchist appeal for two days last week, Butler, Tucker and Pryor asking for a new trial, Attorney-General Hunt and Judge Grinnell representing the State. A decision was expected Monday, but has been postponed till late in the week. It is the very general belief that no writ will be granted. Meanwhile meetings of agnostics and Universalists in Chicago and New York are listening to pleas for mercy for the seven condemned men. A rumor is current that Gov. Oglesby will commute the sentence of Fielden through the pleas of some of the capitalists and employers whom he has so long denounced with curses of extermination.

"They that be for us are more than they that be against us." In is important that we not only know, but deeply realize, in all our efforts to promote the right and destroy the wrong, that our help must come from God alone. Still we should rejoice that he raises up instruments to do his will, and in the faithful witnesses he sends to help us in opposing popular evils. The United Presbyterian church, which has over six hundred ministers, gives the following testimony against secret societies:

"We declare that all associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with such associations."—Section 15, Testimony of the United Presbyterian Church.

The belief is widely held that if any part of our citizens were in favor of a national debt they were the bankers. But the late meeting of the American Bankers' Association at Pittsburgh entertained resolutions declaring in favor of a rapid extinguishment of the public debt and against a reduction of the revenue, but urging that the surplus be promptly and constantly applied on the debt, and that the existence of the national banks does not depend on the debt. It is one of the simplest of propositions that as the credit of the nation is strong so is that of its banks. This canceled debt would be a better national defense also than can possibly be secured by expending an equal sum in forts and armaments which in a year or two will be discounted by our inventions if not by wise measures of arbitration.

The corner-stone of a monument to Gen. R. E. Lee was laid by Freemasons in Richmond, Virginia, last Thursday in the presence of fifteen thousand ex-confederates. No Anti-mason will object to this arrangement. That it is most appropriate we unanimously agree. Let all future monuments to commemorate treason and rebellion be left to the tender mercies of the lodge. More than all others let them have the honor of perpetuating the memory of Jefferson Davis, who belongs to their brotherhood, though of late years he repudiates the relation. The furore at Macon, Georgia, last week over the aged and unrepentant traitor was pitiful. What but evil can result, in either South or North, from the waving of rebel flags, the singing of the old rebel songs, and the adoration of the old man whose life has been so full of crime against his government, while he flatteringly addresses the crowds as "my people?"

A railway superintendent on one of our great Western roads lately said to a gentleman who called to remonstrate against the additional Sunday trains, "My dear sir, you come to the wrong place. You should go to the churches." The railroads cannot so easily put off their responsibility, but the superintendent was right. This judgment also should begin at the house of God. The Sunday suburban trains are demanded by the church revelers whose graces have not developed to reach their own neighborhood. But the churches are not indifferent in this matter. A few weeks since the large Rock River Methodist conference took decided action for the sanctity of the Lord's day. The Sabbath convention to be held at Elgin, near this city, next week, was called by an association of Congregational churches. The Chicago ministers of that denomination discussed the question last week with a hearty and unanimous condemnation of Sunday business and pleasuring. The Presbyterian Synods of Iowa and Illinois, meeting within a few days, have both passed strong resolutions against Sunday trains, mails and papers. If these pastors now take these resolutions into the pulpit, they will soon reach the prayer meeting, the class room and the session, and the work will be fairly begun. There is a fine enthusiasm in Elgin for the meeting. Accommodations for 300 delegates are promised and from the interest manifested in northern Illinois we judge the hospitality of the city will be tested.

The Illinois Presbyterian Synod met this year, with Dr. W. C. Gray of the Interior, in the beautiful Chicago suburb of Oak Park. The report of a committee on public schools, consisting of the Interior editor and pastors Jenkins and Johnson was a remarkable document, in its able and learned condemnation of the secular tendency in our common schools: recommending a standing committee on this question, following the example of the Synod of New York; recommending the co-operation of Christian people in securing members of school boards who shall not represent one or two infidels at the expense of the Christian majority in a community; and condemning the use of school books from which all reference to religion has been scrupulously eliminated, and the open attempt of the enemies of religion to "use the whole organization of the public school as an effective propaganda for the undermining and overthrowing of the Christian faith." This last proposition has application of which the Synod should not be ignorant. There is no influence acting against religion in schools more subtle and powerful than the Christ-rejecting lodges. Having cast out of their own constitutions the only source of true morality and religion, as teachers and school boards they follow the instructions of their secret cabal. Even the great National Association of teachers put at its head Aaron Gove, a Freemason so full of degrees and rites and lodge honors that it is a wonder how he can keep his position as superintendent of Denver schools unless he is held there by the lodge.

To the charge lately made that there is a great amount of drunkenness in the regular army it is replied from the Judge Advocate General's office that this vice has been decreasing yearly since the war, and during the last fiscal year the improvement has been greater than for years past, especially among the officers. The records of court-martial offenses seem to be the basis for this judgment. One officer had taken notes at several army posts. At one thirteen of the seventeen officers were strictly temperate, at another ten out of thirteen; and in his opinion there was less intemperance in the army than among an equal number of professional men in civil life. This gain for temperance is attributed in some part to the restrictions upon sutlers, but more to the arousing of a popular sentiment against drinking customs. If ever the case was worse than is represented by this officer our army was truly in a sad condition, and it was a mercy in disguise which led a Democratic Congress to cut it down to 20,000 men.

LODGE RELIGION.

BY REV. J. B. GALLOWAY.

We often hear it said, "One religion is just as good as another. One church is just as good as another." If these things are so, then certain other things legitimately follow. It follows that the Masonic religion is just as good as the Christian; a synagogue of Satan is just as good as a church of Christ; the religion of Cain just as good as that of Abel; the harlot is just as good as the faithful bride, Rev. 19: 2 to the contrary notwithstanding; or, to go a step farther, the logical conclusion is, the god of this world is just as good as the God of heaven! These are the principles that lead to socialism, anarchy, and the reign of terror; and will again bring on the violence and sudden destruction of the days of Noah. Gen. 6: 13; Lev. 17: 26.

But the very opposite of these propositions is the truth. The true church exists here for the purpose of purifying and saving a corrupt world; an apostate church does the very opposite. There is a line somewhere, it is not for us just to locate, beyond which when a church goes she becomes a part of "the great harlot which did corrupt the earth with her fornications." Is there no difference then between the true and the false?

Masons generally say No; and are so very kind and charitable that they have constructed a religion in which "all men can agree." And yet all outside the mystic circle are lovingly called "Cowans." The truth is, Masonry is one of the most exacting and despotic powers on the face of the earth. Never were the devotees of strange gods or false worships required to stoop lower, or make a more abject confession, than are Masons on the very threshold of the lodge. To the question, "Who comes here?" he is made to say, "Mr. ——, who has long been in darkness," etc. This statement is either true or false, and the candidate gets down pretty flat before the lodge god, no matter which horn of this dilemma he may take. If it is true he is in a bad case. If it is false he lies.

Paul said, "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." And here the Mason seems to count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Masonry. The Christian says, "My Lord and my God;" and the Mason now says, "Worshipful Master." It is therefore a most marvelous counterfeit of Christianity. It would almost seem that no man could invent it, apart from inspiration—I mean the inspiration of the devil.

Let us admit for a moment that Masonry is all truth as far as it goes, and furnishes men unto good works. No one will claim that it contains all moral truth, or holds the key of knowledge. Now it is a principle in mathematics, that "the whole is greater than any of its parts." Why then should the Christian, who has in the Bible, the whole of moral truth, and is thoroughly furnished unto all good works," crouch and cringe on bare knees at another altar, to get scraps of truth? But Masonry proper is Christless and Christ is the light of the world; it is therefore a gigantic system of darkness; and its votaries are as benighted as the prophets of Baal.

SLOUGH IT OFF.

BY ELDER S. C. KIMBALL.

"Let the Holy Ghost carry conviction to hearts upon all such things. The old skin that sometimes clings to the flesh will slough off as the vigor of life comes back in convalescence. George Fox said to Wm. Penn that he might wear his sword as long as the Holy Ghost would let him. The sword soon came off. Even a snake will shed his own skin if you give him time. Don't try to pull the skin off of people until returning health and vigor have made them ready to slough it off."—David B. Updegraff.

An important truth is well illustrated in the above paragraph, yet it may be so wrested as to furnish an apology for those time-serving preachers who for Balaam's reward allow the people to perish in their sins unrebuked. If the snake slough his old skin in due season, all right; but suppose he wear it, and is proud of it, and defends it, year in and year out? Suppose Wm. Penn had continued to wear his sword, and advocated the manly art of fencing and sparring, would the Friend Quakers have put him forward as a leading public defender of their faith?

It would not be polite to dash a pail of cold water on a sleeping guest in order to wake him for breakfast, so reason and Scripture agree that proper time and teaching should be given to an uninstructed convert to bring him into the full light and liberty of the children of God. Paul did not leave it entirely to the Holy Spirit to instruct the Ephesians that gods made with hands were no gods, but he rebuked their idolatry at the risk of mob violence. Stephen, a man "full of the Holy Ghost," did not leave it to the Divine Spirit to show the Jews their connection with the crucifixion of Jesus, but he summoned them to repentance as murderers of the Son of God. Now what some Christian people would like to know is this: Is it consistent in a Holiness Convention to put forward adhering Freemasons as examples and teachers of full salvation and entire sanctification? Will Charles Cullis, publisher of the Times of Refreshing, David B. Updegraff, publisher of the Friends' Expositor, O. M. Brown, president of the Ohio Holiness Alliance and publisher of the Faith Missionary, and A. B. Simpson, publisher of the Word, Work and World, please answer the above question? If holiness and "entire sanctification" do not imply and practically secure common morality, then words have lost their meaning and the best Christians will refuse to be classed with the popular holiness host.

THE REGIONS BEYOND.

BY REV. J. F. AVERY.

How much owest thou my Lord? Take thy pen, but we would not advise, as did the unjust steward, to write quickly. Rather pause; consider well, and if memory serves thee ill, refresh it by quiet meditation. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor: that ye through his poverty might be rich."

Go ye, or send the Gospel to every creature, is today as much a royal mandate as when the disciples began at Jerusalem. Ponder the following objections and answers respecting home and foreign mission work. We have adopted and pass on the following six propositions from the pen and thoughts of another. They are calculated to awaken conviction and stir to prayerful endeavor:

1. There were many unconverted ones in Jerusalem and the regions round about in apostolic times as there are now in Christian lands. And there always will be till we obey God, and preach the Gospel to every creature.

2. All the men and means are needed at home. But the missionary spirit brings more men and means to the home work than if none went as missionaries.

3. What a waste of men! But the Holy Spirit selected the best men in the ancient church for this foreign work.

4. The heathen are well enough off without the Gospel. Why, then, did the Holy Spirit send Paul to them?

5. The same obligation rests on us, as on this ancient church, to send the Gospel to the heathen.

6. The preparation for the Gospel is much the same now as then. 1. There was, as is now, a weakening of the heathen religions and a hunger for more life. 2. The world was largely under one government, defending and making highways for the missionaries. So now the power of the world is in the hands of Christian governments, who own half the land, and control all the seas of the world. 3. The English language is almost as universal and influential as the Greek in Paul's time. 4. The dispersion of the Jews in all countries prepared the way for the Gospel. So Christian colonies and commerce have made a highway for the Gospel in our day.

Let us rejoice in the wide-open doors, and not complain that the demands and calls are so many upon our purse; but resolve: All that I am and have shall be consecrated Lord to thee, now and always.

WITNESSING FOR CHRIST AND FOR HIS ENEMY.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

In our daily reading of Isaiah I was struck by this remarkable antithesis: "Fear ye not....ye are even my witnesses. They that make a graven image are all of them vanity....they are their own witnesses." Is it possible to place in a stronger light the difference between the devotee of fashion and the disciple of Christ, between the slave of Mammon and the friend of God, between him who kneels at Baal's altars and he who refuses to bow before the image of the beast even at the sound of cornet and dulcimer and all kinds of music? "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord." You "who are set continually on the watch-tower," and you who can only keep the homelights trimmed and burning; for in the beacon fire or the glimmering rush light the same heart of flame leaps heavenward. But sad as the dirge over a dead hope, mournful as the wail of the night wind over a sepulchre comes the sorrowful refrain for those who have let their candle go out in darkness, or kindled strange fires to an unknown God: "They are their own witnesses."

I was surprised the other day to hear a revival preacher in a company of Christians ask each one to give their personal testimony that they loved the Lord. It ought to have been as strange a question as to ask them if they loved their dearest friend. True love laughs at such an inquiry. It is like asking if one is alive when the blood is mantling in the cheeks and bounding in the veins and every motion is a joy. Still it set me to thinking. The best witness that we love our friend is our desire to have him with us, and even after a dear one has gone from your embrace forever, don't you put the favorite chair in its familiar corner, and deal tenderly with old,timeworn articles of dress or furniture that are neither particularly useful nor beautiful, just because of their associations with that loved presence? So our best witness for Christ is that we want him with us all the time.

But when we sing that sweet Gospel hymn,

"Oh, come to my heart, Lord Jesus,
There is room in my heart for thee,"

do we always make sure that there is room in our houses for him and room at our tables? For I can not but think that if every Christian woman remembered that Christ was her guest there would be a decided revolution in our style of cooking,for instance in favor of simpler and more hygienic modes. Should we heat and tire ourselves out even if "we are going to have company" by cooking up a variety of indigestible dishes that we would not dare offer to our Divine Guest, knowing that thereby we should only incur Martha's rebuke, and perhaps a severer one, as this is a more enlightened age,and we ought to know a great deal in regard to the stomach and the kind of food which should be put into it that she could not be expected to know? Should we fritter precious time away in useless needlework with Christ sitting in our homes and watching us as we flounce and furbelow and trim, or make crazy scarfs and quilts that a few generations hence will only waken the same half-pitiful smile that we give to our grandmother's faded samplers? Ah, when we remember this, remember to think of Christ as our every-day guest, then there will be a return in our homes of the old apostolic spirit of Christian hospitality that has so nearly died out. We shall not shrink from entertaining the traveling preacher or the delegate to a church convention or the wearied worker whom Providence sends in our way. What we would offer our Lord we can certainly offer them, and if all such receive a hearty welcome and go from our firesides refreshed and strengthened, we may rest assured that Jesus is as much at home in our dwellings as he ever was in the Bethany household.

"But we don't make graven images," you say. What matter if you don't when the essence of all false worship is to put a lie in the place of the truth, the flesh in the place of the spirit, the visible show in place of the unseen reality? Are you not a false worshiper, my dear sister woman, when you put your nice, elaborate housekeeping, your fine sewing, your needless tucking and embroidery before the things of the kingdom? For there must always be the poor and the stranger at your gates,and many times has the Lord been nigher to you than you thought in one of his saints to whom you could have ministered and did not. He who is the faithful and true witness must have better testimony to your love than this. He must come into your house and abide there and be daily gladdened by your loving ministrations. Will you keep him waiting at the gate? Will you do worse and neglect him when once entered? invite other guests with whom he has nothing in common,and let in rival interests in which he cannot share? Then on you as surely as on the Mammon worshiper in his counting-room, or he who kneels to Baal in the secret chambers,must be pronounced the same sad words of doom, "They are their own witnesses."

NOBLE GRAND.

A venerable clergyman, familiarly called Father W., was, some years ago, visiting his son, who resided in a beautiful city in Massachusetts. Father W. one day told the following story to an attentive listener:

It was late when I retired to rest last night. The reason was this: My son Henry (as we will call him) was at the Odd-fellows' lodge, and his wife and family were very tired after such a hot day, and knowing it would be late when he came home they did not want to wait for him. "Oh, well," said I, "I'll sit up for Henry, and let him in. You had better all go to bed." After a little further persuasion they consented to the arrangement. It was after eleven o'clock when he came home and found me waiting for him. When seated he said: "Father, I was elected by the lodge, to-night, Noble Grand." "Noble Grand!" said I, "Noble Grand! Well, Henry, you can never get any higher than that. Noble Grand! It reminds me of one of our ancestors, who had a scapegrace of a son who was very much interested in military affairs. One training-day he went out to the field where the militia were training, and on his return home he said to his mother, 'Mother, they have made me an officer—a corporal.'

"This his mother regarded as a matter of great interest. His father was very deaf, and being past labor, he used to sit in the chimney-corner all day long, having but little intercourse with the family, or, the rest of the world. Sometimes, however, when anything of importance had occurred, his wife would try to make him hear, though it was almost impossible. This, she thought, was one of the important events, and she must try to tell him about it. So she went and screamed in his ear, 'They have made our son an officer.'

"The old gentleman put his hand to his ear, and said, 'What did you say?'

"Then she screamed louder, 'They have made our son an officer.'

"Again he put his hand to his ear, and said, 'What did you say?' And she screamed louder still, 'They have made our son an officer.'

"Then putting on an angry look, he said, 'Ah! just as I expected. I always told the young rascal that the officers would get him if he didn't behave better.'

"'No, no,' cried the old lady in piercing voice, 'they've made our son an officer in the militia—a corporal.'

"On hearing this the old gentleman threw himself back in his chair, and throwing up his hands, he exclaimed, 'Lack-a-day! lack-a-day! there never was such a thing happened in our family before.'

"So I may say to you, Henry, there never was such a thing happened in our family before as for one of us to be made Noble Grand." S. B.

THE SERMON.

THE SABBATH MAN'S NEEDED REST.

SERMON PREACHED BY REV. J. M. FOSTER IN THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CEDARVILLE, OHIO, AUG. 14, 1887.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

The Sabbbath question is coming to the front. While its enemies are becoming more intense in their opposition to it, its friends are becoming more earnest in its defense. The one would move the hand of the clock back to the "Continental Sunday" of Europe; the other is endeavoring to move it forward to that divinely appointed rest so inseparable from the well-being of soul and body. "The Sabbath was made for man."

I. We have here an intimation of the origin of the Sabbath.

It is impliedly taught in the expression "was made," that the Sabbath was instituted by the Creator. He who created all things by the word of his power made the Sabbath day. "This is the day which the Lord hath made." The great feast of the New Testament is called "the Lord's Supper" because he instituted it and claims the exclusive right to grant its privileges to whom he will. So the Sabbath is called "the Lord's day" because he ordained it and has the exclusive right to determine how its hours shall be spent. The Sabbath is not a human afterthought but a divine forethought. It is the arrangement, appointment and contrivance of heaven for man. It has its necessity in the constitution of our nature and its authority in God's Word: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

II. There is an intimation of the time when the Sabbath was instituted.

"The Sabbath was made for man." The term man here is generic, including the whole human race. It was not made for a single individual nor for a single family nor for a single nation, but for all the sons and daughters of Adam, for the whole human family. Then it must have been co-eval with the human race, and is, therefore, an

ORIGINAL AND ABSOLUTE, UNIVERSAL AND PERMANENT INSTITUTION.

That it is such appears:

1. From the words of institution.

"And on the seventh day God ended his works which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his works which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." To bless and sanctify a day signifies to consecrate it to divine service, and an assurance that those who observe it shall enjoy special favors. So much is intimated in the language of Isaiah: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath (i. e., cease trampling under foot the Sabbath), from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and shall honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; then thou shalt delight thyself in the Lord and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, thy father." These directions were not given and these promises were not made respecting a temporary institution. They were spoken with reference to the original and permanent ordinance of the Sabbath.

2. The reason assigned for the institution of the Sabbath proves it to be original and permanent.

"Because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." The same reason is assigned in the Fourth Commandment,—"for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it. It is evident that this reason existed in the beginning as well as twenty-five hundred years later when the law was given at Sinai; and if so the ordinance which rests upon that fact must have existed likewise. From the beginning God gave us six days for our own employment and reserved one for himself. The Sabbath is God's own property.

3. The hebdomadal division of time possessed from the beginning proves the Sabbath to be an original and permanent institution.

It is said, "in process of time" Cain and Abel brought their sacrifices. Literally it is "in the end of days" and Hebrew scholars generally agree that the allusion is to the septenary division of time, and suggests the thought of public worship on the Sabbath. Lamech's "sevenfold" vengeance was suggested by the week. When Noah's dove returned to the ark, he waited seven days and sent it out again. When it returned with the olive branch in its mouth he waited yet another seven days. Jacob fulfilled Rachel's "week." Recent discoveries confirm this division of time as existing long before the giving of the law at Sinai. A Babylonian tablet, written long before Moses's day, reads: "The seventh day—a Sabbath—the Prince of many nations the flesh of birds and cooked fruits eats not. The king in his chariot rides not. In royal fashion he legislates not. . . . .To make a sacred spot is suitable. . .Raising his hand the high place of the god he worships." Hesiod, who lived about nine hundred years before the advent of Christ, says: "The seventh day is holy." Homer, who sang about the same period, and Calimachus, likewise a Greek poet, who flourished about seven hundred years later, allude to the seventh day as holy. Theophilus of Antioch says concerning the seventh day: "The day which all mankind celebrate." Porphyry says, "The Phoenicians consecrated one day in seven as holy." Lucian remarks, "The seventh day is given to the school boys as a holiday." Eusebius observes, "Almost all the philosophers and poets acknowledge the seventh day as holy." Josephus, the Jewish historian says: "No city of Greeks or barbarians can be found which does not acknowledge the seventh day's rest from labor." Philo testifies, "The seventh day is a festival to every nation." (see "Prize Essay," by J. A. Quinton, page 12.) How came all nations by this septenary division of time? It is not a natural division. There is nothing in the movements of either sun or moon to suggest it. It is a purely arbitrary division. The only rational solution is in the original and permanent institution of the Sabbath.

4. The examples of eminent piety in the earliest history of the church prove the existence of the Sabbath.

Had Abel, Enoch, Noah, Melchisedec, Job, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, no Sabbath? Such piety could not exist without it. That the Sabbath must have been a principal means of fostering and increasing the faith by which those "elders obtained a good report," appears from "the felt and proved necessity of a periodical day of rest and worship to the religion of present days." Edward Bickersteth, one of the best men whom our age has produced, testifies that but for a weekly day, given as entirely as possible to God, religion would have soon abandoned him. "To conceive that the patriarchs, who were men of like passions, men exposed to like temptations, toils and sufferings, with others, could maintain for centuries a holy and happy life without the stimulus and refreshment of the Sabbath, is to suppose a case, which, if true, would prove the uselessness of the institution in any circumstances, but which, in fact, is a simple impossibility and a mere dream."—Gilfillan.

5. The fact that Moses revived the institution among the Hebrews in Egypt before the exodus establishes its originality.

The people had become corrupt; they neglected the worship of the true God; they defiled themselves with the abominations of the land. When Moses came to call them out of Egypt the first thing he did was to revive the worship of God among them. And the very first step in this revival was to require them to keep the Sabbath. This enraged Pharaoh, and hence these wrathful words: "Wherefore do ye, Moses and Aaron, let the people from their work? Get you unto your burdens; behold the people of the land are many, and ye make them rest (Sabbatize) from their burdens."

6. After Israel had come into the wilderness, and three months before the giving of the law, it is mentioned, not as an institution just then appointed, but as one already well known.

In the sixteenth chapter of Exodus, in connection with the giving of the manna, we read: "And it came to pass that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much, two omers for one man; and all the rulers came and told Moses. And he said unto them: This is that which the Lord hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord; bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning." It is evident that Moses had not commanded them to make this provision for the Sabbath. They did it gratuitously; indicating that the Sabbath was an ordinance with which they were familiar. It is also evident that the elders went to Moses because the people had violated a special command not to gather more manna than each one needed each day. And it is furthermore evident that the Israelites regarded the Sabbath as a moral ordinance of superior obligation to this special command as to the gathering of manna; and when the two came in conflict the moral took the precedence. The whole transaction indicates that they regarded the Sabbath as an original and permanent institution.

7. The word "Remember" in the beginning of the Fourth Commandment indicates that it was an ordinance already binding.

It is as if God had said: "I call to your minds that institution with which you are all familiar, an ordinance which your fathers and fathers' fathers have observed, an ordinance which occupied God's seventh day and man's first day upon earth; 'remember the Sabbath day.'"

8. The place it occupies in the Decalogue proves it to be an original and permanent institution.

There were three classes of laws given to the Israelites at Sinai, viz., the judicial, the ceremonial and the moral. The first two were local and temporary, the last was universal and permanent. The moral law was delivered by God's voice out of the midst of the fire and smoke of the quaking mountain, while the blast of the trumpet was exceeding long and loud, to indicate its majesty and authority; and it was written by the finger of God upon two tables of stone, to indicate its perpetuity. "That law is founded on the eternal distinctions of right and wrong—distinctions that are strong and irreversible as the granite bases of the mountain from which it was delivered."—Farrar. Sooner shall the heavens and the earth pass away than one jot or tittle of the law fail. Every precept of this law has its authority in the nature of God and its necessity in the nature of man. Every precept of this law was originally written upon man's heart and was only here re-enacted with increased obligation. But the Sabbath is found in the very heart of the Decalogue. It is the keystone of the moral arch. It is, therefore, an original and permanent institution.

9. The Saviour recognized it as a moral ordinance.

Christ did not come to abrogate the Sabbath; he came to keep it. He fulfilled all righteousness. The Jews charged him with breaking the Sabbath when he and his disciples passed through the corn fields and "his disciples began to pluck the ears of corn and to eat." But he proved by an example that this was no violation of the law of the Sabbath. "Do you not remember how David went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar, the high priest, and did eat the shewbread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him? Now, if David, your hero, your saint, your model, could set aside a special command in case of necessity, shall I, who am Lord of the Sabbath day, be criminated for doing a work of necessity? The priests in the temple spend the whole Sabbath day in killing sacrifices and burning incense and are blameless. Shall not I, who am Lord of the temple, be allowed to do that which is necessary? If ye had known what that meaneth, 'I will have mercy and not sacrifice,' ye would not have condemned the guiltless. For the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day." Again, he said to a man who had kept his bed for thirty-eight years, "Arise, take up thy bed and walk." The Jews say to him, "It is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed, for the prophet says: 'Thou shalt bear no burden on the Sabbath day.'" "Yes," interposes the Master, "but he does not mean that it is unlawful for this man to carry home his pallet, the only bed he has in the world, but he means to forbid you avaricious Jews from compelling your hirelings to work on the Sabbath." And if Christ were speaking here to-day he would say: "It means to forbid these street car companies compelling their drivers and conductors to run the cars all day Sabbath for gain; the railroad corporations compelling their engineers and conductors to run their trains on Sabbath; the wealthy families compelling their servants to stay at home and cook their fine dinners, while they go to the house of God to worship, and thus of their heaven ordained right to one day in seven as a rest." Again, Jesus loosed a woman whom Satan had bound for eighteen years on the Sabbath. The Jews found fault. He said, "Which of you, having an ox or an ass, would not loose him and lead him to water on the Sabbath day? Shall I, then, be chargeable for loosing a daughter of Abraham whom Satan hath bound these eighteen years? Judge righteous judgment." Christ in no sense abolished the law of the Sabbath. He swept away their false glosses and interpretations, their endless traditions and commandments of men, but left the moral law standing pure and holy as originally and permanently enacted.

10. The New Testament Sabbath is this original and permanent institution.

When Moses came down from the mount and saw the golden calf, he broke the tables at the foot of the mount, to indicate that the law, as a covenant of works, was broken. God directed him to hew out two other tables of stone, and reproduced the law upon them with his own finger, and directed that these two tables be placed in the ark, under the mercy-seat, as "a rule of life in the hands of a Mediator. Jesus Christ is the Mediator. The law of the Sabbath is therefore in his hands. He is its administrator. And as Lord of the Sabbath he changed the day from the seventh to the first day of the week on the morning of his resurrection. What is the proof of this? (a) Ezekiel 43:26, 27. "Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves. And when these days are expired, it shall be that upon the EIGHTH day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt-ofierings upon the altar and your peace offerings, and I will accept you, saith the Lord." This language is symbolical. The allusions are to the ceremonial services of the temple. But it is a prophecy and finds its fulfillment in the Christian Sabbath. (b) Hebrews 4:8–10. This is the prime argument. It is found in the very place where the authority for the change of the day would naturally be expected, in a book written for the purpose of persuading the Jews to accept of the Christian instead of the Mosaic institutions. The argument is that as God created the world in six days and rested the seventh,and set it apart in commemoration of the work of creation; so Christ, having finished the work of redemption in his resurrection on the first day of the week, set it apart in commemoration of his greater work. "For he that is entered into his rest he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from his." This interpretation has the authority of two of the most eminent theologians, John Owen and Francis Turretin. (c) The practice of the church subsequent to the resurrection of Christ. On the day the Lord arose he appeared to his disciples on five different occasions,and, withdrawing himself during the interval, re-appeared on the following "first day of the week." On that day the disciples came together to break bread and preach the Gospel. On that day the Galatians and Corinthians made their collections. On that day John saw the future history of the church pass in review before him, while an exile on Patmos. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Dr. Rice observes that "this change of the day has the advantage of commemorating the resurrection of Christ and the completion of the work of redemption, whilst it answers all the purposes which were accomplished by the keeping of the last day of the week. The Sabbath still occurs on every seventh day, thus reminding men that in six days God created the heavens and the earth, and rested the seventh, and impressing upon them their obligation to their Creator. But it occurs on the first day of the week, thus reminding us that the Son of God died for our sins, and on the morning of the third day rose for our justification. And so by the observance of every seventh day and that the first day of the week,as the holy Sabbath,

THE TWO GREAT EVENTS IN THE HISTORY OF OUR WORLD

are constantly brought to view—namely, its creation and its redemption; and, at the same time, the minds of men are turned both to the Law of God and to the Gospel of Christ. For by creation man was placed under the perfect law of God, 'holy, just and good;' and by redemption he is placed under the grace of God which bringeth salvation." It is evident, therefore, as Dr. Hodge says, "that an institution having unchanged purposes and relations, enacted at creation, re-enacted at Sinai with added sacredness, and re-enacted again with added associations and obligations by Jesus Christ, must be the same institution in spite of the mere change of the day."

III. The reasons and necessities in which the Sabbath originated.

"The Sabbath was made for man." We specify three.

1. The physical. Proudhon, the French socialist, will not be regarded as a biased witness. He says, "Diminish the week by one single day,and there has not been sufficient labor comparatively to require rest. Extend the week by the same quantity one more day, the work becomes excessive. Establish every three days one half day of rest, you multiply by the dividing of the week the loss of time, and in cutting the natural unity of the day you break the natural equilibrium of things. Give, on the contrary, forty-eight hours repose after twelve consecutive days of work, you kill man by inertia after having bruised him by fatigue." Could anything be more conclusive? Let us verify this.

(a) The Sabbath is a necessity for rest and repose. Besides the rest in sleep the human system requires one-seventh part of time for rest. Dr. Farre, in evidence before a committee of the House of Commons, said: "Although the night apparently equalizes the circulation, yet it does not sufficiently restore its balance for the attainment of a long life; hence one day in seven, by the bounty of Providence, is thrown in as a day of compensation to perfect by its repose the animal system." No fewer than 641 medical men of London, including Dr. Farre, subscribed a petition to Parliament against the opening of Crystal Palace for profit on Sabbath,containing the following sentence: "Your petitioners, from their acquaintance with the laboring classes, and with the laws which regulate the human economy, are convinced that a seventh day of rest, instituted by God, coeval with the existence of man, is essential to the bodily health and mentai vigor of men in every station of life."

(b) The Sabbath is a necessity in the matter of cleanliness. It was no arbitrary law that required of the Jews frequent ablutions. The Sabbath tends to foster habits of cleanliness and thus prolongs life. The lack of the Sabbath induces filthy habits. Look at France after the Revolution! "The moroseness occasioned by the want of a Sabbath in France has an effect on the cleanliness of young men engaged in manual labor; they pursue their daily drudgery in their dirty working dresses, and habit at length renders them averse to a change of linen and clothes." The Sabbath is a physical necessity. "Oh,precious day; the working man's jubilee, the slave's release, the shield of servitude, the antidote of weariness,the superior of the curse! Thou art the tried and true friend of man."—John Allen Quinton.

2. The intellectual. The brain must have rest by a change of subjects of thought from secular to religious. Burke said respecting anti-Sabbatarian students: "They who always labor can have no true judgment; they exhaust their attention, burn out their candles and are left in the dark." Isaac Taylor said, "I am prepared to affirm that, to the studious especially, and whether younger or older, a Sabbath well spent, spent in happy exercises of the heart, devotional and domestic, a Sabbath given to the soul is the best of all means of refreshment to the mere intellect." This is self-evident.

3. The moral and religious. Our moral and religious natures require the Sabbath as much as our physical natures require the light and heat of the sun. "The great majority of one hundred thousand men employed on the inland navigation of England are deprived of the blessing of the Lord's day, and are, consequently,with their wives and children,generally speaking in a state of deplorable ignorance of the Gospel and of the power of religion." Baron Gurney, when passing sentence of death on two boatmen at the Stafford assizes, said: "There is no body of men so destitute of all moral culture as boatmen; they know no Sabbath and are possessed of no means of religious instruction." It has been said that "no class of men are more frequently before the magistrates than the London cab and omnibus drivers, who are employed every day from thirteen to sixteen hours in their calling. Habits of intoxication and profane swearing prevail among them; and the same characteristics attach to them as to others who are deprived of the privileges of the Lord's day, namely, demoralization and degradation." The French nation abolished the Sabbath and adopted every tenth day as a rest. The law worked immense harm. "Domestic crimes, infanticides, the murder of husbands by their wives and wives by their husbands, were almost as common as larcenies were wont to be." No wonder Abbe Gregior exclaimed:"This law will soon ruin the nation."

IV. As "Lord of the Sabbath" the Saviour has legislated respecting the observance of the day.

The Decalogue is both a civil code and a spiritual rule of life. In the second sense it belongs to the church. She determines matters of faith. In the first sense it belongs to the state. As a civil code the state is the keeper of both tables of the law. It must authoritatively and judicially suppress all open and public violation of the law. Hence it follows:

1. That the state, as the keeper of the civil Sabbath, must prohibit public Sabbath desecration. The prophet Jeremiah was directed to go and stand in the gate of the city of Jerusalem and say to the rulers of Judah, "Thus saith the Lord, Ye shall bear no burden on the Sabbath," i. e., they were to forbid their people working on Sabbath. If they regarded this edict, God would pour out his blessing. But if they disobeyed God would kindle a fire in their gates and it would consume their palaces and it should not be quenched. They repudiated the message and imprisoned the messenger. By-and-by the Chaldeans invaded their land, burned up their cities and villages, carried the people captive to Babylon and kept them there as slaves for seventy years. And this is the reason God assigns: "That my land might have her Sabbaths." After the captivity Nehemiah saw some treading wine presses,etc., on the Sabbath. "Then contended I with the nobles in the land, and said, What is this evil thing that ye do?" He charges the sin upon the rulers because they did not suppress it. Then he ordered the gates of Jerusalem to be closed on the Sabbath. The Tyrian merchants who were wont to trade in the streets on Sabbath came, and, finding the gates closed, lodged outside the wall. "Then I ascended the wall and said, Why lodge ye about the wall on the Sabbath day? If you do so again I will lay hands upon you." All this indicates that the responsibility for public Sabbath desecration lies with the government. Hence the government should say to these men who run saloons, beer gardens, base ball parks, variety theatres, etc., "Your doors and gates shall all be closed on the Sabbath day—yes, and on every other day, too." It should put forth the strong arm of the law and lay it upon these railroad corporations and say, "Your trains shall not rumble on the Sabbath, depriving hundreds of thousands of workmen of their rest on pain of losing their position." It should prohibit Sabbath processions with banners and bands of music by Masonic and other orders. It should prohibit public Sabbath desecration on the part of the individual,corporation, municipality, commonwealth or general government. Yes, the state should say to Congress, "You shall not continue your sessions through the Lord's day, or require the mail to be carried and distributed through every State in the Union on that day, thus offering an open insult to the God of the Sabbath and setting a flagrant example for evil before this great people." And when our our land will have her Sabbaths. But this is a judgment that must begin at the house of God. As long as professing Christians buy and read the "Sunday newspaper" on Sabbath, we need not complain of the government for not suppressing the nuisance. As long as professing Christians use the "Sunday trains" for business or pleasure, we need not find fault with the civil officers for not stopping them. The church must be purged.

2. The church as the keeper of the religious Sabbath must teach the people their duty as to the observance of the day. Now the question is, "What saith the Scripture? How readest thou?"

(1) It should be a day of absolute rest from all secular emplyoment. It is as much our duty to rest on the seventh day as to work the other six. "In it thou shalt do no work." This clearly prohibits every one from pursuing his ordinary vocation. If obeyed, it would close every store, workshop and art gallery in the land. "Nor thy son nor thy daughter," imposes on parents the duty of restraining their children from week-day work. "Nor thy manservant,"forbids employers imposing any but works of necessity upon hired laborers. "Nor thy maidservant,"forbids unnecessary domestic employment. "Nor thy cattle." Doth God take care of oxen? Yes, even the beast of burden must rest. "Nor the stranger that is within thy gates." Even the visitor at your house must conform to the law of a well-regulated household.

(2.) All the hours of the day should be consecrated to the glad and hearty service of God. We are enjoined to count "the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable." We should keep it holy to God because we love it. If we love the Sabbath,we will:

So adjust our worldly affairs on Saturday that our minds will be free from distracting cares and perplexing thoughts.

Rise betimes on Sabbath morning. It is robbing God of his time to lie in bed longer on Sabbath morning than we are wont to do on other days.

Spend the morning hours in secret prayer, family worship, reading and meditating upon the Scriptures,and so train the soul for the sanctuary.

Spend the body of the day in God's house, worshiping him in the great congregation.

The evening hours should be spent in the family circle, recapitulating the sermons of the day,reciting the catechism, reading a verse about in the Scriptures, and recounting each other's experiences in the divine life. "This is the day God hath made, in it we will joy triumphantly." Then, as Scotland's poet, Robert Burns, says:

> "They round the ingle form a circle wide;
> The sire turns o'er wi' patriarchal grace
> The big Ha'-Bible, ance his father's pride,
> And, 'Let us worship God,' he says, wi' solemn air.
> They chant their artless notes in simple guise,—
> The priest-like father reads the sacred page,—
> Then kneeling down to heaven's eternal King,
> The saint, the father and the husband prays."

And thus closes "the pearl of days."

THE IOWA STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

College Springs, Iowa, Oct. 22, 1887.

The convention of the Iowa State Christian Association has come and gone. It came as an orphan, was kindly taken in, fed and cared for, and sent on its way rejoicing. What we mean by its state of orphanage is, that none of its regular officers were present; but we appointed a god-father and god-mother, and made the little thing happy under their fostering care. We presume the minutes will come to you in due time, and we will therefore confine ourselves to such things as will not appear in the minutes. The attendance of members of the Association from a distance was meagre, owing, no doubt, to the fact that the place of meeting was in a remote corner of the State and off the railroad. But as we have plenty of cranks at home, we had no lack of an audience.

On Tuesday evening, after devotional exercises, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of North Cedar, Kansas, was introduced as the first speaker, and discussed at length the question of "Secret Societies and the Church." His line of discussion was as follows:

1. The importance of the question, from the church's relation to God, to Truth, to Man, to Society.

2. Secret societies are not homogeneous with the church. Their God is not our God. They do not accept our Saviour and Lord: nor our standard of authority: nor our method of salvation: nor our ordinances: nor our hope.

3. They are antagonistic to the church. They are counter organizations: in their brotherhood; in their agencies; in their means and methods; in their operations. They are opposite in their authority; in their caricatures; in their influence.

Bro. Milligan is a convention in himself. He can be genial sunshine, a laughing shower, a majestic thunder-storm or a terrific cyclone at will. We owe him much for his earnest work in our convention.

At the close of his address, Bro. Cole, from the dark continent, was introduced, and presented the character of secret orders among the native African tribes. It was well done, and enjoyed as a rich treat. One part of the initiation in the leading order among the native tribes is a good whipping. We recommend the following addition to be made to the initiatory rites of our Masonic brethren: When the candidate takes off his pantaloons and part of his shirt, and rolls up one leg of his pantalets, let one clothed in the habiliments of an old Roman Lictor approach with his fasces and make a vigorous application of the rods to the nude epidermis of the novitiate. It would be in harmony with the boasted antiquity of the order.

An audience of about 400 people listened with deep interest to the addresses of Tuesday evening. Wednesday forenoon was spent in transacting the business of the Association. In the afternoon the committee on resolutions reported a magnificent set of resolutions, broad, comprehensive and radical. These were the basis of the general discussion during the entire afternoon, and it was as fine a discussion as we have ever listened to. The resolutions were all unanimously adopted.

In the evening Bro. W. I. Phillips of Chicago opened with a history of the National Christian Association, and the present outlook. As an old citizen and pastor in the place, the people were glad to hear him, and the general feeling was that he did credit to himself and his cause. Bro. Wm. Wishart, D. D., of Monmouth, Ill., followed in a half-hour address, and with sharp, incisive logic dealt telling blows against the secret system. Forty-five years ago we heard him as an old Abolitionist, and though the blossom of the almond tree is on his head his natural force is not abated. In all the great questions of moral reforms "the Lord has taught his hands to war, and instructed his fingers to fight." We were sorry we could not give him an hour instead of thirty minutes.

But there were more good things to follow. Bro. Coe, a seceding Mason, who came from the northeastern part of the State, was put on trial as "a perjured villain;" but was allowed thirty minutes to make his defense before we would put the cable-tow around his neck, that once to his body said, "Noble Banquo, let me enfold thee." At the close of his defence our hearts relented,and we let him go "Scot free." Bro. Milligan, who drove the first nail in our meeting, was now given ten minutes to clinch the whole, and it was just such a clincher as a man who fights under the banner of the old Cameronians can give.

At the close the series of resolutions were again read, and a rising vote of the house taken. It was estimated that from 250 to 300 persons rose up in their favor. Thus closed an interesting meeting of our State Association. We were sorry there were not more present from a distance to enjoy it. The whole range of the discussion was noble, manly, dignified, earnest, Christian. Bro. Hawley, the State agent, was with us, gave a good report, did good work, and was continued in his present position. The expenses of the meeting were met, and something left for future use. Though we had no secret orders here to contend with, we still believe the convention will do us good. The frequent inquiry made, "Where is Stoddard?" indicated that somebody was missed.

SOUTHERN ALABAMA AND ITS METROPOLIS.

The three productive divisions of the State—Mobile, its surroundings and prosperity—The condition of the colored people—Lectures and the "Cynosure"—Faithful pastors—The Alabama State Convention in December.

Mobile, Ala., Oct. 26, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—About the middle third of Alabama, extending from east to west, is called the "Black Belt," partly because of its having a darker soil, and partly because the bulk of the colored population live there. In some of the counties they are to the whites as many as four to one. This is the great cotton belt. The northern part is better adapted to grain growing, and is rich in mineral products. In some parts, especially the northwest, the colored population is very small.

South of the cotton belt is the great Hard Pine region, which, with brief intermissions, extends along the Gulf Coast from the Atlantic to the interior of Texas. It has been, and perhaps still is, one of the finest forest regions of the world. In Alabama it is sparsely settled, with occasional cotton, and some sugar plantations, many sawmills along the railroads, and in the more southern border many turpentine and rosin factories. In the northwestern and southeastern parts of the State there is still a good deal of Goverment land subject to entry, most of which is valuable for its timber.

The Louisville and Nashville railroad, which connects Montgomery with Mobile and New Orleans, is, in its equipment and management, far superior to the East Tennessee and Georgia road. It has much nicer waiting-rooms, and is more reliable as to time. I left Montgomery on the morning of the 14th and arrived here at 2 P. M. As we approached the head of Mobile Bay the land became low; the pines gave way to hard woods, of which the live oak and magnolia are conspicuous; the Spanish moss hangs long and somber, and the palmetto everywhere abounds.

Mobile is not a magnificent city, though it has some fine streets and good buildings. One must go a number of miles to find anything resembling a hill. The country around is well adapted to market gardening, and shipments to the North are large. Sugar cane is also a good deal raised. Formerly oranges were an important crop, but for seven years there have been none. Even bananas have matured here, but never do now. Mobile is partaking of the general prosperity of the State and is recovering from the collapse that came upon it after the war, when its population steadily fell off. With the finest harbor on the Gulf, with two rivers that are navigable, and important railroads, it ought to be a great city. It will yet become such. I was glad to see that the authorities are waking up. Granite pavements are being put down in the business parts of the city; electric lights are being provided for the whole town, and the finest public school building for the colored public schools that I have seen anywhere in the South is just being completed. It is said that more than 200 houses are being constructed, and no one need be idle who is willing to work for reasonable wages.

The colored people are advancing in education, and increasing slowly in property. Their churches are not keeping pace with the general growth. The great drawback to this people is the prevalence and power of the secret lodge system. There lies before me a copy of the Christian Weekly, "for Christ and Humanity," Rev. E. H. Europe, editor and manager. It is a neat and well-conducted paper, but it gives a half column to notices of fourteenchurches,and two columns to fifty-two secret societies. All these are for the colored people. What these societies absorb and waste can be seen by the following statement of the cost of an excursion to Meridien last summer: There was paid to the railroad company $750. The net profits were over $400, and the entire cost in money, not counting time, over $1,400. A poor people cannot continue to pay out such sums and prosper.

I preached on Sabbath in the St. Louis Street Baptist, the Stone Street Baptist, and the Congregational

THE HUMANE SOCIETY AND THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE IN ROCHESTER.

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 25th, 1887.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—The Eleventh Annual Convention of the American Humane Association was held in this city Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week. Delegates were present from most of the States in the Union and also Canada. Mayor Parsons delivered the address of welcome. President G. E. Gordon, of Milwaukee, responded. As a sample of what the society is accomplishing, take the following item from the President's report:

"Animals. Cases investigated, 121,655. Number of horses, mules, and other animals relieved from cruelty and suffering, 109,573. Number of times ambulance used to remove disabled animals, 2,753. Animals humanely destroyed, 21,285. Arrests for cruelty to animals, 10,216.

Children. Cases investigated, 52,006. Number of children relieved from cruelty and suffering, 31,202. Number of children adopted or placed in private homes, 1,683. Number of children placed in institutions, 15,-433. Arrests for cruelty to children, 10,320."

M. V. B. Davis read a paper on "Humane Work in the East." The first society was organized in 1866. In twenty-one years all the societies have taken cognizance of 300,000 cases calling for interference. There are 150,569,000 domestic animals in the United States "measurably protected by the Association." The money expended annually in the humane work is $150,000.

J. J. Kelso, of the Toronto Globe, read a paper on "Humane Work in Canada." Defective laws are their great obstacle. J. M. Humphries, in a paper on "Humane Work in the South," stated that Negro mothers "go away, all day, locking up their little children without food or water." If the children disobey some trifling command they are often beaten until they cannot stand. The rich farmers use their horses and mules to put in their crops, feeding them so little that they are reduced to a skeleton. Then they sell them to horse-traders for a song, who, in turn, auction them off to the ignorant Negroes at large profits. Among other subjects on the programme were, "How can the Humane Societies Benefit the Street Waifs?" "Humane Literature in Public Schools," "Cruelty to Infants from Neglect," "Work of Societies to Prevent Cruelty to Children."

The next meeting will be held in Toronto, a step, it was suggested, toward annexation. It is proposed to call an International Congress two years hence. In the corridor of the "Council Chamber," ropes, whips, knives, clubs and thongs, were on exhibition which had been taken from parties arrested for cruelty to man and beast. "Man's inhumanity to man" and beast is shocking. A slanderous tongue is worse than any of these instruments of cruelty. A relentless, hard and cruel heart is worst of all.

On Friday at 4 P. M. Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D., secretary to the Evangelical Alliance, addressed the ministers and laymen of Rochester who were interested in his work, in the First Baptist church. The Alliance is world-wide. It was organized in London in 1826. It is best known by the subjects for the week of prayer which it prepares. The American branch is twenty years old. It proposes to unite the churches in co-operative work. More than half the population of the United States never darken a church door. In a section in New York city, having 60,000, there are three churches and one hundred saloons. In a section in Chicago, having 60,000, there are no churches and 153 saloons. How can the chasm between the churches and the masses be bridged. Let the churches form themselves into a visiting committee and the homes of the churchless be visited regularly once a month. Three hundred visitors can visit 3,000 homes and only make ten visits each per month. This tree will yield its fruit every month. It has been tried in Oswego, Mansfield and Philadelphia. Christianity is the leaven. But what if the leaven be in one pan and the dough in another? They must be brought together. It is our only salvation. The public schools are the digestive organ of the body politic. Through them our foreigners will be Americanized. Dr. McGlynn, attacking the Roman hierarchy, is a possibility because of the public schools. They must be guarded against the insidious attempts of Rome to capture them. The floods of immigrants that are pouring in upon us, the anarchists, the intrigues of Romanism, the strained relations between labor and capital, the liquor traffic, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism and political corruption, make an impending crisis. The future weal or woe of this nation will be determined in the next twenty years. The American Alliance holds a convention in Washington, D. C., Dec. 7th, 8th and 9th. Dr. Strong desired a delegation of sixty from Rochester.

On Sabbath evening I preached on the "Dominion of Christ" in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. John Graham, pastor. They occupy an elegant brick building on Alexander Street. They have only been in this house since September. It is perhaps the best in the body. Rev. James P. Sankey, the Dr. Morehead of Rochester, has a congregation of 400 on Allen Street. This city is well supplied with churches. The Baptists are strong here. The Presbyterians are also numerous. Rev. James B. Shaw, of the Brick church, has been in that charge since 1840. The Methodists are likewise here in force.

The Rochester University, established in 1847, is doing a grand work. It has an endowment, including productive and unproductive property, amounting to about $1,000,000. It has two courses of instruction, the classical and scientific. "Two thousand two hundred and sixty hours are spent in the recitation room by a student in his entire course." Martin B. Anderson, LL.D., is president. Profs. Kendrick, Quinby, Lattimore, Mixer, Gilmore, Morey, Webster, Burton and Forbes are among the faculty. Men graduating here have become presidents of colleges, senators, judges, professors in theological seminaries and editors. The Rochester Theological Seminary was established in 1850. Their endowment is little less than that of the University. They have graduated more than 1,000 students. Both are Baptist institutions.

Rochester has a population of 100,000. It is a city of beautiful and luxurious homes. It is widely known as the home of Hiram Sibley, the seed-man. I. W. Powers, the banker, whose art gallery is unsurpassed in America, is also widely known. The Genesee Falls, where Sam Patch made his fatal leap, are known throughout the land. Yours.

GLIMPSES OF IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The new city of Coin lies some seven miles west of College Springs, and is its nearest railroad point. It has the usual quota of lodges; and also what is not so common—a thriving church opposed to secretism. Rev. Dr. Brown, the pastor, is an uncle of Rev. E. B. Graham, of Omaha, author of "In the Coils." In scattering a few tracts in the business portion of the village, I was informed that the United Presbyterians had an Odd-fellow in their communion, who told them that if they would not take him with his Odd-fellowship, he would go to another church; but he was retained because he was popular and had money. I at once called on the United Presbyterian pastor and learned from him that the story was without foundation so far as he knew. He did not know of a secretist in his church.

"What kind of a paper is this?" said a Kansas man on the train to whom a Cynosure was handed?

"It is opposed to secret societies."

"That is good," said the gentleman, "for they are humbugs. I was an Odd-fellow in the town where I live, and the principles of Odd-fellowship are good, all right; but you must judge of an institution, not by what it says but by what it does. The Knights of Labor pass resolutions against destroying property and wrecking trains and then members and officers lead in acts of violence, as at St. Louis."

"Why did I leave? because of the practical workings of the institution. The saloon-keeper was received into membership. Another member contracted a loathsome disease and was voted $3 per week; the Noble Grand was a doctor, and he kept this brother along, week after week. He did not cure him, but he got the $3! By another scheme one brother cheated another out of $100. And so I learned that that kind of brotherly love was a humbug."

ELDER HUDDLESTON'S TRIALS.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We are sorry to inform you of the death of Johnnie F. Huddleston, son of Rev. P. A. Huddleston. Johnnie was only eight years old, but a youth of a very bright intellect. The bereaved father and mother have the tender sympathy of many devoted friends.

I speak in honor of his father who has made a respectable history in life as a minister of the Gospel. Elder Huddleston has only a limited education; but the Lord has supplied his deficiency with wisdom by the Holy Spirit, and has enabled him to do great good in this work. But his refusal to become a member of any secret organization, has rendered him very unpopular in the eyes of many narrow-minded individuals. Despite all opposition, however, the Elder has triumphed, and still holds his position, contending for truth and justice, and not for the evils of secret organizations.

It has been said, that the poor need not expect help in time of sickness, neither a decent burial at death, if they did not belong to some secret society, but I am glad to say that such was not the case in this instance. The Lord will always provide for his people. During the long period of his own sickness and also at the death of Johnnie, the father received aid from his friends who were in sympathy with him, both white and colored, and without having been solicited. We believe that God has a people to take care of the brother as long as he stands for the right. And now, while the brother in his distress is striving to eradicate the evils of secret organizations, let us with our means assist him in this great work. Let every friend of truth and right stand by the brother and give him our prayers, and means, and bid him God-speed. Respectfully yours,

JUDSON.

FROM A NEW YORK PASTOR'S NOTE-BOOK.

I have lived nine years this fall across the Hudson River from the city of Albany, N. Y., where I can see the principal part of it, (that is, my family lived here though I have preached elsewhere) Albany is almost given over to rum and beer. I question if you could find a church in the city in which they would tolerate a straight-out prohibition lecture. Troy is no better. I met three Roman Catholic priests last week that resembled hard drinkers much more than men of God—what a shame! It is awful that leaders of precious souls are such livers. "What will the harvest be?" Sometimes it seems that we cannot overthrow the rum power. It is entrenched in the appetites and passions. Tobacco, a twin devil with rum, is making havoc with the young men.

I sometimes attend church at my home, and I must confess it pains me to see such constant efforts made by popular preachers to evade the real issue between Christ and the devil. The preaching is artistic in many cases, and, as near as I can judge, rhetorical; just as if human souls which are thirsting for the water of life must be satisfied with finely framed words. In the name of God and humanity what do the preachers suppose souls are made of! Let us have the message of John the Baptist, or the love of John the Evangelist—a few sons of thunder. A large mustache, gold cuff-buttons, fine gesticulations, and a pleasing manner do not move to repentance.

Just such a class of ministers cannot move a tongue against the sin of secretism, or pride, or dishonesty; in fact against nothing which might offend the hearer. Here we have church members who would cause a rebellion in a minute should a word be said against secret societies. Avoid all things that may offend and you drive the nails into the hands and feet of the Son of God afresh. The world and church are in a condition that should alarm us.

Prohibition is marching along. I pray the good Lord to help us. Bro. O. M. Owen, of Utica, N. Y., has launched the Life Boat. He has a mighty struggle before him. He hates the rum devil, and is not afraid to tell it. I hope he will see the desire of his soul—the rescue of thousands through his Life Boat.

Suppose we appoint a day of fasting and prayer for the cause of Christ. I believe it depends much on the nearness of our living to God. Our success must come from God. Vain is the help of man.

I am not a theologian, but I dislike the preaching and singing we hear so frequently. "Our sins are under the blood." I always taught and believed that our sins are all forgiven, and washed away by the blood, and that we are then under the blood, fully justified. We must watch or the devil of antinomianism will corrupt the church. Second probation doctrine is taught because these gentlemen can see a handsomer and safer way to make a good living than to preach openly the doctrine of universalism. I would like to know how they come to the conclusion that eternal punishment is too much. Does not God know? These same smooth-lipped preachers can tolerate abominations by winking at them, and find fault with God's theology. It is a pity they thrust their impudence into the face of God. Yea, they tell us many good things of heaven, a place that perhaps many of their hearers care less about than the lodge or theater. I hope we will be true to God, no difference about bread and butter.

LEVI KELLY.

—In the examination of eighteen young men at Westfield recently for a West Point cadetship, all under twenty years of age, ten were at once ruled out as physically unfit, the medical examiner finding that more than half of the number had a "tobacco heart," such as cigarette smoking produces. The successful candidate was a boy who had been compelled to work in a mill and could devote only his spare hours to books and study.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VII.—Nov. 13.—Christ's Witness to John.—Matt. 11: 2-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He was a burning and a shining light.—John 5: 35.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. John's Inquiry. vs. 2-6. It seems at first sight strange that John should question for a moment Christ's Messiahship. But his whole life and character belonged to the old dispensation rather than the new. Even he had but dim and distorted ideas of what that kingdom of heaven was to be, whose coming he had preached with such fiery earnestness on the banks of the Jordan. And when the days and months rolled by and left him still in prison, there is no cause for wonder that he began to doubt One who never appeared for his deliverance; who taught and labored quietly without stir or tumult, while the nation, God's peculiar people, still remained under the yoke of a heathen power. So we cannot always understand the long-suffering patience of the Lord. Men see injustice and evil and wrong on every side, and they grow doubting, even skeptical. "If there is a God," they say, "why does he allow such things to be?" And yet the world is full of the sweet, silent triumphs of Christianity; the Gospel is slowly but surely bringing in the age of peace and good will to men. And blessed is he who is willing to wait in patient trust that all will come right at last; who finds no occasion for stumbling when Christ appears in unlooked for shapes and ways. Our only answer to the skeptic must still be the same that was sent to John; let the fruits of our holy religion testify to the truth and divinity of its Founder.

2. Christ's Witness to John. vs. 7-15. We have here a most graphic picture of all true reformers: not a reed shaken with every wind of opinion, every storm of popular clamor; not clothed in soft raiment, like so many so-called labor reformers; but choosing the roughest dress and the rudest fare to the sacrifice of principle. Such are prophets who go before their day and generation preparing the way of the Lord. We see also the different standards by which heaven and earth measure greatness. It was not the Roman Cæsar sitting on the pinnacle of human power, but the helpless, half-forgotten prisoner whom our Lord considered greatest of the human race. And yet so transcendently superior was the new dispensation to the old that the veriest babe in Christ was greater than even John the Baptist, in point of knowledge and privilege. But while all may enter into the kingdom of heaven, now no longer at the doors, not even nigh, to the trusting believer but in his heart, its gates are not open to the indifferent, the slothful, the self-seekers. And this is not through any arbitrary caprice of the divine will, but according to a natural law which is illustrated every day in our own lives and the lives of others. We cannot enjoy properly what we make no effort for. We should not enjoy even heaven easily purchased, and rest would not be rest that had not first been preceded by weariness and toil to make the contrast sweet. Christ's witness to John is the more noticeable from coming just at that time when the latter seemed to doubt him. His divine eye saw that it was but a passing cloud, a spot on the sun. He takes no notice of the clouds of momentary doubt and depression in a heart that truly loves him. "And if ye will receive it"—if ye will divest your minds of prejudice and accept unpopular truths and their equally unpopular teachers, on Christ's witnessing word, we shall be in no danger of committing the mistake of the old Jews, who stoned the prophets, the Eliases God sent to reprove their sins and warn them of his coming judgments. For them who have ears to hear his word needs no interpreter; let them hear.

From Peloubet's Notes.

John the Baptist, born in the summer of B. C. 5, and living more than thirty years in retirement in the wilderness, began his public ministry in the summer of A. D. 26. He preached for nearly two years, when he was imprisoned by Herod, March, A. D. 28, because of his faithfulness in reproving Herod for marrying his brother Philip's wife (Mark 6: 17-20). After a year in the dungeons of Machærus Castle, John was murdered by Herod in the thirty-fourth year of his age, as described in Mark 6: 21-29. At the time of his martyrdom his disciples were still on their mission in Galilee, concerning which we studied in our last two lessons.

"Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ." Of the Messiah, such works as the Messiah would be expected to do. These works were (1) his miracles, as the raising from the dead the son of the widow of Nain, just before this time; (2) his methods of teaching and preaching so different from John's; (3) his eating with publicans and sinners; (4) his neglect of the Jewish fasts (Mark 2. 18) and the traditions of the Pharsees (Mark 7: 5.)

"Those things which ye do hear and see." Observe, Christ makes no direct answer, affords no peculiar evidence, but leaves his faith to rest on the common evidence on which the faith of all the disciples is built. So Christ solves our doubts by pointing to those evidences of Christianity which are open to all.—Abbott. It is not new promises that we need, but new light on the old; not a new Bible, but new views on that which we have; not new evidences, but to see how many and great are the old.

"Preached to them." Why is the Gospel for the poor? 1. The controlling force of the community will come sooner or later from those who are poor. 2. They are representatives of the majority of men. 3 They are more apt to feel their need of the Gospel. 4. It tends to equalize and bind together the different classes of society.—Prof. E. A. Park.

"A reed shaken by the wind." Did you go to see a fickle, undecided man, the sport of every influence that blew upon him?—Morison. "So far from being a reed, shaken by the wind of popular opinion, John was a rock, which stood unmoved though beaten by storms of suffering"—Wordsworth.

"There hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." No one has done more to bring the kingdom of God on earth. No individual of the children of men, in any age, has been superior to John in greatness of soul. None has excelled him in magnanimity of spirit, in self-denial, in disinterested and heroical devotedness to the service of God, and to the interests of the kingdom of God. —Morison.

"He that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he" The least of the greatest is greater than the greatest of the least.—Maldonatus. It does not mean greater in personal character, nor in eternal condition, but in present privilege, prerogative, station, as the least child is greater than the highest servant. John was a servant, we are sons, of God. There is a significance, too, in the language used here, "born of women." Whoever enters the kingdom of heaven is born of the Holy Ghost.—Abbott.

"The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence," etc. The metaphor is that of a city to which long siege has been laid, and into which at last the victorious troops pour joyfully, seizing on it as their prey. The preaching of John the Baptist inaugurated the new dispensation, in which the poor had the Gospel preached unto them. Crowds thronged to hear him, as now they were thronging to hear Christ, eager to seize hold of the kingdom which both John and Jesus declared to be at hand. There was no such eagerness to lay hold on the preaching of the scribes; this very contrast was an evidence that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, and it dated from the advent of John, who was thus pointed out as the messenger sent before the Lord (ver. 10), the Elias that was for to come (ver. 14). —Abbott. The expression is evidently metaphorical, denoting the violent bursting forth of the kingdom of heaven, as the kernel of the ancient theocracy, through the husk of the Old Testament. John and Christ are themselves the violent who take it by force,—the former, as commencing the assault; the latter, as completing the conquest. Accordingly, this is a figurative description of the great era which had then commenced.—Lange.

"He that hath ears to hear," etc. This usually follows an important statement, intimating that he who has the discernment to understand will find the deeper meaning. Here it suggests: Christ meant more than that John was Elijah, even that he himself was the Messiah. Then, as now, properly to understand the Scriptures we must know Christ.—Rev. Com.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—The following proclamation was issued late this afternoon by the President of the United States:

The goodness and the mercy of God which have followed the American people during all the days of the past year claim their grateful recognition and humble acknowledgement. By his omnipotent power he has protected us from war and pestilence and from every national calamity; by his gracious favor the earth has yielded a generous return to the labors of the husbandman, and every path of honest toil has led to comfort and contentment; by his loving kindness the hearts of our people have been replenished with fraternal sentiment and patriotic endeavor, and by his unerring guidance we have been directed in the way of national prosperity.

To the end that we may, with one accord, testify our gratitude for all these blessings, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the 24th day of November next, as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer, to be observed by all the people of the land.

On that day let all secular work and employment be suspended. Let our people assemble in their accustomed places of worship, and with prayer and songs of praise give thanks to our Heavenly Father for all he has done for us, while we humbly implore the forgiveness of our sins, and a continuance of his mercy. Let families and kindred be reunited on that day; and let their hearts, filled with kindly cheer and affectionate reminiscences, be turned in thankfulness to the source of all their pleasures and Giver of all that makes the day glad and joyous.

And in the midst of our people and our happiness let us remember the poor, the needy, and the unfortunate, and by our gifts of charity and ready benevolence let us increase the number of those who with grateful hearts shall join in our Thanksgiving.

In witness whereof I have set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this twenty fifth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eigh y-seven, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twelfth.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1887.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

PORTLAND, Me., Oct. 26, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came here via Montreal. On the train was a gentlemanly pleasant man from Ticonderoga, N. Y., having a wife and six children. He had sent $25 to a Canadian lodge, and was next week to be initiated, intending, as I inferred, to keep his initiation from the knowledge of his wife. I remonstrated—urged that if his wife, in his absence, should join a society and swear to conceal its proceedings from him during life, he would divorce or forsake her! My earnestness attracted a youngerly man who broke in with the usual talk: "I am a Mason." "There is no wrong in it;" and "you know nothing about it," etc.

"Sir," said I, "did you not swear to have your throat cut if you told the truth about your institution?" He refused to answer, but was brassy and went on.

"You see, sir," said I to the first gentleman, "what you must swear to, after being stripped next week."

The intruder began to vociferate, when I refused to talk with him, saying, "I have not sworn to lie and you have." I then plead with the first man not to deal so unworthily with the wife who had nursed his babes, and promised if he would put off joining I would furnish him reading which would surely convince him. I hope he will not join.

Crossing the Canada line I found an agreeable young minister on his way to the Portland anniversary. He had just joined the lodge, being urged to it by his church members. I fear the Congregational ministry are surrendering to the "accursed thing." The papers, the Mirror and Congregationalist, give no warning, and the poor ministers yield to the harlot embraces of the lodge. It is terrible.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The anniversary fills the large church. The exercises are interesting—very. Secretary Strieby read the ablest and best article I ever heard from him. His theme was the abolition of caste in the South. I resolved to get his speech and repeat his argument in New Orleans; but, to my astonishment Dr. A. H. Quint was called, and made a long army-speech, such as interests a crowd. Dr. Quint, years ago, in the Congregationalist, boasted of receiving favors from a rebel, liquor-selling landlord in the region (South) of which he was speaking. I asked who put him a 32 deg. Mason, and defiant Masonic Grand Chaplain, to speak for the American Missionary Association, which is opposed to lodgery. I was told the Boston Secretary put him in the programme, and a secretary said he thought "Dr. Quint had changed from what he was."

I leave Portland to-morrow morning, and must know which side the secretaries are on before I ask our readers to walk in fellowship with Dr. A. H. Quint, who uses the religious bodies, as Masons use funerals, not to mourn the dead, but to spread the devil-worship of the lodge. If Dr. Quint has "changed" he can easily say so. As things are he is drawing in the young ministers to the ruin of society and the damnation of souls! The young clergyman above mentioned is an instance. The American Missionary Association cannot get the vampire lodges out of their Southern churches, by holding up Dr. Quint, who is known to every lodge between the oceans. If the matter could be laid before the noble men and women who crowd these great churches, they would vote such lodge leaders away from their holy meetings. Let us pray fervently that the godly men and women of New England may escape from these lodge-wiles as the bird from the snare of the fowler.

NUNS AND THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Two nuns from a religious house in St. Louis were in the cars coming to Montreal. Conversing on the "Probation after death" theory, it was said, If any sinners are on probation after death, they should surely be prayed for; "that if we get to praying for the dead we may yet join these friends over the way," pointing to the nuns.

One of them spoke up: "We should be very glad to have you do so."

"Well; perhaps you may convert us yet."

"Oh no;" said she; "Our Lord must do that."

On leaving the cars she turned and gave us a neat embroidered card, with a picture of Christ bearing the cross; and on the back the following in short separate lines:

"JESUS COMES DOWN TO EARTH TO BECOME:—Our Friend, our Guide, our Knowledge, our Joy, our Comforter, our Strength, our Defender, our Master, our Hope, our Food.

"He will ascend to heaven to be forever our Reward."

And on the other side, under the picture, a neat engraving in French letters: "Ye pecheur crucifie de noveau Jesus. Le aime fidele panse ses blessures." (The sinner crucifies Jesus afresh. The true friend endeavors to heal his wounds.)

In Portland we are lodged with a most interesting family, Mr. O'Brien, Mrs. O'Brien and five excellent children. The eldest daughter is married to a physician near by. Another daughter aids with her pen the evangelist, Dr. Pentecost. They are all pious, clear-thinking Maine people. Dr. Merriman and lady are my fellow guests. Our pastor Mr. Chittenden was graduated by him at Ripon College, and Mrs. Merriman was a daughter of the Christian patriot, Judge Lockwood, who did more than any other, except perhaps old Gov. Reynolds, to prevent Illinois becoming a slave State.

I had them read the nun's tract, which pleased them all. Dr. Merriman said: "I have no doubt that God has thousands of true children in that church. We must make a wide distinction between 'the Holy Catholic church' and popery; and also between popery and Jesuitism, which now rules the Roman church, though it did not always do so." He then told of a Congregational minister, whom we both knew, who formed a Christian friendship with a Catholic priest, and the priest, when dying sent for the pastor to pray with him, and when several priests came to administer "extreme unction," they were left below till after the Protestant pastor's prayer.

In our talk with the nuns, they approved of simple absolute obedience to priests; and justified it by the example of our Saviour. We replied: "You are surely mistaken. For when Peter, called the first Pope, rebuked Christ and insisted on his not going to Jerusalem, etc., saying, 'Be it far from thee,' the Saviour, so far from submitting to him, said, 'Get thee behind me, Satan!'" The nun made no reply, but looked thoughtful and was silent.

It would seem that the fountains of the great deep of mind are slowly breaking up. May God hasten the day when "the knowledge of the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."

THE MAINE LAW AND MASONRY.

I am sorry to find Portland is not the Mecca of temperance. I went from the cars to a barber shop, in the corner of which sat a young man decently clad, but drunk! He babbled for a few minutes and then sank into a comatose state as dead. I have conversed with several who admit a great amount of drinking. One said the gale had blown eighty ships into the harbor, and perhaps the young man came from one of them. Two others said the sheriff and police did not and would not enforce the law; that liquor gave them business and votes.

I asked, "Does not the Masonic oath hinder the execution of the law?" And one of the first temperance men in the State said, "Out here in Bath, a minister was urging the prosecution of an atrocious saloon; and the lawyer to whom he applied, asked, 'Are not you a Mason?'

"'I am,' replied the minister.

"'Well,' said the attorney, 'that man is a Mason; and you had better let him alone.' So the case was dropped."

My informant was a member of a temperance lodge. He said he had no doubt there were numerous cases like the one he related, and of which he knew the parties.

The readers of the Cynosure cannot too often or too deeply feel and be urged to remember, that lodge-worship is devil-worship, and that Christ alone has power to cast out devils; and that he requires believing, fervent, persevering prayer; and that will do it.

GEN. NEAL DOW

is near 87, but is hale and hearty and has superintended the erection of houses this summer. He is a truthful, simple-hearted, honest man, which is greater than to be a popular statesman. The Good Templars gave him no rest till they got him to submit to initiation some ten years ago, but like Dr. Jewett, and John B. Gough, and Gen. Fiske, he quit their night-worships with loathing. It is a pity he still pays dues to their dark mill of rites—much worse than a cider-mill—though beyond vinegar and apple sauce, we might spare the cider-mill.

Gen. Dow is a Quaker and his family Congregationalists. Of this latter denomination there are eight churches in Portland; and if they could be reached, ninety out of a hundred would abhor the lodges. But their Mirror is a cloud to keep out light.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION

was born amid the clanking of a continent of chains. It now meets in the silence of those fetters fallen. It drew to it the best men and women on earth, and its management have done brave things against the Southern lodges. But Satan, who intruded himself into the counsels of the Almighty in the days of Micaiah the prophet; and who followed Paul and Silas in their revival meetings, hangs onto and hounds the Association, now that it is popular, though he used to mob it, and drive it into the outskirts of cities and towns where it met. The National Christian Association is not named by its secretaries' list of benevolent causes, though the Falstaff "Grand Army of the Republic," whose very title is a falsehood, had honorable mention. Let us pray for the A. M. A. It has the grandest field in the world, and the grandest constituency of all the missionary societies.

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

The three weeks' convention of this order, lately closed at Minneapolis, was a meeting of much significance to that order, inasmuch as it confirmed the conservative rule of Powderly, which it has been disputed was at an end. There is no doubt he is wearying of the effort to hold such turbulent elements in subjection, and probably would have resigned some time since, but for the fact that with him will depart the confidence of the Pope and the Catholic hierarchy in the order, and nearly one-half the membership would be ordered out by their priest. Thus his resignation means ruin. This pressure will keep him at the head of the order so long as it can possibly be held together.

A few details will give some idea of this long and wrangling meeting. The General Secretary, Litchman, presented a very voluminous report. The number of members in good standing at the last session of the General Assembly was 702,924, and the number of members in arrears, 26,753. This made the apparent membership of the order, as then reported, 729,677. The total number of members reported in good standing July 1 is, in round numbers, 485,000. A large number are yet in arrears, which will bring the total above500,000. An attempt to secure an endorsement of the anarchists was defeated by the personal influence and passionate entreaty of Powderly, who saw ruin in the measure, since to vote it would at the same time vote to alienate the Catholic church, and almost that entire social and political influence which has upheld Powderly and endured the order for his sake. A two-days' fight came on near the close over the attempt to drive Bailey and Barry from the General Executive Board by reducing it to five members and making them the appointees of Powderly. This extremely despotic measure was defeated, and to balance its crushing effect a vote of confidence was given the head of the order. It was thus a drawn battle at Minneapolis; but a manifesto has been signed by some thirty-five delegates, representing over a hundred thousand members of the order, charging the Powderly administration with losing every important strike or lockout, reducing the membership by 217,000 names, increasing the annual expenditures to $500,000, and general blundering, extravagance, arbitrary rulings, and using the funds of the order for private purposes. These charges number twenty, and indicate plenty of fight left in the bosom of the socialistic and radical minority.

But, except for the endorsement of Powderly's efforts to promote temperance in the ranks, there seems to have been no action which has any direct bearing on the grievances of workingmen. Boycotts were ordered, Chinese membership refused, Negro members commended, measures taken to extend the order to foreign countries, but outside the lines of this secret society the laborer was forgotten. The order adds to its despotic principles and its secretism that supreme selfishness which is the universal supplement of lodgery. Every year that passes proves it to be a grievous burden upon the working classes, and they will desert it hereafter in greater crowds than ever.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman has donated a library of medical works to his friend and late co-worker, J. Augustus Cole, to be used for his proposed Industrial School in Africa.

—Bro. Hinman, leaving Mobile, went to New Orleans via Pensacola, Florida, and spent a week in very encouraging work for the national convention. The local outlook for that meeting he regards very hopeful. On Saturday last he went to New Iberia for a brief visit with Bro. Gunner and other friends in that interesting town.

—Secretary Stoddard writes of a good meeting at Princeton, Missouri, after which he visted our old friend George W. Needels at Albany, on Friday. The letter reporting this visit we are constrained to put over a week. From Albany brethren Stoddard and Butler went rapidly to Greenfield in Dade county, to be early on the ground for the southern district meeting. From both meetings we hope for a good report next week.

—The Nebraska State Journal has a brief notice of the death of Oliver B. Wilcox at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Davis, in Lincoln, on the 19th ult. Bro. Wilcox resided for many years in Batavia and Wheaton, Ill., and was highly respected in all relations of life. He was deacon of the Congregational church, Batavia, and elder in the College church at Wheaton. His recovery from a long and perplexing disease that had brought him near to the grave by the evident power of God in answer to prayer was reported in the Cynosure at the time. He removed a year or two later to Nebraska to be near his children. He was a godly man, never wavering in his convictions of Christian duty, and true to Christ against the great foe of the lodge.

THE OHIO AGENT asks the patience of his coworkers in that State. He has for a week or two been attending to private business, but this week takes the field again. He sends this brief appeal along with an excellent report of Dr. Munhall's discourse on separation in which he arraigns the lodges. This account we have not room for this week. Ohio friends read and rally to this appeal from your agent:

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS: What we want, and what we must have, is the anointing of the Holy Spirit for the great work that is before us this winter. Thousands are going to hell on every side. There are in this city of Columbus about seventy-five churches, as many or more lodges and 500 saloons and devil-traps. Is it not time that we were awake and at work? Every one who thinks so please meet in New Concord, Nov. 16th and 17th, and plan with me the methods of carrying the battle to the gates. Yours for Christ and reform,

W. B. STODDARD.

THE OHIO CONVENTION

Will be held at New Concord, Muskingum county, November 16th and 17th, opening at 9 A. M. of Wednesday, the 16th. Addresses will be given by President Smith, Revs. W. A. Coleman and William Dillon, Secretary J. P. Stoddard, State Agent W. B. Stoddard, and the closing address by Pres C. A. Blanchard. Entertainment as usual will be provided for those coming from a distance. It is especially desired that all churches in sympathy appoint at once as large a delegation as they may think best to represent them at this convention. Let the friends come praying for a glorious blessing, that we may go forth stronger for Christ in the future.

SECRET LODGES IN INDIA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The article in your paper of August 4th, on "Oath-bound Secrecy in India," is good but weak in one point. It quite underrates the power and influence of the lodge in India. The writer will feel its power if he only fights it a little! Errors and heresies of all sorts seem small to those who do not enter the lists against them. His point is that Masonry "has not made any deep impression on the native mind," etc. But the truth is that it is getting hold of just that section of the native community that are becoming the most powerful, and must eventually lead the whole land. I open the directory to one station, Secunderabad; here are five lodges. All have natives as members; in some the majority are natives; all have some native officers. At a recent public installation in Allahabad some natives took a prominent part. The article you quote has some sadly misleading statements. All that about Freemasonry being "looked upon as a foreign religion," etc., may be true enough as to the great mass of people who are not wanted by Masons, but it is not true of thousands of more advanced natives whose brains and money Masonry courts. In the lodge lists before me are Hindus, Mohammedans, and Parsees. "Worshipful Brother Ardaseer Rutlanjee, W. M.; Right Worshipful Brother Razanath Parsad, R. W. M.; Most Excellent Companion Mirza Mahamod Alli Khan, P. H.;" and so on with the oriental worthies. Instead of being repelled by this "foreign religion," the educated native is naturally drawn by this shallow, showy form of religion,—a Christianity without Christ, a high-sounding, gaudy trumpery over mumblings of mysticism. It is European heathenism which the Asiatic can link upon his own heathenism. So they mix up their theories, pegs and morals.

When will the anti secrecy leaders in America see that they should battle against these evils in India, as well as in the United States? If you who are fighting the powers of darkness there could only realize the great need of other lands, you would surely enlarge your labors. You would make it a mission work, and the friends would give you the means to promote it. Our first great need is books, pamphlets, and tracts. A Mission Fund should be opened at once at the office of the Cynosure to send anti-secrecy books to India. And let any who are moved to, correspond directly with us; address as below. Let all whose eyes are open, rouse to work and pray as never before against this mock religion which is so cruelly hindering souls from entering the way of salvation.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

JOHN B. FINCH MEMORIAL SERVICE IN THE PEOPLE'S CHURCH.

Rev. J. W. Hamilton's pet scheme, the People's (Methodist) Church, corner Columbus Avenue and Berkeley Street, was crowded Sunday, 23d inst., by the friends of the late John B. Finch, and the temperance cause, and shall I add—the Independent Order of Good Templars, and Sons of Temperance, etc., on which occasion, a memorial service was held in honor of the great total abstinence advocate. The service, which was rendered the more impressive from the fact that Mr. Finch was to lecture on that platform on that very day, consisted of vocal and instrumental music, and eulogistic addresses by Messrs. Eugene H. Clapp, M. W. P. of S. T.; Benjamin R. Jewell; Revs. Richard Eddy, D.D; J. W. Hamilton, D.D., A. A. Miner, D.D., C. E. Davis, pastor of People's church; and Mrs. Helen G. Rice of the W. C. T. U.

John B. Finch was not a local champion of the cause of temperance. His field was as extensive as the United States, and his reputation extended far beyond their limits, across the great pond to Europe, where thousands paid homage to him as high-cocklorum of the I. O. G. T. Lest somebody might accuse me of being uncharitable to the memory of the departed, I will herewith parenthetically explain that I refer only to his position as supreme officer of the said order. I believe that Mr. Finch held that office, not for personal, or selfish motives, but for the good he honestly thought he could accomplish thereby. I may be mistaken, however. To use Rev. Mr. Eddy's words, verbatim, in reference to this point, "It may be said of Mr. Finch with absolute truth that he cared nothing for the Good Templar organization as an end or for a place of power in it. The end which he and all Good Templars look forward to was the annihilation of the liquor traffic. The means to this end may be various. Good Templarism is but one of the many preferred by those who are members of that organization." Mr. Eddy, whose address was biographical, rather than strictly eulogistic, also stated that the fallen warrior had joined the order, at whose head he stood when he fell, about fifteen years ago. He was initiated in the Grand Lodge of New York. In 1880 he was elected Grand Chief Templar, to which office he was re-elected in 1881. In 1878 he had received the R. W. G. degree, and continued an active member, up to his death, of the Elected Right Worthy Grand Templars. Mr. Eddy also intimated that the fundamental principle of the order had been his educator, and that he had amply repaid, by his adherence to it, all he had ever received. His one great aim had been to heal the breach which divided the order when he first entered. He had succeeded in accomplishing this the spring of the present year. He had been untiring in his efforts to increase the order, and when he died, ruled over 700,000 men and women, a constituency scattered over the world, on which the sun never sets.

"John B. Finch," said Dr. A. A. Miner, "was a strong man with a tender heart. While his sympathy embraced the world, he had an iron nerve. His eyes were wide open to the indescribable woes flowing from the liquor traffic and drinking usages of society. He saw clearly that neither of the great political parties could overthrow that traffic. Though of the strictest sect a Methodist, he was through other sympathies a Universalist."

Mr. Benj. R. Jewell said: "I would not claim a perfect character, but I do feel that he ranked among those who are truest and best. We miss his smiling face and his happy greetings, but amid the sorrow of his absence we remember our loss is his gain."

Mr. Clapp eulogized: "John B. Finch was a comprehensive man in all his purposes and ideas. We desire to rear a monument so that in the years to come it will perpetuate his memory and virtues. Granite may crumble, marble may decay, but in our hearts and lives a better memorial has been built than falls to the usual lot of man." Mr. Clapp, who is M. W. P. of S. T., also said that he always found in Mr. Finch a ready and wise counsellor in matters appertaining to his own order.

Mr. George Kempton, secretary of the State Prohibition party, read an interesting poem dedicated to the deceased. Rev. J. W. Hamilton spoke good words concerning Mr. Finch, and predicted a glorious success to the principles he left behind.

On the programme of the service was printed the closing and last utterance of Mr. Finch's lecture at Lynn, one hour before his death:

"Boys, we can't offer you offices; but if you want a chance to fight for mother, home and conscience, and against the grog-shop and monopolies, come with us, and we will carry the banner of Prohibition until in the White House sits a man who believes in the principles of the Prohibition party."

John B. Finch was human; let us remember his many virtues, and forget and forgive his faults and his mistakes. D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The other morning, just about the dawn of day, when the President and Mrs. Cleveland quietly arrived from their long tour, they looked as bright and fresh as if they had only returned from a drive to Oak View, instead of having been absent three weeks, traveled 4,500 miles through seventeen States, and met millions of American citizens, who gladly greeted their distinguished guests with a continuous round of festivities. Both the President and his wife expressed themselves as delighted with their travels and charmed with the cordiality and hospitality of their reception, as well as greatly pleased at the indications of the substantial evidences of the progress and prosperity of the great and growing region through which they passed. No doubt the trip will be of material benefit to both the people and the President.

The Supreme Court of the United States is at present the center of popular interest at the Capital, as well as elsewhere, on account of a number of important cases to be tried, among which I may mention that of the Chicago Anarchists, and the prohibition cases from Kansas, Iowa and Georgia. The adjudication of the last named cases will determine the constitutionality of State prohibitory legislation and will, besides, involve millions of dollars, for in the event that the decision is adverse to such enactments, the States will be made pecuniarily responsible for breaking up the liquor traffic without compensation to the dealers. Thus it can be readily perceived what an immense responsibility rests on our highest court in this class of cases.

Last week the representatives of most the Agricultural Colleges and agricultural experiment stations in the United States had a meeting in this city for the purpose of interchanging views, with the hope of advancing the weighty interests committed to their charge—the convention having assembled under the auspices of Congress. The deliberations of this body of educated farmers—both practical and theoretical—were of such a character as to give promise of the most flattering and satisfactory results.

As I may have remarked before, Washington is a great place for national conventions, and it may at no distant day be designated as the city of conventions as well as of "magnificent distances." The project to have the National Democratic Convention meet here in 1888 continues to grow in popular favor, and it is probable that a great and united endeavor will be put forth to that end. There are many who believe that properly directed efforts will secure for the Capital both the National conventions of the two great political parties. I see that the National Republican Committee is called to meet in this city on December 8th next.

Washington is not free from labor troubles, as the Knights of Labor here are thoroughly organized and assert themselves in a vigorous and aggressive manner. In a few days there will be a great demonstration—it being the purpose to parade 10,000 men—as a protest against the verdict of the Washington Judge who pronounced a boycott a common conspiracy. Such efforts to establish an odious foreign practice should alarm workingmen of patriotic spirit.

The Capital is becoming notorious for bloody murders, generally occurring on Saturday nights, and mostly being the work of colored roughs. Of the eight men now confined in the District jail on the charge of murder, seven are negroes. The District Commissioners must be pleased with this result of their open saloons and places of debauchery, tempting weak men with wages just in pocket to drink, carouse and fight. *

The Home.

ONLY IN THEE.

Fain would I be strong with the heart of the brave,
All fearless in conflict, all calm in defeat;
Fain would I be patient, Lord; patience I crave;
In pain to be silent, submissive and sweet.
O where shall I find it, the strength I would win,
As pilgrim I journey through peril and sin;
My Master, my Saviour, my help is in thee,
In thee is my help, Lord, 'tis only in thee.

Fain would I be gentle, whatever betide,
And meek, unresisting, returning no word
In haste or in anger to those at my side
Who may grieve or annoy me. Thy gentleness, Lord,
Bestow on thy child that her looks may be fair
And mildness distill from her speech,and her care
Be laid at thy feet; for whatever it be,
In thee is my help, Lord, and only in thee.

Fain would I be faithful, so daily to prove
To those whom I meet that my life has a spring
Abundant in beauty and precious in love,
And that close to the Vine in my earth-life I cling.
Fain would I be faithful, nor follow afar;
Fain would I abide where thy chosen ones are;
My Master, my Saviour, be gracious to me,
In thee is my help, Lord, and only in thee.

Fain would I be cheerful and sing as I go,
Uplifting thy praises through darkness and dawn;
Fain wear a white robe, not the garment of woe,
And joyously, blithely and gaily go on.
O bid me to triumph and smile through my tears,
O crown me a victor o'er trials and fears.
My Master, my Master, my joy is in thee,
In thee is my help, Lord, and only in thee.

LIFE'S EVENING.

BY I. N. KANAGA.

In the morning of life it is all anticipation. Our cheeks are flushed with bright hopes. We are then most apt to view things with expectations the most luminous and joyous. Yet these bright hopes are not always realized, nor our skies above us remain forever cloudless and full of sunshine as we fondly expected.

Yet with the good man every day ought to bring its hallowed joys and its cheering prospectives. Especially should this be so, if life has been well spent in spite of adverse surroundings. See that hoary-headed one whose feet have always been found in the way of righteousness. Like a ripe shock in its season, so is his head crowned with glory while his fruit shakes like Lebanon.

Though that good man's quiet hours may be employed in humble toil, yet he is happy, supremely happy and joyous. His daily joys along life's evening slope may never be known to the stranger to such joys, yet they oft overflow and rise indeed to holy rapture. Evening as it slowly advances grows more luminous and full of blessed realizations!

Content now sits blessedly quiet and restful upon his brow. His happy tasks are now well completed and as he looks to his future home above, faith waves her hands in cheerful triumph! Sunset is nigh and eternal rest is waiting just beyond. And now in wondrous melody hear him break forth into song—

"My sun of life is setting fast—
My triumph is begun!"

Beloved, how is it with you now in life's evening? How is it with me? I will tell you to God's glory. My life has never been spent with the great multitude in the service of sin nor in the pursuit of the pleasures of the world. I have ever aspired to walk above the paths of evil men and away from the vain allurements of the world around me. And now when I look forth from life's west windows I look with great comfort upon the past and infinite gladness upon the bright scenes that lie before me. The world and sin recede in the dim distance, while visions of the better land loom up before me with immeasurable brightness and pleasure! I care not to live this earthly life over again only that I may save more of my fellow men and thus bring more glory to my blessed Lord. From a little boy now to my three-score and ten I have loved and served God and now I run with joyous expectation to embrace the life beyond me only a little way, a life "eternal in the heavens!" Then I will still look on and up and sing—

"Thy life's sunrise was brilliant—
Its sunset is gladly sweet,
Since it brings longed-for rest
To my weary pilgrim feet!"

FALSE TO THEIR CHILDREN.

Susanna Wesley gave to the world sons from the school of strict discipline. She never allowed her children to cry aloud after they were a year old. With her numerous family she was teacher and preacher as well as the most considerate of mothers, and hence the result. One reason of much of the ungodliness of religious teachers' children is that the father and mother were living lives of sensualism and open sin when their children were born and being raised. Thus they have sown to the wind and are now, though saved themselves,reaping the whirlwind. Again,the selfishness of the parents is manifested in sentimental love that palliates, covers up and excuses sin in our own that would be denounced unsparingly in others. Religious professors and teachers teach the utterly lost and fallen condition of all, but there is a good deal of mental reservation when pinned down in their feelings as to their own offspring. And if the real sentiment of many hearts were unveiled it would be found that they were joined in heart with the unregenerate to fight God who is the personification of holiness,who "abhors and hates sin" as well as loves righteousness. To hate iniquity to the extinction of life itself in ourselves is a test that Christ makes of true discipleship to the God of holiness. Another reason why children are unsaved and eternally lost by shoals from Christian homes is they are depending upon the love of God and the parents' and church's prayers,not knowing that these very means of grace, if not improved upon, are the swiftest and surest sources of damnation revealed in the Book of God. "A savor of life unto life or of death unto death."

We have been sorely tried and terribly pained to hear parents, in the midst of a God-defying, Christ-rejecting, rebellious, stubborn set of father-and-mother - dishonoring children, whom God's Word declares their "eyes the ravens of the valley shall pluck out," get down upon their knees in their midst and tell these children in prayer that they knew God would save them, thus making God a liar and propping up their deceived children in a false hope and encouraging them to pursue the chosen path of evil with the pious parents' assurance before God that the end would be all right. Eli was a type of most of the religious teachers in this age as regards the training of his children—hence the same result follows. God's curse rested upon Eli and his house because he failed to discipline his children, but He revealed his secrets to Abraham because of the opposite principle upon which he governed his household. "And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do,seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation and all of the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him? For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken." Eli by human sentiment raised preachers' children that cursed the land. While Abraham, by the stern hand of law and discipline,binding his Isaac to God's altar a whole burnt offering to God, has made his name the father of the faithful and through his numerous posterity the Christ of God was manifested to the world.

Is it not about time we had a little thorough instruction from God's Word and find out the cause of ungodly children and remedy it. Jesus said of the devil-possessed boy, "This kind goeth not forth but by fasting and prayer." A good deal less of sentimental effervescence, "Beulah Land," self-glorification songs in our services,more of stern law preached, and down we must come from the mount of transfiguration to cast out the devils from our children and the sons of men by fasting, prayer, Gethsemane and the Calvary route that crucifies the world to us and us to the world.—Fire and Hammer.

EDUCATING CHILDREN.

When Moses, the great lawgiver of Israel, would impress the commandments of Jehovah upon that people, he says, "These words which I command thee this day shall be in thy heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children."

That is, whet, or sharpen it upon them. In whetting an article, you turn the thing whetted on this side and on that side, and often repeat the strokes; and so in teaching children, the mind is affected, not by the violence, but by the frequency of the impression. The minds of children, like narrow-necked bottles, must be filled slowly, drop by drop. Special care must be taken to make things plain unto them, and to make the instruction as much as can be, not a task or burden, but easy and pleasant. Children are half taught when they are reconciled to instruction.—Sel.

THE IRON WOLF.

"I conducted, two months ago," said a clergyman, "the funeral services of one of my parishioners. He had been a farmer. Forty years ago he commenced work with one hundred acres of land, and he ended with one hundred. He was a skilful, industrious workingman, but he had laid by no money in the bank. I understood the reason as I listened to the comments of his friends and neighbors.

"'It was always a warm, hospitable house,' said one. 'The poor man was never turned away from that door. His sons and daughters all received the best education which his means could command. One is a clergyman, one a civil engineer, two are teachers—all lead useful and happy lives.'

"Said another: 'Those children sitting there and weeping are the orphans of a friend. He gave them a home. That crippled girl is his wife's niece. She lived with them for years. That young fellow who is also weeping so bitterly, was a waif that he rescued from the slums of the city.'

"And so the story went on—not of a miser who had heaped dollar upon dollar, but of a servant of God who had helped many lives, and had lifted many of them out of misery and ignorance into life and joy.

"On my way home from the funeral I stopped at the farm of another parishioner, who said to me in a shrill, rasping tone:

"'So poor Gould is dead! He left a poor account—not a penny more than he got from his father. Now I started with nothing; and look here,' pointing to his broad fields. 'I own down to the creek! D'ye know why? When I started to keep house I brought this into it the first thing,' taking an iron savings-bank in the shape of a wolf out of the closet. 'Every penny I could save went into its jaws. It is surprising how many pennies you can save when you've a purpose. My purpose was to die worth $100,000. Other folks ate meat; we ate molasses. Other folks dressed their wives in merino; mine wore calico. Other men wasted money on schooling; my boys and girls learned to work early and keep it up late. I wasted no money on churches, sick people, paupers, and books. And,' he concluded triumphantly, 'now I own to the creek; and that land with the fields yonder, and the stock in the barns, are worth $100,000. Do you see?'

"And on the thin, hard lips was a wretched attempt to laugh. The house was bare and comfortless; his wife, worn out with work, had long ago gone to her grave. Of his children, taught only to make money a god, one daughter, starved in body and mind, was still drudging in the kitchen; one son had taken to drink, having no other resource, and died in prison. The other, a harder miser than his father, remained at home to fight with him over every penny wrung out of their fertile fields.

"Yesterday I buried this man," continued the clergyman. "Neither neighbor nor friend, son nor daughter, shed a tear over him. His children were eager to begin the quarrel for the ground he had sacrificed his life to earn. Of it all he had now only enough to cover his decaying body. Economy for a noble purpose is a virtue; but in the houses of some it is avarice, and, like a wolf, devours intelligence, religion, hope and life itself."—Friendly Companion.

VIOLET'S SACRIFICE.

It was Violet's fifteenth birthday. It seemed as if no year had ever brought such a host of pretty presents, and now at bed-time, when Violet came to her dainty room, she found mamma's gift. It was a white plush banner with cherry trimmings, and this text painted on it by mamma's skillful fingers: "Bear ye one another's burdens."

Violet was the only child, and everything that wealth and boundless love could procure was lavished upon her. A year ago she had given her heart to the Saviour. It had been very easy to believe that he loved her, when her life had been so full of sunshine, and she truly loved him in return.

Ever since Violet could remember, her mamma had given her a birthday verse to think of through the year. As she now settled down into the soft depths of her arm-chair and gazed thoughtfully at her gift, she wondered why this particular text had been chosen. Nobody in her circle of acquaintance seemed to have any burdens, and Violet had no troubles of her own. She half wished that mamma had not placed the banner in such a conspicuous position over her little table, for the words seemed to stare at her in a very uncomfortable manner.

But if the text had been less conspicuous, it might have been entirely forgotten in the glad days that followed. Such a delightful thing was to happen to Violet! She was going to Europe! Uncle George and Aunt Mary were planning a trip, and they had begged Judge Clinton to let his little daughter accompany them. She was almost beside herself with joy. The wonderful things that she had read and heard and dreamed about—she was to see them all. And they would visit the Holy Land! It seemed almost too good to come true; only good things were always coming true in Violet's life.

Then came the busy days of getting ready; the shopping with mamma, the planning with the dressmaker and the good-by calls. In the midst of all these pleasant preparations, Violet had to look sometimes at her motto, and wonder if there were any burdens that she could lighten. Perhaps she was a little more thoughtful—a little more careful not to trouble others for what she could do as well herself. Mamma thought so sometimes. It was Thursday, and they were to go on Monday. The big trunk was already in the hall, waiting for a few more parcels before it should be closed. Violet had been trying on her pretty traveling-dress, and ran down to the sewing-room to show it to the dressmaker.

"I think, Mrs. Gilman, that these sleeves are a little too long. And don't you think—"

Violet stopped short. The woman's work had fallen upon the floor, and she sat with her face buried in her hands. She was a pale little widow whom their former dressmaker, who was now ill, had recommended. She looked up apologetically after a minute, and took up her work again, saying, "Forgive me, Miss Violet."

The young girl had a tender heart. She sat down beside the woman, drew the work gently away, and said, "Now tell me all about it, please."

With the sweet, girlish face looking into hers, the woman told her story. Her own little girl had become blind. Several physicians had been consulted but each said he could do nothing. One of them, however, thought that a noted oculist in New York could help her. "But he might as well live in the moon," the woman added bitterly, "for all the difference it would make to me about taking Elsie there. It takes all I can earn to buy food and shelter for us; and I tell you, Miss Violet, when I see rich people ride in their carriages, with more money than they know what to do with, and my darling growing blind because I haven't money to buy her sight, I wonder sometimes if God is just."

It was Violet's first contact with suffering. She did not know how to say comforting things, so she bent down and kissed the worn, sad face, saying, "I am so sorry."

Violet was very sober all that day. Judge Clinton rallied her at dinner time on her lack of spirits, and took her out to drive, in the afternoon, behind the new grays. But even this did not bring back her usual light-heartedness. She could not forget the little girl who must always be in the dark. In the evening she excused herself, and went to her room. She did not want even mamma.

"Bear ye one another's burdens." The red letters shone out from the white back-ground like fire. She knew that her father never refused her anything, and that if she now asked him for money to give Elsie he would grant the request. But with the great expense which her trip to Europe would incur, she felt that she ought not to ask him. The sacrifice must be all her own, and she sat down and faced it—to go to Europe or to give Elsie her sight.

Violet shut her eyes to think what it meant to be blind; never to see her friends, never to see the buds and the flowers and the whole glad world. How dreadful it would be! But to give up her trip to Europe! She said it over very slowly to think what it meant. Her trunk was nearly packed; everybody expected her to go, and the girls were going to the station to bid her good-by. She couldn't give it up. But the red letters never relented, and after a long, long struggle, the motto won! When she looked up once more, the letters were all aglow with a radiance that seemed not of earth, and she was conscious of the presence of One who, when on earth, pleased not himself.

The next morning there was a long talk with papa in his library, and when it was over the judge went out wiping his eyes. Violet went that very day and put into Elsie's hand the price of the sweet blue eyes. It was a little hard to unpack the trunk, and oh, so hard to make her friends understand that she was not going to Europe after all! Then she had to go down to the station to see Uncle George and Aunt Mary off, and that was by no means easy.

But there was something, two months after, that more than compensated for all these experiences. Mamma summoned her to the parlor one day to meet callers, and there were Elsie and her mother just come home. Elsie clung to Violet, kissing her hand again and again.

"I told the doctor," she said, "if he could only give me light enough to see Miss Violet, that I would be satisfied. And now I can see everything as well as you. I told him all about you, and when mamma paid him, he said that he must not do less than you, and gave back the money for me to go to school with, he said."

Mrs. Gilman whispered to Violet, "You have brought back my faith in God, and I will never doubt him again."

Violet has found other burdens to lighten since then. She has not been to the Holy Land yet, but the Holy Land has come to her, even the Kingdom of God, which is "within you."—Congregationalist.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN THE SUPREME COURT.

From a Washington dispatch to the Inter-Ocean the fear of temperance men for the result of the appeals from Kansas and Iowa of the saloonists are not unfounded. Speaking of the efforts of Mr. Packard and others to secure an oral argument on these cases the dispatch reads:

The prohibitionists are more anxious to have an argument in this matter as they are apprehensive of the final result, inasmuch as in one of the preliminary orders that has been made the announcement officially was that the decision below was affirmed by a divided court here. The decision of the court below was that the Iowa prohibition law, so far as it applies to saloon-keepers and forbids them from selling liquor, is constitutional, and that the power to regulate the sale of liquor in the saloons by retail is within the right of the State. This was the decision which was rendered by United States Judge Brewer, who, however, in the case of the brewery or distillery, had decided that the Iowa prohibition law is unconstitutional unless the State, before destroying the establishment, should compensate its owners for its cost or be responsible in damages for its destruction. The decision of Judge Brewer proceeded upon the ground that the brewer or distiller had a vested right in his property before the prohibition law was enacted and that the law if put in execution would be a violation of that portion of the Federal Constitution which protects vested rights. But as to saloon-keepers, Judge Brewer did not go so far. The attorneys for the saloon-keepers had endeavored to maintain that his bar and all of the appliances of his trade would be rendered valueless if the State should not permit him to sell liquor, and that in his case as in the case of the brewer which had already been decided by Judge Brewer his rights were vested and were the same in degree. But at this point Judge Brewer stopped and the case came to the United States Supreme Court on appeal.

It is this decision of Judge Brewer in the saloon-keepers' case which the United States Supreme Court has just affirmed on appeal by a divided court. This means that there are four members of the United States Supreme Court who believe with Judge Brewer that the State of Iowa can prevent the saloon-keeper from selling liquor, and that there are on the other hand four members of the United States Supreme Court who are of opinion that the Iowa law is in this respect unconstitutional. The prohibitionists, of course, are anxious to know which four of the Justices agree with them and which are against them; and the Justices of the Supreme Court have not chosen to gratify this curiosity. But that the court is thus equally divided, a fact which seems to have been overlooked, gives the prohibitionists grave apprehensions, and also causes them to look with great interest to the new Justice who shall take the place of the late Justice Woods. The eight justices of this court who have announced their judgments in October will not reconsider them in January. And it may therefore happen that the new Justice will have the responsibility of the casting vote as to the constitutionality of the Iowa law in the case in which Judge Brewer decided that a brewery or distillery can not be destroyed by a State without compensation to the owner. In other words the fate of the prohibition movement in all of the States may turn upon the opinion of the ninth justice of the Supreme Court, who has not yet been nominated, but who, by common consent, is to be Mr. Lamar, the present Secretary of the Interior. The delay in announcing a decision in this case has caused the prohibitionists to fear that the court will await a full bench before determining it.

DRUNKEN PRIESTS.

The St. Louis Republican of June 20, printed a letter from Bishop Hogan of the Catholic diocese of St. Joseph, Mo., which was brought out in court, and was never intended for publication. But it reveals a sad state of affairs.

The bishop appointed a German priest over an English congregation. This gave so great offence to some parties that the letter in question was written in self-defense. His defence is that the priests of his diocese were such a drunken lot that he was compelled to supply the parish as he did. He then gives a list by name of twenty-two priests that were received into the diocese from 1869 to 1876 whom he was compelled to dismiss on account of immorality, especially drunkenness. Some of them are described as "constantly drunk;" one is "now going round from city to city a drunken wreck." So disgraceful was the state of affairs that he was compelled at last to "turn over a new leaf." He says:

"The constant shameful public and sacrilegious drunkenness of the last three mentioned priests who were by my side at the cathedral determined me to wipe them and their kind out of my jurisdiction. Herbert, after repeated drunkenness, went into a spree for a week in my house; was in the house, broke out at night, got into a house of disreputable women in his drunkenness and was thrown out into the street, picked up drunk, recognized and taken into a house and made sober, and put into a carriage and taken to my house. That evening Galvin and Kiley were told by me to prepare for the proper celebration of the feast of the patronage of St. Joseph for Easter Sunday. On Saturday night they stayed up all night, drinking, carousing and shouting. Kiley fell down, blackened and almost broke his face in falling. Of course, the two sacrilegious priests said mass the next day, and Kiley went into the pulpit and preached, with his blackened and bruised face, to the people of the cathedral. This was on the feast of the patron of the diocese and of the universal church. It was time for me to begin a reformation."

The bishop began to purge his diocese, and of course met with resistance from the drunken priests and their friends. But what a revelation of the secrets of a diocese this is.

THE SALOON HAS NO RIGHTS.

The time has not come when just and wholesome law will be permitted to remain as a dead letter; but the time is fast approaching when the insolence and lawlessness of the saloon will be effectually suppressed. A sentiment in that direction is rapidly developing, and nothing has done more to quicken it than the saloon itself. Its disregard for law, its arrogance, its lobbying in legislative halls, and dictating to conventions and caucuses, have done more than all else to create a sentiment against it that will control it or suppress it altogether. It should consider that it has no claim on the public at all. It is no part of legitimate industry; it has no part in commercial prosperity. It exists in opposition to all principles of industrial and commercial interests. The people have the highest right recognizable to suppress it entirely—the right of self-protection. For the saloon to talk of its rights is foolish. It has none. It only exists by sufferance, and there is nothing on which it can base a claim for protection. It is an industry that weakens everything it touches, one that adds nothing to individual or national prosperity, but is a heavy burden upon both. The revenue it yields is too insignificant, compared to the tax it makes necessary, to speak of.—Chicago Current.

Detective John T. Norris placed Harry Gordon in jail at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, for placing obstructions on the C., H. V. & T. railroad track, four miles south of Upper Sandusky, on Friday evening, September 30. He was ejected from the passenger train by the conductor for refusing to pay his fare; and for revenge, Gordon placed heavy cross ties on the track at different points about half a mile apart. He admits his guilt, and tries to shield himself with the lame excuse that he was under the influence of liquor. The company will prosecute him to the full extent of the law. Gordon has a wife and four interesting children, in destitute circumstances, near Marion, Ohio, where he lives. Alas, for the family! Drink has been his curse. And yet the rum seller goes scott free.

It is said of Atlanta that while liquor ruled it was as wicked as other cities, one of its streets being lined with saloons, and unsafe for any lady to walk through; and at present, although a city of sixty-five thousand, a young girl may walk through any street in it, even at night, and not hear a profane word; and that the one hundred and more buildings used as saloons are nearly all used as healthful stores, while property has increased from ten to thirty per cent. To-day Atlanta is a Christian city, 2,000 persons being added to the church since the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

churches. Though the weather was bad I had fair congregations. On Monday night I addressed a literary society in the Congregational church, and last night preached in the St. Louis Street church. The Cynosures that have been coming here have been a power for good, and have been highly appreciated. The Stone Street and St. Louis Street churches still maintain their testimony against the lodge. Pastor Ragland of the Congregational church does not fail to speak out, and he reports that some of his members that at first withstood him, have since given up their lodge connections and confessed their mistake.

It has been resolved to hold the annual meeting of the Alabama Christian Association in this city, during the last week in December. It is hoped to secure the presence of Secretary Stoddard. Due notice will be given of the meeting.

Emerson Institute opens favorably under the care of Prof. Armstrong, formerly of Tougaloo University, Mississippi. I was glad to meet some of the teachers of former years. This school has been and is doing great good. On Wednesday night, though dark and stormy, I met a fair congregation at the Stone Street church, and gave them a Bible reading on "The Coming of our Lord," and took several subscriptions to the Cynosure. I hope to go from here to Pensacola, Fla., and from there to New Orleans.

Yours for Christ, H. H. HINMAN.

THE REFORM IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Ainsworth I came to Marengo where the Wesleyan Methodists of Iowa were gathered for their annual conference. While here I met a layman of the M. E. church who manifested a deep interest in the anti secret society reform. I gave him some literature and he promised to work up the reform among his brethren of the Marengo M. E. church so that when I lectured there again they might hear me.

Bro. J. A. Cole, the native African, was there and made a powerful appeal to the people to aid in sending missionaries to Christianize and civilize the Mohammedan and heathen tribes of the Dark Continent. He wants men, who, after they have succeeded in converting his countrymen from the heathenism of the Kofong and Purrow lodges to Christ, will not encourage them by their example to join pagan-infidel societies like the Freemasons. Should he not be encouraged by every lover of truth and righteousness in his noble effort to free Africa from the curse of rum and secret societies?

The conference affirmed its purpose to kindly yet vigorously enforce discipline so as to exclude every form of the lodge system from the churches.

From Marengo I made my way northward and spent the Sabbath before the Minnesota convention at Wasioja with my family. I went with Prof. Paine to the convention. Returning to Iowa I passed down through the State, calling at many places to stir up the friends of reform to renewed effort, and spent the following Sabbath at Clarinda, the county-seat of Page county. The next day I reached College Springs and found everything ready for the coming annual meeting of the Iowa Association, through the blessing of Christ upon the faithful and well-directed efforts of Dr. Wm. Johnston, the pastor of the United Presbyterian church of College Springs.

I was obliged to report a deficit of about $190; but as there are subscriptions that are past due that will doubtless soon be paid, we are encouraged to go forward with the work in the name of Christ, by whose power we expect the truth to be made mighty to pull down this stronghold of Satan, trusting that the friends of Christ and his truth will not weary of coming up to his help against the organized paganism and infidelity of the secret lodge system.

James Harvey of Pleasant Plain, Jefferson county, was re-elected treasurer. To him let all donations and subscriptions be sent. I want, as soon as the funds of the Association will justify it, to carry out plans for the more general distribution of literature, and call another man to my aid. The churches must be delivered from the grasp of the lodge power. Satan must not be permitted to corrupt the churches with the false infidel philosophy of the lodge. The American pulpits must not be occupied by men who are schooled in the lodge. This effort to bring darkness and light into communion must not be permitted to succeed.

By the power of Christ, dear brethren, we can, and, with your persistent help, we will free the church from the polluting embrace of the lodge. Let us work and pray and pay, and trust in Christ to give us the victory.

From the annual meeting I came in company with Rev. B. W. Coe, a seceded Mason, to Henry county to work for a week or two in Henry and Washington and Louisa counties. C. F. HAWLEY.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—D. W. Potter, the well-known Chicago evangelist, has been secured to hold union services in Aurora, Ill., beginning last Sabbath. Mr. Millard, a celebrated Gospel singer, will assist Mr. Potter. The meetings are held at the Island rink.

—The evangelist Moody is soon to visit Louisville, Ky., and the erection of a temporary building capable of seating 5,000 persons has been agreed upon for the meetings. The building will be located on the vacant lot belonging to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and, it is proposed, shall be ready for occupancy by Jan. 1, 1888, at which date Mr. Moody is expected. The series of meetings will continue for one month. The great evangelist is very popular in Louisville, and his coming is awaited with much interest.

—Prof. H. Woodsmall, assisted by Prof. Vann and other brethren, says the Living Way, will hold an institute for the preachers, deacons and Sunday-school teachers of the East Sardis and North Sardis Associations at Sistern Hill Baptist church, near Como, Miss., October 26–28. An institute for the ministers, deacons and teachers of the Friendship and adjoining associations, will be held by Bro. Woodsmall at Bartlett, Tenn., Nov. 3, 4, 5. He has also an appointment for an institute at Clarksville, Tenn., for the Cumberland River and Tennessee, Red River and Kentucky associations. These meetings by Prof. Woodsmall have proved of the greatest benefit to the colored Baptist pastors. He leaves no needed truth unspoken because it may not be popular.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall opened a series of meetings in Armory Hall, Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 23. The State Journal next day has a very full and glowing account of the crowded meetings and the effect of the preaching. The Columbus pastors are praying for a powerful work of the Spirit which shall sweep over the whole city.

—The United Presbyterian church in Kansas City is about building a new house of worship. The plans are ready and the work is soon to begin. Rev. David M. McClellan is pastor of this church.

—Rev. J. M. Hervey, of Los Angeles, whose labors with the United Presbyterian church there have been so successful, has united with another denomination.

—Rev. Dr. M. M. Gibson and family, of San Francisco, have just returned from a trip to Europe.

—The United Presbyterian Synod of Kansas lately resolved against the proposed opening of the Kansas State House on the Sabbath; and also invited the co-operation of other churches on the sanctity of the day. The position of the body in regard to politics is given in the following: Resolved, That any political party that ignores God's supreme authority, fails to give the Bible the first place in law and education, and the Sabbath the first in time, and does not look upon the liquor traffic as a crime which admits no compromise and demands prompt annihilation at the hands of the State and nation, is unworthy of patriotic and Christian support.

—Rev. A. F. McDill, formerly of this city and Denver, has gathered a United Presbyterian colony at Wildomar, San Diego Co., Cal., and forty-five persons petition for a church organization, stating that the value of the property offered and the amount subscribed for a church building aggregated $1,790.

—The Cincinnati M. E. Conference requested its delegates to the General Conference to favor legislation that would recognize the office of evangelist in the church.

—Mr. Moody has just completed two weeks of labor in Montreal, and gives it as his impression that a very good work has been done, or more strictly, well begun there. All went on smoothly from the start, notwithstanding the large non-Protestant population of that chief city of Canada. His labors over at Montreal, at least for the present, Mr. Moody was considering an invitation quite out of routine. He has been invited to go to Minneapolis and preach at the opening of the largest Swedish Lutheran church in America. It will accommodate from four to five thousand worshipers, and is described as complete in all its appointments. We count it a good sign—one that may well encourage all who deprecate manners and customs foreign to our soil, that these brethren who are so numerous in the Northwest, are proposing to open their great church in this truly American fashion. It may even be that a series of meetings are in contemplation, but of this we are not advised. In any case, these Swedes are proposing a good beginning. No greater boon could come to the large and increasing Scandinavian population of all that region, than a powerful and pervasive work of the Holy Spirit. Individuals and churches may well offer special prayer for so great a blessing upon brethren of a common faith, and who, though coming among us as strangers, are welcome, and here to stay.—Evangelist.

—The installation of Rev. David McAllister, LL.D., as pastor of the Eighth Street Reformed Presbyterian church, took place Thursday night, with a large attendance of members and friends. Dr. McAllister was installed by a commission from the Pittsburgh Presbytery consisting of Revs. Prof. D. B. Willson, Prof. Thomas Sproull, Prof. J. K. McClurkin, J. W. Sproull and J. R. J. Milligan, of Allegheny; Rev. J. C. McFeeters, of Parnassus, and Rev. W. W. Carithers, of Wilkinsburg, with Elders A. B. Copeland, John A. Dodds and R. C. Coulter. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. J. R. J. Milligan, and Rev. D. B. Willson made the installation prayer. Rev. J. C. McFeeters delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. W. W. Carithers the charge to the congregation. The service closed with prayer and benediction by the Rev. J. K. McClurkin, after which the congregation passed to the front of the pulpit and united in greeting the new pastor. Dr. McAllister, who succeeds the late Rev. A. M. Milligan, D.D., as pastor of the Eighth Street church, was graduated from Union College, New York, in 1860, and from the Allegheny R. P. Theological Seminary in 1863, and was ordained pastor of the Walton congregation in New York the same year. In 1883 he was elected professor of political philosophy and history in Geneva College. In connection with his duties as pastor of the Eighth Street church, Dr. McAllister will continue to act as one of the editors of the Christian Statesman, of Philadelphia, which was founded by himself and Dr. T. P. Stevenson twenty years ago, and which they have been publishing ever since. Dr. McAllister is one of the best known men in the Presbyterian church in Pennsylvania, as well as one of the ablest, and his call to this church as pastor brings satisfaction to every member of the Eighth Street congregation after the vicissitudes they have passed through since the last long sickness of their late pastor, Dr. Milligan. Dr. McAllister will continue to lecture twice each week at Geneva College until his place in the faculty can be filled.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

LITERATURE.

Primitive Orthodoxy and "Progressive Orthodoxy" is a discourse by Prof. L. T. Townsend, D. D., printed by request and published by J. J. Arakelyan, Boston, on the topic now agitating many theological circles. The argument is strong and eloquently expressed, but the chief value is in its historical review of similar attempts at re-stating Christian doctrine and giving new theories a following from Clement and Origin to Theodore Parker. The significant failure of all these efforts, and the increasing power of the Christian faith in spite of all opposing or detracting influences is such a proof of its truth that it cannot be overthrown.

Scribner's Magazine for November is a very richly illustrated number, and has for its leading article an interesting paper by William F. Apthorp, the musical critic of the Boston Transcript, on "Wagner and Scenic Art." Dr. Henry M. Field, editor of the New York Evangelist, describes a recent visit which he made to the strange tribe in Northern Algeria, known as the "Kabyles," or "Berbers," a warlike race inhabiting a very mountainous region, the "Switzerland of Africa," and preserving peculiar traits and institutions. Professor D. A. Sargent, M. D., of Harvard University, furnishes the second of his notable papers on physical training, entitled "The Physical Characteristics of the Athlete." "A Diplomatic Episode" is a noteworthy paper by Miss Olive Risley Seward, the adopted daughter of ex-Secretary Seward, and his confidante in many important political affairs, explaining for the first time an incident in our diplomatic history relating to the failure of the negotiations for the purchase, from Denmark, of the islands of St. Thomas and St. John. The author shows that this failure reflects seriously upon the managers of the foreign affairs of the United States, many of whom are now dead. "The Viking Ship" is an interesting paper upon an ancient ship which was unearthed several years ago at Gokstad, in Norway. General Francis A. Walker, President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, contributes a vigorous, plain-spoken article, entitled, "What Shall we Tell the Working classes?" in which he finds the solution of the labor problem in a healthier, manlier, more truly American sentiment among working-men, which can only be fostered and spread by education.

The next copy of the Century will be popular in Chicago because of an illustrated paper on St. Gaudens, the sculptor of the Lincoln monument unveiled here in Lincoln Park. As the statue was completed since the article was written, Mrs. Van Rensselaer contributes a short supplemental paper describing that work, with a full-page illustration, engraved by Whitney. Mrs. Van Rensselaer considers this statue "not only our best likeness of Abraham Lincoln, but our finest work of monumental art."

The boasted "Woman's day" is about to be ushered in with a "Woman's Bible." Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton is chairman of the American committee having in charge the enterprise of publishing this book, which she promises will revolutionize religion as well as politics.

The constant success of the Illustrated London News (American edition) is not by any means a surprise when even the contents of a single week are considered. The issue of Oct. 29th, gives an excellent colored portrait of Prince Bismarck, while in addition there are pictures of the Nizam of Hyderabad, two pages devoted to illustrations of the State of Ireland, another page of Bristol Cathedral, one of the death of Cæsar. As ever, the New York office is in the Potter Building.

Next to Mount St. Elias in Alaska, Mount Tacoma is the tallest peak in the United States. Dr. C. D. Hendrickson, in the American Magazine for November, describes an ascent to the highest attainable point on the north side of this mountain, which seems to be the center of a wild and precipitous region, once the seat of enormous volvanic activity, and still retaining a savage grandeur and loneliness. In a paper entiiled, "Cyclopia," P. D. Nott entertainingly describes the old forges and charcoal furnaces of Pennsylvania. The original methods of the iron manufacture are so rapidly losing ground that in a few years they will be obliterated. Exactly how and why our continent came to be called America rather than Columbia, is very clearly set forth in a paper by Abby Sage Richardson. It has been the fashion for more than a century to fling abuse upon Amerigo Vespucci for having wrested the hon or of naming the continent from its discoverer. Quite recently documents have been recovered which place the matter wholly in a different light. Mrs. Richardson represents Vespucci as having made no claim for honors that were not his due. The chief poem in this number is "The enterprise and the boxer," by Henry Abbey—a stirring epic descriptive of a naval battle that took place in the days of our grandfathers.

Lodge Notes.

At its session in New York Tuesday, the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, thirty-third degree, Scottish Rite Masons, elected officers. Judge John J. Gorman of New York was chosen Sovereign Grand Commander.

The Executive Board of Good Templars at Boston, Oct. 20, elected W. W. Turnbull of Glasgow, Scotland, R. W. C. Counsellor, to be "Right Worthy Grand Templar," in place of J. B. Finch. Dr. O'Aonhyatekha of Ontario was chosen to fill the office vacated by Turnbull.

A number of representative men in secret society life insurance had a meeting with closed doors at Milwaukee. It is understood that their desire is to get up some sort of a combination by which they will not pull against each other, and will, if possible, make these various associations virtually one, so far as insurance is concerned.

Negroes belonging to the Knights of Labor are causing trouble on the sugar plantations of Louisiana. They demanded increase of pay, and, on being refused, went on a strike. They refused to permit willing men to fill their positions, and State troops were dispatched by Governor McEnery Thursday to quell the disturbance they might cause.

Fifty Knights of Labor, returning from the convention at Minneapolis, called at the county jail in this city to visit the anarchists. They had telegraphed to Minneapolis and asked the sheriff to permit them to see the condemned men. Deputy Sheriffs were in waiting to accompany them to the jail. George Schilling and other local knights were also with them to make the introductions.

A new society, to be known as the League of the Rose, is being organized in Ottawa, Ont. The promoter of the scheme is a prominent member of the Order of the Sons of England. The members will be bound to uphold, as far as in them lies, the principles of conservatism, the throne and the church. It will be run on the same lines as the Primrose League of England.

The officers of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers are preparing for trouble with the Knights of Labor by strengthening their lines President Weihe, of the Amalgamated, has just completed the formation of a lodge among the workmen at the Spang Iron and Steel Works. The men were astonished when told that those belonging to the Knights of Labor must renounce the latter order by April 1. The Amalgamated people are making efforts to bring in all the 5,000 employes of the steel mills in Pittsburg. President Weihe will go East to head off the knights in that direction, and later on the Western mills will be taken care of.

B F. Parker of Mauston, Wis., "Grand" Secretary of the Good Templar Grand Lodge, announces to the order through out the land: "Wm. W. Turnbull, of Glasgow, Scotland, is now the head of the order. It is his order that directions be made to every lodge in your jurisdiction to go into mourning for three months, the charter and regalia of every lodge to be draped for that period, and every member is requested to wear crape on the right arm or in the button hole of the coat collar, or pinned on the dress of the sisters, with the public recognition pin or badge. Lodges are requested to hold a memorial service on the first Sunday of December, in the lodge room or some other suitable place. A collection should be taken at that time, and the amount forwarded to this office, to make a fund with which to erect a Good Templars monument to the memory of our leader."

BEREA EVANGELIST,

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness, and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."

Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."

Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."

Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."

Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."

Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."

The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

HOME AND HEALTH.

DRINKING BEFORE MEALS.

An acquaintance of the writer who has suffered sorely from dyspepsia for a number of years, and has tried most of the numerous remedies a host of kind friends have recommended for her relief, hands us the following article from the Medical News, with the request that it be printed in the Scientific American. Our dyspeptic friend has found great relief in following the directions, and it is hoped others may be also benefited.

"In the morning the stomach contains a considerable quantity of mucus spread over and adherent to its walls. If food enters at this time, the tenacious mucus will interfere to some extent, with the direct contact between the food and the stomach necessary to provoke the secretion of gastric juice. A glass of water taken before breakfast passes through the stomach into the small intestines in a continuous and uninterrupted flow. It partly distends the stomach, stretching, and to some extent obliterating the rugæ; it thins and washes out most of the tenacious mucus; it increases the fullness of the capillaries of the stomach, directly if the water is warm, and indirectly in a reactionary way if it is cold; it causes peristalsis of the alimentary tract, wakes it up (so to speak), and gives it a morning exercise and washing. Care must be taken not to give cold water when the circulation, either local or general, is so feeble as to make reaction improbable. We should not risk it in advanced age, nor in the feeble, whether old or young, nor should it be given in local troubles, like chronic gastric catarrh. In these cases it is best to give warm or hot water. The addition of salt is very beneficial. Such a time-honored custom as drinking soup at the beginning of a meal could only have been so persistently adhered to because of it having been found by experience to be the most appropriate time. It does exactly what warm or hot water, with the addition of salt, does, and more, in that it is nutritive and excites the flow of gastric juice."—Scientific American.

HOT WATER REMEDIES.

There is no remedy of such general application, and none so easily attainable, as water, and yet nine persons out of ten will pass by it in an emergency to seek for something of far less efficiency. There are few cases of illness where water should not occupy the highest place as a remedial agent. A strip of flannel or napkin, folded lengthwise and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has the croup, with thick dry flannel outside, will usually bring relief in ten minutes. A towel folded several times, and dipped in hot water, and quickly wrung out and applied over the toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in cholic works like magic. I have seen cases that have resisted all other treatment for hours yield to this in ten minutes. There is nothing that so promptly cuts short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat, or rheumatism, as hot water, when applied promptly and thoroughly. Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic, and hot water taken freely half an hour before bedtime, is the best cathartic possible in the case of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect upon the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued a few months, with proper attention to diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia. Headache almost always will yield to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and the back of the neck.

WATER DRINKING.—According to Dr. L. Brunton, in the Practitioner, there is no diuretic so good as water. Water does not merely stimulate the kidneys, but it facilitates their work by preparing the waste substances for elimination, and by aiding in their removal. The majority of persons drink too little water. Persons who have a gouty or rheumatic state of the system, will find great relief in copious water drinking. A bad taste in the mouth in the morning may often be prevented by taking a glass or two of water late in the previous evening. Water is most effective when taken hot.—Good Health.

Farm Notes.

The difference in drivers may be seen in the fact that one is always hallooing at his horses at the top of his voice, and complaining that they do not do good work; another, who can rarely be heard, always gets a good day's work from his team, and that without hurting them. Skill and judgment and self control are as valuable, comparatively, in a man who has the management of horses, as in any other branch of industry.

How to get Rid of Rats and Mice.—A gentleman of large experience, and fully as humane as most of us, says he gets rid of rats by putting potash in their holes and runs. The poor wretches get it on their feet and over their fur, then they lick it and don't like the taste of it; it burns them somewhat and the more they see of it the less they like it: so they clear out almost as soon as the application is made. To get rid of mice, the same person uses tartar emetic, migled with any favorite food; they take it, take sick, and take their leave.

How to Save Your Shoe Soles.—Melt together tallow and common resin, in the proportion of two parts of the former to one of the latter, and apply the preparation, hot, to the soles of the boots or shoes—as much of it as the leather will absorb. One farmer declares that this little receipt alone has been worth more than the cost of five years' subscription to the newspaper publishing it.

Live Willows for Fence Posts.—The fence post question is one of the greatest importance to American farmers, and will be for many years. For that reason the solution of it is of interest to a vast number of people. A correspondent of an exchange writes as below in regard to the use of willow for this purpose. Any one who has had experience with willows, especially in soil at all moist, will agree fully with this opinion. He says:

"It is frequently recommended to plant trees along the line of the fences that when the trees have attained sufficient size, their trunks may be used for posts. Thus live posts, that will not rot, are had, already securely set, at the cost of setting out the trees only. But to this the objection is that the swaying of the tree loosens the nails holding the boards or the staples fastening the wires, whether the nails or staples are driven into the tree or into a piece of timber fastened to the tree. One of our Western subscribers has discovered that when the willow is planted, this objection is avoided, for the top of the willow can be kept cut down so closely that the trunk will be swayed little, if any. The tree should not be used as a post until the trunk has attained a diameter of six inches a foot from the ground; and even when it has reached this size, the tree may be cut off five feet from the ground, making a post of the desired heighth without killing the tree. Such cutting off would be fatal to any other tree that could be used for this purpose; but the willow will send out a thick bunch of shoots, which will soon become respectable branches and may be cut off in their turn. Thus we may have a thick, stocky trunk five feet high with so little top that the wind will not loosen the nails or staples. The branches cut off make good beanpoles, or the summer fire wood par excellence. They cut very easily when green, dry out rapidly, and, when dry, make a quick, hot fire that dies down at once—just the fire that the house-wife wishes during the summer. Other points in favor of the willow for live fence posts are the ease with which it can be got to grow, and the rapidity of its growth. If slips are stuck into the ground in the spring, when the ground is moist, they will at once root and grow. When fence posts are scarce, this use of the willow can be confidently recommend d; and likely it will pay to so use the willow even when posts are cheap. The willow is slow to die, and will make a firm post for years."

A writer in the Horseman excoriates in the following terms the man who forgets his horse while he feeds himself. While the language is somewhat intemperate, the spirit of it is correct. We should not forget our horse's appetite while indulging our own. This seems to apply to the city horse owner, but no doubt fits a good many farmers too: "I have had my eye for some time upon the man who leaves his horse standing all day at the curbstone, checked high, and with no dinner. If there is a meaner man than he is, I want to avoid the side of the street where he walks. Why, do you know, sir, that if you and that horse were to be given entrance into heaven today on nothing but individual merits, with no inserted clause about 'immortal souls,' and all that, the angel door-keeper wouldn't take as long to decide between you as it takes a lamb to caper? That blessed, faithful, long enduring, never-complaining, brave old horse would be let in ahead of you, as quickly as angels' hands could toss down the golden bars! When I think of a beer guzzling, impure-hearted, blasphemous old sinner like you, and remember all your cruelty to the noble steed who drags your worthless old body about behind him, I feel like going into some of our churches with a special request that a day be set apart to search out your infinitesimal germ of a soul."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The Common Council are debating whether to set up in the gas business or adopt electricity for street lighting. They believe they must no longer depend on the gas companies.

The Socialistic Labor party held its convention last week, and espoused the cause of the anarchists outright. Besides nominating a ticket composed of radical Socialists, the convention passed an address to Governor Oglesby on behalf of the condemned anarchists, which clearly defines its position in favor of a revoluary programme Capt. Black, the lawyer for the anarchists, was nominated for judge to succeed Judge Gary.

The Chicago Coal Exchange Friday advanced the price of anthracite, the new price to take effect Nov. 1. The price will then be $8 per ton for range and nut coal. This is all the result of an infamous combination between the railroads and the mining companies by which coal was prevented from being shipped by lake from Buffalo, when the price would have been about $5 Now the roads get all the profits.

COUNTRY.

The furious storm that swept over Lake Michigan Saturday swamped the propeller Vernon off Manitowoc, Wis., and it is supposed her entire crew have perished. Besides several passengers she had on board a crew of twenty-one men. The Vernon was a Chicago craft, plying between this city and Cheboygan. She was due in Chicago to-day with a cargo of miscellaneous freight, composed chiefly of produce.

An incendiary set fire Monday night to a building in Paris township, Kent county, Michigan, in which thirty Italian laborers were sleeping. A band outside had barred the doors to prevent the escape of the men, who, however, were aroused by a wakeful companion, and managed to get out of the blazing structure in their night clothes. Efforts are being made to discover the conspirators.

The boiler of a threshing machine exploded Tuesday morning between Frederick and Ellendale, D. T. Three men were killed and two fatally wounded.

A four year-old boy was burned to death Tuesday morning at Brazil, Ind. The boy's grandmother mounted a horse to go for a doctor, and was thrown off, receiving injuries that will prove fatal.

One third of the potato crop of Waupaca county, Wis., has been ruined by frost. At 6 o'clock Tuesday morning the thermometer at Waupaca indicated zero.

Mrs. Felton of Romulus, Mich, heard a great uproar in front of her house late Monday night, and being alone with six small children, became alarmed, fearing an attack was to be made on her. She got a revolver, and in an attempt to raise the hammer, discharged the weapon, and received the bullet in her abdomen.

Near Freeport, Ill., early Tuesday morning a freight train of the Minnesota and Northwestern line, running on the Illinois Central road, was thrown from the track and wrecked. The damage was great, and it will take several days to render the road passable. The E. B. Washburne funeral train passed but a few minutes before, but went safely over the obstruction that caused the accident.

A fireman and brakeman were instantly killed, and the engineer was fatally injured in an accident on the Midland road near Florissant, Col., Thursday.

Convicts in the penitentiary at Yuma, A. T., attempted to escape Thursday morning. A life prisoner snatched a pistol from an escaping criminal, and with it killed a man who held and was stabbing the superintendent of the institution. None of the conspirators escaped, but two of them were killed and three wounded, one fatally. The superintendent was badly hurt.

The convict labor contract system was abolished by the last Pennsylvania legislature, and work on all outstanding contracts was finished Monday, the 24th. This throws a large number of convicts into idleness. Many have been locked in their cells during the past ten days, and they are complaining bitterly of their confinement.

A terrible epidemic of typhoid fever is raging in the Iron Mountain village on the Menominee River railway 100 miles south of Ishpeming, Mich. There were 200 cases last week, and new cases were reported every few minutes. Physicians are working day and night with help from other towns. The deaths are numerous.

On account of the scarcity of coal, caused by the strike of the coal miners in the vicinity, the public schools of Springfield, Ill., were compelled to close. Some of the mines are being worked, but will not receive orders from private consumers.

A telegraph pole placed on the track of the Rock Island road, near Morris, Ill., wrecked a freight train Friday morning, the engineer and fireman being killed. It is believed that the intention of the murderers was to derail the Kansas City express, which, fortunately, was half an hour late, to be followed in a short time by the Omaha and Minneapolis express. There is no clew to the wreckers, for whose capture a reward of $2,000 has been offered.

J. E. Smith, the express messenger who recently killed two robbers near El Paso, was Thursday paid $2 000 as a reward, by the Governor of Texas. He expects to receive $2,000 more from the express company, and $1,000 additional from the railroad corporation.

Forty-nine head of cattle, suffering from pleuro-pneumonia, were killed Thursday on a farm near New Brunswick, New Jersey.

The water famine that has prevailed through the two western tiers of Ohio counties and the adjacent Territory of Indiana is growing serious, for upon the table lands and extended level stretches, away from larger streams, cattle are actually suffering and bellowing for drink. Farm and village wells are dry, and in other wells the low stage of water is breeding typhoid fever and kindred diseases. Sources of smaller water-power mills have been stopped for three months, and as many steam mills have been running on short time or shut down altogether. Fall wheat and barley have had spindling growth, but will easily recover if rain comes before a hard winter sets in.

A heavy flow of natural gas, bursting unexpectedly from a well near Lima, Ohio, was ignited by a furnace fire and exploded with terrific force. Samuel Hughes, a driller, was shockingly mangled, and derricks, machinery, engines, etc., were destroyed by the fire. The gas is still burning, all efforts to extinguish it being vain.

FOREIGN.

At the meeting called by the Lord Mayor to devise means for assisting the deserving poor of London, it was decided unadvisable to open a special fund, as was done last year, because this would encourage loafers. But resolutions were adopted advising the public to all in their power to assist the London charities which were able and deserving, but to use more discrimination.

Advices from New Zealand are to the effect that King Malietoa of Samoa, has been deposed by Germany, and that, with his son and three chiefs, he had been taken board the warship Albatross, the destination of which is unknown. New Zealand and other papers characterize Germany's course as arbitrary in the extreme.

The Montenegrin arrested at Varna has confessed that the Slav Committee at Odessa prompted him with 5,000 napoleons and a good post under the Russian Government if he succeeded in organizing a plot to murder Prince Ferdinand and M. Skobouloff, the Bulgarian leaders.

Sir Wilfred Blunt, M. P., who was arrested at Woodford on Sunday, the 23d ult, for speaking at a proclaimed meeting, was later found guilty of violating the Irish crimes act and sentenced to two months' imprisonment. Notice of appeal from the verdict was given by defendent's counsel. Mr. Roche, a poor-law guardian of Woodford, who was also arrested at Sunday's meeting, was sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment without hard labor.

Sir William Harcourt, speaking at Portsmouth, denied that it was possible to shelve the Irish question, which, he said, when thrust aside, always came back with renewed force. The coercion act was already a dead failure. Other governments had failed after trying coercion, but the present government had failed before it began trying it.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

NEWS OF THE WEEK..... 16

On Tuesday, as we go to press, the vote of Oregon is being cast on three amendments to the State constitution. The first is to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. The friends of temperance have made an active canvass of the State, and many prominent men and women from the East have given their assistance, chief among them ex-Governor St. John. It is expected that the vote will be very close, and possibly the decision will lie with Portland, which is sure to go wrong. But there is some hope, and many and sincere will be the prayers that the result will not be like Michigan, Tennessee and Texas, but that one State, at least, will be redeemed from the rum curse in 1887.

Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore wrote an article of the most plausible character in the North American Review last month, deploring some of the obvious dangers threatening the country. Among these was our national sin of Sabbath-breaking. The testimony of the head of the Romish church in America against this evil is of value; but the Cardinal must know that intelligent readers understand well enough that the practice of the Romish church has little effect in sanctifying the day. The "continental" Sabbath which is making such inroads upon our "New England" day comes to us from Catholic countries. As one of the Cardinal's own admirers says, "In Spain, Italy, France, and other Catholic countries—or in the distinctive Catholic portions of them—theatres and concerts and public gardens and public institutions are open as on week days and liberally patronized by all classes of Catholics. In Ireland, said to be the most loyal Catholic country on the globe, political meetings are held regularly on Sunday and are attended by the people and clergy without distinction of creed."

The Mormons gathering courage from the treacherous minority report of Carlton of Indiana and McClernand of Illinois, members of the Utah Commission, have decided to raise $400,000 to squander on Congress this winter and bribe and buy their way to Statehood. But the administration will hardly venture to pass favorably on such a measure against the strongly expressed judgment of its servant Governor West. But a more certain check upon their evil ambition is the decision of Judge Zane of the Territorial Supreme Court last Saturday, granting the petition of District Attorney Peters for a receiver for the Mormon church. In his opinion Judge Zane says: "It sufficiently appears that the defunct corporation has in its possession real property in value exceeding $50,000, the limit fixed by the act of Congress of 1862, and that a portion of it is not a building or grounds appurtenant thereto, held for the purpose of the worship of God." The decision is of course received with the greatest indignation by the Mormons, who denounce the affair as robbery. The decision will have the good effect probably to hinder the $400,000 job and the palms of some Congressmen will have to keep on itching this winter.

Since the editorial on another page was written it is announced that Spies, Schwab and Fielden of the condemned men have been persuaded by the most urgent solicitations of their friends to sue for mercy from the governor, deploring the massacre of the police and regretting the effect of their violent teachings. It is not a humble document, but shows some contrition under the gallows' shadow. As was expected last week the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court at Washington was against the petition of the anarchists, and the utmost effort to move Governor Oglesby is being made. Petitions are circulating on the streets of Chicago and are coming in from all over the country, and Black, with various representatives of labor and socialist societies, will make a personal plea to stop the hanging. But the condemned men seem to be making any other disposition of their cases impossible. Early Sunday morning Engel was found nearly dead. He had attempted suicide with opium smuggled in to him. Prompt measures saved him. A few hours later while cleaning out Lingg's cell, four bombs charged and primed were dragged out by the pallid officers. The discovery thrilled the city, and roused the lenient Sheriff Matson to realize that human tigers are not to be played with as he has with boodlers. Every precaution will be taken by the city authorities, but the police confess that it is always the unexpected that happens. Anarchists from other cities are coming in companies to Chicago and all manner of thieves with them. It is a week to try the temper of the city, but the people are quiet and confident in the ability of the guardians of the public peace to prevent disorders. An excellent suggestion has been made that all Christians should observe the day with fasting and prayer so that the dangers threatened from this assault upon social and religious order may be averted.

A day seems hardly to have passed since we published a note on the determination of Rev. R. G. Wilder, editor of the greatest of the missionary magazines, the Missionary Review, to return with his wife to India and spend the last years of his life among the people to whom he gave the thirty best years of his life. He had just completed his business arrangements, had transferred the editorial care of the Review to Dr. A. T. Pierson of Philadelphia and Dr. J. M. Sherwood of New York, and on the very day the contract was signed his soul went up to God. He was buried at Princeton, New Jersey, on the afternoon of the 13th of October, being 71 years old. Dr. Wilder was an early missionary of a representative type. Well educated, he turned his back on wealth, ease and honor at home for the self-denials of a life in India. After serving with the American Board for twelve years he continued for the same length of time to manage an independent mission, and then until the failure of his health was maintained by the Presbyterian Board. Needed reforms in the management of this Board were urged in the Review with great ability, and the magazine was without a peer in presenting the general outlook of missions and for its report of missionary statistics. On his last morning a friend spoke in sympathy for his great suffering. His moans of distress ceased, he looked up cheerfully and spoke for the last time, "Yes; but I am the son of a King!"

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE COLORED PEOPLE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The following circulars were sent to a worthy pastor of a colored church in Mississippi. It is a specimen of the series of most wicked frauds perpetrated on the colored people of the South, in which it has been sought to involve their ministers as parties.

PRIVATE LETTER.

OFFICE OF THE SUPREME COMMANDERY OF THE UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD OF AMERICA.
NATCHEZ, Miss.,.....188.

DEAR SIR:—The Supreme Commandery of the U. B. A. respectfully state that you have been recommended to them as a gentleman worthy of confidence, and in consideration of which you have been elected a "Commander" of this organization. The office, if accepted, may be held during good behavior. You will receive for organizing Commanderies $50 a month, provided you initiate 100 members, and $100 a month, provided you initiate 200 members; and for any number less than 100, fifty cents per member, provided no lodge contain less than ten members; and 50 cents extra for each degree conferred.

1. The "Commander" with the greatest number of members shall be the successor to the Supreme Commandery in case of vacancy.

2. The "Commander" with the largest number of members in his State shall be commissioned Governor of all the lodges in his State.

3. The "Commander" with the largest number of members in his county, shall be commissioned County Commander.

You will understand from the above that you have an opportunity not only of making money in doing good, but of becoming a man of great distinction. Your degrees will be free, and increased with your membership.

The great and important secrets of the noble cause to be disclosed as the members rise by degrees, and its good works will soon make the organization the largest in the United States. If you accept this greatest offer of a lifetime, sign the enclosed oath and send for a commission and degrees to the Supreme Commander.

[This paper is issued from the Supreme Commandery, and signed by the "Supreme Commander," who is a lawyer, by a Rev. Miller, a Clerk of Circuit Court, a Principal of the high school, all of Natchez, and a real estate lawyer of Vidalia, La., who are the leading officers.]

OBLIGATION.

In the presence of your Heavenly Father and these witnesses you hereby pledge your sacred honor that you will never reveal any of the secrets of this order, or communicate them or any part thereof to any person in the world, unless you are satisfied by strict test or in some legal manner, that they are lawfully entitled to receive them; that you will conform to and abide by the constitution, the rules and regulations of the Supreme Commandery and the subordinate commandery to which you may be attached. That you will never sanction the admittance of any one to membership in the order whom you have any reason to believe is an improper person, nor will you oppose the admission of any one solely on the grounds of a personal matter. You will not in any manner whatever knowingly wrong or defraud a brother, nor will you permit it to be done by another, if in your power to prevent it. You will recognize all lawful signs given you by a member of this order, and will render them such assistance as they may be in need of, so far as you are able. Should you knowingly or willfully violate this oath or any part of it, you invoke on yourself total expulsion from the order, without the possibility of reinstatement and to be forever disgraced by the Brotherhood universally—SO HELP ME GOD.

OBJECTS.

This society is organized for the purpose of aiding and assisting the members thereof by paying to the legal representatives of a deceased member a death benefit of not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, and to a member who shall become permanently disabled after joining the Brotherhood an endowment of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars.

"Any person, white or colored, male of female, of any religion or politics, who believes in a Supreme Being . . being sound in body and mind and of good moral character, or those who are desirous of reforming their lives, shall be eligible to membership in this Brotherhood."

I remark on the above:

1. It is an appeal to the pride and cupidity of pastors, offering them a large bribe if they will help defraud their flocks, and a larger bribe if they are eminently successful. The organizer is to carry out this fraud by pretending that this is a benevolent society, and that it confers benefits on all those who are connected with it. Actually, he takes from each member not less than fifty cents, which he puts into his own pocket, and fifty cents more to pay for a promise, which in its terms can never be fulfilled. Besides this, each member must pay a regular assessment and dues, a part of which goes into the pockets of the organizer.

2. He is expected to sell valuable secrets with each degree, the pay for which he can put (at least half a dollar of it) in his own pocket. These secrets are declared to be "great and important." Like all the so-called secrets of other orders they are, and must be, simply frivolous and foolish, if not something worse. That there is any intrinsic value in any of the secrets of any of the orders no sensible person can honestly pretend. To secure this privilege of defrauding his neighbors, the organizer must swear and subscribe to an extra-judicial oath, dishonoring his manhood and violating the Third Commandment.

That men of respectability should lend their sanction to such a scheme seems incredible. The array of names, whether real or spurious, shows how widely the system has taken hold on the people, and with what impunity such frauds can be perpetrated on the innocent and unsuspecting.

IDLE VAPORING.

BY MRS. M. A. BLANCHARD.

It indicates a sad state of affairs when many of the utterances of those who are leaders of religious thought can only be fitly designated by this term. Confronted as we are on all sides by evils of greater or less magnitude, we might hope that every soldier of the Cross taking his place by his Master, would stand up bravely for the right, and as manfully oppose the wrong. If this were done how rapidly would "righteousness cover the earth even as the waters the sea." We have reason to know and believe that a vast majority of Christians are at heart opposed to secret societies. Protestant Christianity as a whole was a bursting out from the darkness of the convent, the cloister and the Inquisition, and with the chained Bible, into the risen glory of a life by faith in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. What a heritage to enter upon was this!

But what do we see? Yonder is a young man just converted, full of ardor to spread the knowledge of Christ to those in pagan lands. When just about starting to his work, after years of preparation Christian friends send him to the Masonic lodge, where he is duly initiated in its dark mysteries, his conscience put under bondage to new and strange oaths, and his Saviour left, with his hat and clothes, at the door. This is all done to increase his influence in heathen or foreign lands. Sad at heart, you seek to get access to the thought fountains, to popularize the example and teachings of Christ, who "ever spake openly to the people and in secret said nothing," so that victimizing our young men in this way shall cease. To your agreeable surprise you find the private opinion of a multitude of the educators in our land to be heartily with you. But like "dumb dogs" they will not bark. "They see the wolf coming." Those under their eye and influence are in danger of being stripped, mangled, and torn; they will not utter a loud and hearty warning themselves, nor will they get or allow another one more brave than themselves to do it for them. No, their fine sentiments all end in idle vaporing.

OLE BULL—A MUSICAL REMINISCENCE.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

I saw it stated in a public journal the other day that Ole Bull has left a daughter who inherits her father's musical genius. If so, cultivated and developed, she will make her mark and fortune in the world. This notice calls to my mind some reminiscences of her famous father.

I have heard nearly all the great masters on the violin that ever came to this country, but no one ever made such a revelation of the wonderful powers of that wonderful instrument to my mind and heart as did Ole Bull. No one ever carried my soul by the influence and power of music to such sublime heights of royal ecstacy as this then youthful Norwegian. Next to him came Mons. Julian, with his famous band of one hundred performers, in Castle Garden, New York. I heard them both on the occasion of their first appearance on our shores, and I look back upon these occasions, though now almost half a century ago, as the two great and most intense musical events of my life. I heard Gottschalk, Thalburg, and the wonderful blind Tom on the piano, and was charmed, especially with the extraordinary performances of that eccentric nondescript, "blind Tom;" but I confess to greater and more intense delight when Ole Bull, that king of violinists, made his debut in New York city.

The Tabernacle was packed with a brilliant, fastidious and appreciative audience; who, while they seemed taken quite aback by the youthful, even boyish, modest and diffident appearance of the young Norwegian, and who seemed also to mistrust his ability or power to answer their very sanguine expectations, yet gave him, nevertheless, a most cordial and enthusiastic reception, to which he most gracefully bowed his acknowledgments. The profound silence that now ensued was intense, almost breathless. Then came the deliberate, artless, and nice adjustment of the instrument under the inclining left ear, the soft and delicate twang of the strings by the fingers, as the ear turned listfully down to hear if they were "just in tune." Then the long and exquisitely drawn bow and the sweet, tender, weird, enchanting and anon rhapsodical strains soon dispelled all doubt, holding all spellbound, and finally completely electrified the vast audience. The young foreigner was overwhelmed with shouts of applause, as the human mass rose simultaneously to their feet, swinging their hats and waving their handkerchiefs and literally burying their idol with a shower of magnificent bouquets.

Ole Bull's powers of imitation and description were marvelous, and elicited great admiration. In his piece dedicated to "America," while reveling so grandly upon its magnificent mountains and amid its beautiful valleys, he would occasionally drop into some sweet, tender and plaintive negro melody, stirring the deep chords of pity in all hearts. Then while portraying our broad lakes, silvery streams, flourishing towns and rising cities, he suddenly broke out into "Hail Columbia, Happy Land," again carrying the immense audience by storm.

In his piece describing the "Solitude of the Prairies," I involuntarily imagined myself standing alone far away out on some of those vast western plains, "a thousand miles from any place," or mortal inhabitant, just as night was casting its sable curtain over the earth. So real was the whole scene presented to my mind that I could fairly feel the falling shadows of evening, and hear the black crickets sing in the prairie grass.

During the rendering of his famous "America," and in the midst of its glowing tribute, he glided suddenly and playfully into "Yankee Doodle;" and such a going over and shaking up that crankey old tune had never taken before. He played it fast and he played it slow; he played it high and he played it low; he turned it inside out and outside in; down side up and upside down; changing the key and the movements and varying the variations and the intonations and the accentuations, again and again, until the audience was completely convulsed with laughter, ending with round after round of almost deafening applause.

On his programme for the evening was a composition entitled "Niagara Falls." The idea of describing Niagara Falls, that wonderful wonder of the world, with a "fiddle," seemed ludicrous in the extreme, and many feared it must prove a ridiculous failure. Yet he did it; and so successfully and with such consummate skill and perfection we could fairly hear the roar of the thundering cataract, see the arched rainbow amid the silvery spray curving over the awful chasm, and hear the birds sing and twitter their sweet notes amid the leafy boughs on Goat Island. As the last notes died away there burst forth another wild demonstration of delight, accompanied with another still more copious shower of bouquets. The young Norwegian stooped to gather up and press to his breast these beautiful and fragrant tokens of their generous and enthusiastic admiration and delight, but all in vain; they fell so thick and fast about him he was obliged to "fall back" and bow himself off the stage to avoid the peltings of the floral storm. The platform was left a literal "bed of flowers."

From that night on Ole Bull was "master of the situation." He had won all hearts. He had achieved a victory. A continent lay at his feet. His success and his fame in America was assured. With his brilliant career through our country after that, and of the thousands who flocked to hear, and were held spell-bound under the mysterious influence of his magic wand, the older of your readers are familiar. There was none of the "see-saw," "clap-trap," "humdrum methods in his performances. They were free from the mere common, mechanical, formal and monotonous routine. His style was peculiarly his own; his renderings were always inspired by the deep and glowing fires of true genius. They were therefore, not only natural, easy, unaffected and graceful, but they were in a high degree esthetical as well as emotional— nay, more, they were sublimely spiritual and inspiring; and his hearers were always left the purer and the better and with sweeter memories lingering ever, after hearing Ole Bull.

I can never forget the scene—this, the first time, though now more than forty years agone, when I heard Ole Bull on the occasion of his debut in New York, then in the flower and flush of his youth: nor the last time I heard him in this city in 1881, when age had frosted both our heads with silver, while he yet retained complete mastery over his instrument, charming all hearts as of yore. Nor shall I forget the scene behind the curtain after the performance was over, as I went in to give him the friendly hand of gratulation and "good-bye," when he threw his long arms so cordially around my neck, and with a brother's warm embrace, as we exchanged the "last farewell."

Ole Bull waa not only a radiant genius, but a warm-hearted and generous soul. He sought not only to entertain and delight his fellow creatures with his heavenly gifts, but to better their material condition with his wealth, which was freely lavished for that purpose.

From here he returned to his native Norway—to the hills and to the home of his childhood, to the scenes of his youth and the graves of his fathers, where now he sleeps well!—and where his memory is embalmed in the hearts of the millions in two continents, who have been enraptured by his wonderful and charming skill upon the violin.

SLAVERY! SALOONERY! LODGERY!

The syllabic termination of these three words might have great additional force if it had the significance of the Scotch word "eerie," which means dread or fear of evil spirits! Lord Brougham, the Edinburgh Review writer, reform statesman, orator, and chancellor of the United Kingdom, said that the English language would be greatly enriched if the lowland Scotch were incorporated with it. The word "eerie" and many others, require more than one English word to give their correct meaning. But certainly it would be a correct thing to associate dread and fear with saloonery and lodgery, as, alas! became so justly realized in slavery and its rebellion.

Each of these eerie sisters show their identity of character by their preliminary actions of natural hostility to the supremacy of righteousness, and to the true equality and brotherhood of all mankind. Slavery was the fate of the black skin under white despots. Lodgery has its despots over its oath-bound slaves of every shade of skin, and saloonery enslaves by drunkenness and follows in the footsteps of these illustrious evil-doers by the persecution and murder of those who seek to prevent the evils which flow from it, by depriving it of its license. The early Abolitionists, the revealers of the secrets of lodgery, and the advocates of prohibition to-day experience the same treatment. The mob is appealed to, or chosen instruments of vengeance are secretly engaged to wreak the rage of the lodge despots and of the liquor lords upon the faithful ones who dare to declare the truth about the trade, or the dens which foster the vices that would ruin the peace and prosperity of our homes and country.

Slavery and lodgery were faithful allies before the war. Saloonery and lodgery are now equally bound to support each other against the glorious progress of sentiment in favor of emancipation from their direful sway.

Morgan, Lovejoy and Haddock were martyr victims without forms of law as scores of others were; and John Brown equally martyred, though by the form of law, inspired the march of our armies. The trial of Haddock's murderers will soon tell whether saloonery or law is supreme in Iowa and the sooner or later probable result in our whole country.

T. H.

The divine origin of the Bible is proved by its doctrine of sin. It does not say idolatry is unreasonable and unmanly, but a sin. Sabbath-breaking, killing, lying, stealing, adultery, swearing and covetousness are sins. The Bible condemnation of sin tends to lead wicked men to repentance. In this very point much modern Christian effort is vain. The church does not say with the emphasis of the Bible: Sabbath desecration is a sin, the raising, sale or use of tobacco is a sin, the making, sale or use of intoxicating liquor is a sin, the administering, concealing or taking of a secret lodge oath is sin. The Bible doctrine is that sin is to be confessed as publicly as the offence; to be atoned for as far as ability and justice admit; to be abandoned, hated and condemned, not sneaked around and concealed. It is not enough to tell wicked men that their acts are ungentlemanly, expensive, unhygienic and unwise. No man was ever led to sound repentance and eternal life by such surface arguments. "The soul that sinneth shall die" is the Gospel tocsin that rouses the sleeping sinner to cry for mercy and accept deliverance through the atonement of Jesus Christ.—Christian Witness.

THE COLORED MASONS OF MISSISSIPPI.

AN ORGANIZATION OF MURDERERS.

A Grenada, Miss., letter to the New York Herald says: Greenwood, the county seat of Leflore county, Miss., is situated upon the Yazoo, two miles below the confluence of the Yallo Busha and Tallahatchee rivers.

The country around Greenwood forms a portion of what is known as the "Black Belt"—the negroes being in the majority of five to one—and is part of the famous Yazoo delta, the richest and most productive country upon the globe.

In this immediate section within the last two weeks evidence has been obtained which threw the whole county into the greatest excitement and astonishment and has unearthed crimes of great enormity.

Dick Murrell, a Negro, came to Leflore county several years ago from the neighborhood of Selma, Ala., accompanied by six or seven brothers and sisters. They were all bright mulattoes and fearless dare-devils, but Dick seemed to be by far the best and most law-abiding of the lot.

They were all, except Dick, implicated in trouble in Leflore county years ago, when one of them was killed and the others required to leave the country.

A year after that Matthew Beck, one of the best and most law-abiding citizens of the county, and who was involved in the original trouble with the Murrells, was assassinated. Circumstantial evidence pointed to the Murrells as the assassins, and they were arrested in Alabama, but were discharged upon habeas corpus before the people of Leflore county had the opportunity of presenting their evidence. They have not been heard of since, but Dick Murrell was not connected or involved in any of this trouble, and has always been regarded a good citizen.

In 1880 there came to Leflore county, as a teacher in the public school, a Negro named Henderson, who, after teaching a while, was appointed United States census taker. While acting in that capacity he was instrumental in organizing in Greenwood the first lodge of colored Masons in the county. Soon afterward Henderson was indicted by the grand jury for forgery, he having drawn a draft with all the names forged, upon which he received money from a Mr. Tinny. While the grand jury was investigating this forgery case, one of the newly-made Masons, a Negro and member of the grand jury, offered to pay Tinny the amount Henderson had obtained from him in order to stop further proceedings.

The order languished until after the overflow in the delta in 1885, when one Thomas W. Stringer, colored, who officiated at the institution of the Greenwood lodge in 1880, again made his appearance, and organized several lodges—one at Surah Mound, a plantation on the Tallahatchee river, about five miles from Greenwood, and one at Dry Bayou, ten miles further up the river, on a plantation largely owned and cultivated by Negroes.

Accident has thrown into the possession of the correspondent the dispensation of Stringer to this lodge. It is dated Vicksburg, Oct. 22, 1885, and appoints certain parties officers of Dry Bayou lodge and authorizes them to admit, initiate, pass, and raise Masons to the sublime degree of Master Mason, and directing them to obey all rules and edicts emanating from the Grand Lodge, and not otherwise.

Henry Taylor, a Negro living on the plantation of a Mr. Stoncill, killed his uncle, Luke Taylor, in the latter part of last July, for acknowledged wrongdoing with Martha Taylor, Henry's wife. The Negroes were much incensed against Henry, as Luke was a member of Dry Bayou lodge, and but for the firmness of Mr. Stoncill would have lynched him. Henry was shortly afterward tried and acquitted by a committing court. Another Negro, George Evans, a short time after this, in an altercation with Ben Harris, also colored, and a Mason, of the Greenwood lodge, shot and killed him. George came into Greenwood badly wounded, claimed the protection of the white people, and was lodged in jail. A few nights afterward a crowd of one hundred Negroes, composed exclusively of the Masons of the Dry Bayou, Surah Mound, and Greenwood lodges, forced the jail, took George Evans about half a mile from the building, hanged him to a tree, and then riddled his body with bullets. As the different crowds disappeared that night the members of the Dry Bayou lodge called out that there was a man in the neighborhood who had killed a man and needed attention.

In the meantime notice was given to Henry Taylor and his wife that the Masons intended killing both of them as soon as a protracted religious meeting, then in progress at Dry Bayou, should close. Henry quit work late in the afternoon of Saturday, August 20, went to his home, and neither he nor his wife has since been seen. After the disappearance of Henry and his wife, the Negro Masons industriously circulated the report that they had fled the country, and this report was not questioned until September 17, when the body of a man was found floating in Tallahatchee River, a few miles below Stoncill's plantation. The corpse was badly decomposed; about the neck a pair of trousers was tied with suspenders, and these trousers and suspenders were identified as belonging to Henry. A coroner's jury was at once impaneled, and after a close investigation, taking four days, the jury returned a verdict of murder against eleven parties, including Dick Murrell and others. These eleven were arrested, and upon a preliminary trial before two magistrates were remanded to jail without bail, except Dick Murrell, who was discharged. Dick had turned States evidence, and given the names of a great number of others implicated in the double murder. The witness upon whose testimony the verdict was rendered by the jury of inquest at the preliminary hearing by the magistrates refused, for a while, to give any evidence, saying that if he testified he would not get home alive. It was only when Dick Murrell, a brave and fearless fellow, told what he knew, that the recalcitrant witness could be induced to testify against his brother Masons.

It had been fully proved before the jury of inquest that a part of the obligation taken by the fraternity was to avenge the wrong or injury done to any Mason, and that it was the duty of the officers of the lodge to see that the same was carried out. That they kept this obligation the recent deaths of George Evans and Henry and Martha Taylor fully shows. The body of Martha has never been found, but evidence has been obtained that she, too, was shot at the same time and place that Henry met his death. Both bodies were carried out upon a log projecting into the river and thrown in, Martha's dress being filled with rocks and securely tied around her feet.

The main witness against one of the party whose trial was to have begun on the 10th inst., cannot now be found. Dan Miller, another important witness who told of the obligation, has also disappeared, leaving his crop and family behind. No conception of the difficulty of obtaining evidence can be had, except by those engaged in ferreting out the matter. Negroes outside the order stand in mortal and ineffable dread of the enmity of the fraternity, and it is only after the most solemn promise of protection by the whites that they will consent to tell anything. Now, however, that the silence of members of the order has been broken, no difficulty is apprehended by the grand jury, which shortly convenes, in gathering all the testimony needed to establish the existence of this hellish obligation and their terrible executions.

The parties implicated are some of the most prosperous and thrifty Negroes in the county. Some own real estate, and many raise annually from fifty to one hundred bales of cotton. Should the matter be prosecuted to its full extent, as it most certainly will be, the white planters of the northern and central portions of the county will be heavy financial losers. They are very much enraged over the enormity of the crimes, and though pecuniarily interested in having the personal attention and labor of the Negroes in gathering their crops, yet they refuse to go on bonds, secure attorneys' fees, or to do anything except to ferret out and punish the perpetrators.

THE PHYSICAL AND MORAL NECESSITY OF THE SABBATH.

In an appeal for Sabbath rest Dr. Humphrey mentions a case which has often been cited: "A contractor went on to the West, with his hired men and teams, to make a turnpike road. At first he paid no regard to the Sabbath, but continued his work as on other days. He soon found, however, that the ordinances of nature, no less than the moral law, were against him. His laborers became sickly; his teams grew poor and feeble, and he was fully convinced that more was lost than gained by working on the Lord's day. So true is it that the Sabbath laborer, like the glutton and the drunkard, undermines his health, prematurely hastens the infirmities of age and his exit from the world." Two thousand men "were employed for years seven days in a week. To render them contented in giving up their right to the Sabbath as a day of rest, that birthright of the human family, they paid them double wages on that day—eight days' wages for seven days' work. But they could not make them moral nor keep them healthy. Things went badly and they changed their course—employed the men only six days in a week and allowed them to rest on the Sabbath. The consequence was that they did more work than ever before. This, the superintendent said, was owing to two causes, the demoralization of the people under the first system, and their exhaustion of bodily strength, which was visible the most casual observer." Mr. Bianconi, of Clonmel, in Ireland, proprietor at the time of one hundred and ten vehicles which traveled from eight to ten miles an hour, stated before a statistical society that none of the cars except those connected with the mail were run on Sabbath; that he found it much easier to work a horse eight miles an hour every week day, in place of six miles, than an additional six on Sabbath; and that by this plan there was a saving of thirteen per cent. He added, in conclusion: "I am persuaded that man cannot be wiser than his Maker."

In that remarkable cabinet of thought and information on this subject by James Gilfillan, to whom we are indebted for the above facts, this sentence strikes us: "Hogarth, like himself, is true to nature when, in one of the early plates in the series of 'Industry and Idleness,' he represents the idle apprentice, whose course ends at the gallows, as gambling on a Sabbath day upon a tombstone during divine service." We need the Sabbath to curb, to restrain, to overcome these corrupt natures of ours. We need it to divert the whole current of our lives from channels of earthly-mindedness to those of the Spirit. We need it to open our souls to the reception of the light of the Sun of Righteousness. We need it to bathe our souls, polluted with sin, in the fountain of the Redeemer's blood. We need it to clothe our souls with the spotless robes of the righteousness of Christ. We need it to satisfy the hunger and quench the thirst of our souls with the bread and water of life. We need it to hold communion with the Master and drink in his love as the fleece drinks in the dew. We need it for distributing the manna that grows in the midst of the Paradise of God, and scattering the leaves of the tree of life which are for the healing of the nations. And when that blessed Sabbath arrives that is promised in the Word, when the sound of the woodman's axe and blacksmith's anvil will not be heard, when the rattling of the wheels of the mill, the shuttle and the loom will not be heard, when the rumbling of the trains, the shrill whistle of the steam boat, and the thundering applause of the maddening crowd on the pleasure grounds will not be heard, when the plough will lie still in the furrow and the yoke will not pass the ox's neck, when the roofs, chimneys, steeples and monuments of our cities will rise in an atmosphere less murky than on other days, and when the churches will be filled with anxious hearers, who will hang on the preacher's lips like bees in a swarm, then will these words of the Saviour be verified: "The Sabbath was made for man."—Rev. J. M. Foster.

STRANGE FIGURING.

The Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias of Pennsylvania, met at Williamsport, Wednesday, August 15, 1887, and representatives are reported present from 500 lodges, while another part of the annual report claims only 388 lodges in this commonwealth. This report says that during the past year only seventeen new lodges have been organized, while five had surrendered their charters, leaving a net gain of only twelve new lodges in Pennsylvania, with its sixty-six counties and many large cities. Some things in this report strike us as most singular, if not a little salty. According to it, the receipts of the year were $10,347.23, which added to a balance on hand from the previous year of $6,728.87 make the total receipts only $17,076.10; and yet this report says that the lodges spent in the last year, for the relief of brethren, $130,445.20; for the burial of the dead, $35,099.55; and for the relief of "widowed families," $1,099.96, or a total of $166,592.71; and still there was a balance on hand of $6,567.16, making a grand total of $173,150.87. These figures, this grand report says, are taken from the reports of "the Grand Master of the Exchequer" and "the Grand Keeper of Records and Seal," and of course must be taken as true, by outside people who cannot understand lodge manipulations of money matters, or how an annual income of only $17,076.10 can be made to pay an outlay of $173,160.87. When the report says, "This shows a good work among the distressed and sick," it reminds us of the miraculous multiplication of the loaves and fishes. But we feel sorry that the brave Knights of Pythias could not find it in their hearts to give "widowed families," in the entire twelve months, only $1,049.96 out of an expenditure of $166,593.71.

Surely, the 37,466 members now claimed in Pennsylvania do not remember the widow and the fatherless in a way that is "very flattering to the present administration." The K. of P. report "a fund on hand and amount invested of $657,342." Perhaps from this they drew the excess of their expenditures over receipts, amounting in the last year to $156,-074.67. At this rate it would take but little over four years to exhaust the entire "investment" and wind up the K. of P. financially.—Sandy Lake News.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

DR. HASSELQUIST INTERVIEWED.

NEAR FAIRFIELD, Iowa, Oct. 25, 1887.

The day is faultless. The region through which we are passing is one of the best improved in this rich and fertile State. Drouth has evidently effected crops, but stock, as seen from the cars, seem to be in fine condition. Corn husking is evidently the special order among farmers, and every thing indicates a busy season. A pleasant incident was the meeting with Dr. Hasselquist, who has been my traveling companion since five o'clock this morning, who is a deeply interested student of the secret lodge system and converses intelligently upon any phase of our great movement.

He said, in substance, "I do not pretend to predict the future, but it does seem to me that a crisis is near at hand, and I have thought the devil might be organizing the secret empire for the final conflict." He expressed hearty admiration for the N. C. A., but wondered that the workers were not so disheartened as to abandon the field.

Such thoughts indicate a comprehension of the issues involved which is possible only to the prayerful and well-informed, and it is encouraging to find one who is a leader in the religious and educational movements of a great denomination presenting a rare exception to the general rule of ignorance or indifference on a question so vital. Dr. Hasselquist was glad of an opportunity to examine the Knights of Labor covenant, and to have assurance of its genuineness on so good authority as that of the late John B. Finch. The proof was on this wise. Referring to me and holding in his hand a copy of the Knight of Labor exposition, which on his request I handed him as he stood before the audience, he read such extracts from the covenant as he chose, thus having a full knowledge of what he was asserting. Directing his remarks to me, he said, in substance, "If you were never a member of the order, you must have stolen that obligation, and in that case you must be a thief. If you were ever a member you obligated yourself to keep its secrets, and in that case you must be a liar; and in either case you are a fool."

This novel demonstration rather amused the Dr., but he thought it severe language for a gentleman to use, and rather hard on me. I replied that I could well afford to be sacrificed in that way, to obtain the confirmation of the correctness of that obligation by so notable a member, and before an audience of intelligent people.

The Dr. reported a healthy state of affairs at Augustana College and the Theological Seminary, and will have something to say in his paper about the New Orleans convention, which he heartily endorses.

PRINCETON.

Stepping from the car I grasped the hand of Bro. M. N. Butler. This town has improved since I was here before. Old wooden structures have given place to substantial two-story bricks, and the indications are of a brisk business. The court house stands in the middle of an unfenced square and shows signs of age. Its outer walls are embellished with temperance sentiments: east side, "Whisky a national curse;" south, "Prohibition;" west, "Help save the boys. Vote for home;" north, "Redeem Mercer county." This is where our meeting is to be held, and I am hoping for a good time.

BRO. NEEDELS AND THE AMERICAN PARTY.

ALBANY, Mo., Oct. 28, 1887.—After the successful termination of the meeting at Princeton on the evening of the 26th, I came to Albany, and thence six miles in the country to the home of our old friend George W. Needels. I cannot conceive of a more hearty welcome or more generous hospitality than I received from Bro. Needels and his excellent wife. We read the Word, united in song, prayed and talked together as the hours flew by on swift wing. His desire is to plan and do for "God and home and native land" while it is day, for he says, "What I do I must do quickly." His admiration of the Cynosure is unabated, but he is deeply impressed with the necessity of a political party and organ that shall do in the sphere of politics what the N. C. A. is doing for the churches, and he is ready to back any feasible movement in that direction to the extent of his ability. His desire is for a leader, and party organ that shall take a bold stand and enter upon an aggressive, uncompromising course with its head center at Washington, D. C., and its outposts at every point where they can be planted. Evidently he has thought and prayed earnestly over the matter and has plans which he hopes yet to see in some measure realized, but it would be better for him than for me to explain. Though he has said or written but little of his views of late, he is as much in earnest as ever he was when defending his rights and the honor of his flag in the dark days of rebellion. Bro. B. T. Roberts is to spend next week in a protracted effort with him and other brethren in this vicinity, and he is hoping to obtain light, and by council to reach a conclusion and mature some plan upon which he can successfully push forward the cause of the American party, a work to which he feels specially called of God. Let us pray that we may "see eye to eye," and stand shoulder to shoulder in "the unity of the Spirit and the bond of peace."

A SABBATH IN OLATHE.

OCT. 31.—I am waiting for a train to Greenfield, Mo. Bro. Butler preceded me on Saturday and I stopped over to spend Sabbath. My first call was on Rev. W. W. McMillan, whose greetings were most cordial. I regretted to find his excellent wife suffering from temporary illness, but was glad to find her much improved this morning. Rev. J. H. Wylie, successor to Bro. McMillan, was absent assisting his brother in communion services at Washington,Iowa. He is much esteemed and highly commended in the community. At the house of Bro.H Curtis I found Rev. J. C. Bernhard, and a home in good, old-fashioned welcome. Bro. Bernhard was engaged in a protracted effort and it was arranged that I should speak on Saturday evening and on Sabbath. Rev. Mrs. Shaw of Boston gave a lecture in the United Presbyterian church under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., which doubtless diminished the attendance, but a fair audience assembled at the hour of evening services. Several old friends came forward at the close and among them Bro. Bishop, whom I last met as professor in Avalon College,Mo He is now pastor of the Congregationalist church in this city. The Sabbath evening congregation was much larger than either that preceded and I spoke with some liberty from the words, "What will you do with Jesus which is called Christ." I noticed Rev. McMillan, Dr. Bell, Mr. Achison,Mr.Miller,and other Covenanters in the audience, and learned that there was some disappointment that no mention was made of the lodge system. A movement is in progress to arrange a union service on my return and I propose by the help of God to speak once again on this iniquitous system in Olathe. On Saturday there was a large crowd gathered from the country, and as I passed among them I did not witness a brawl, see a bloody face, hear an oath or detect the influence of liquor in a single instance. The season has been favorable and crops exceptionally good in Johnston county, and all the good people are satisfied with prohibition which does prohibit,in spite of the hell holes of Kansas City, only twenty miles away.

WELCOME TO SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI.

DADEVILLE, Mo., Nov. 1, 1887.—From Olathe I came to Walnut Grove, Mo., on the Gulf Road, reaching the station at 5 P. M. A friend with mules and hack was ready to convey me some twelve miles to Friendship Baptist church. The way was through woods and over what must be a rough and romantic country, with clearings, cabins, and occasionally more pretentious dwellings. The weather was warm and the moon in its full strength. Doors were open and in many instances we could see the cheerful blaze in the old-fashioned fireplace. We reached the church a few minutes after seven o'clock, and found it environed with teams hitched to the trees, and packed with intelligent men and women, who had come, some of them, from five or six miles away to hear a lecture on Masonic religion. It was the third meeting by Bro. Butler, and the audience,which had grown from twenty on Sabbath morning to the full capacity of the church, was a decided compliment to the speaker. Bro. Butler was armed with Masonic works and showed himself master of the subject. The attention and order were unexceptional and the enthusiasm at the close exceedingly gratifying to witness. I had been on the cars and in the hack since eleven o'clock, missing supper and not having a chance to wash, but improved the opportunity to put in a few words. Arrangements were made to have a strong delegation at the court house in Greenfield to-night, and the meeting adjourned with benediction by Elder Brookins. A hearty hand shaking followed, and I accepted the cordial invitation of Mr. Wood Kirby, who took Bro. Butler and myself three or four miles, where we were most hospitably entertained by him and his excellent wife, who is deeply interested and thoroughly enlisted in the work. We are now waiting at the postoffice in this village for conveyance to Greenfield, where we are to renew the discussion this evening.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 26, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Around Mobile Bay and down to Pensacola, Fla., is an uneventful ride. There are a few lumber and turpentine villages and but little cultivation. I did not see one cotton field in all this region. Small fields of sugar-cane are seen, and some of turnips or other garden vegetables, but little or no grain of any sort. The soil is too poor. Near Pensacola almost nothing is cultivated. There are a few orange trees and might be more, for they seem to be bearing fairly well. The swamp land, if drained, would undoubtedly be fertile, but the sand hills seem to be moved about by the winds.

Nevertheless, Pensacola is a pretty and flourishing little city. Young it is not, for its old Spanish origin is indicated by the names of its streets, and by some of the signs on its stores. It is at least twice as old as Chicago, but until within a few years it has been but an insignificant village. The opening up of the great lumber region of Southern Alabama and West Florida, and the fact that it has the deepest harbor south of Norfolk, are making it an important place. It has now a population of over 14,-000, with many fine public and private buildings, and is in marked contrast with Mobile in the energy and public spirit of its citizens. It is becoming an important winter resort, and has some fine hotels. The custom house, court house, and public school-building for whites, are fine structures. There is also a public school for the colored people, who constitute about half of the population. In number and size of the ships in the harbor it surpasses any city on the southern coast; but they are nearly all engaged in the lumber trade. I did not see one bale of cotton. The wages paid here seem to be better than anywhere else in the South, though the employment is not constant. Intemperance, Sabbath-breaking and kindred immoralities are exceedingly prevalent. There are very few professed Christians, I am told, who do not drink wine and beer.

I attended the meeting of colored ministers on Saturday afternoon at the A. M. E. Zion church and spoke for forty-five minutes on the secret lodge system. I had careful attention. Two of the brethren are Masons, and one of them is a devoted one. He said that Moses was the first Mason, and that Christ and the apostles were Masons. This he knew, and that a man who was not a Mason could not understand Masonic books or know anything about it. He claimed to have historical proof that the Saints John were Masons, but when confronted with testimony of the Grand Secretary of the A. F. and A. M. of Iowa, he said that Mr. Parvin did not know what he was saying. It was useless to attempt to contend against so much wisdom(?). Here is a man who is as miserably ignorant of the English language as he is of the facts of Masonry, who will continue as a pastor to be a "blind leader of the blind."

I attended and addressed the Sabbath-school in the African M. E. church; and preached at 3 P. M. in the A. M. E. Zion church, the largest in the city, and at night had a good congregation in the A. M. E. church. The pastors of these churches, who are holding revival meetings, showed me much kindness.

Monday morning at 6:50 I left for New Orleans which place I reached at 7:20 P. M. For a long way southwest of Mobile the road passes through pine barrens. Then in Southern Mississippi there is a better country, a number of pretty towns, and some grand views of Old Ocean. It was amusing to see how many places are aspiring to be fashionable resorts, and the names they take. "Orange Grove" had three small houses, but not an orange tree. "Arlington Heights" is simply an enclosure with a sign over the gate. It is perhaps five feet higher than the surrounding plain. But Scranton, Mississippi City, Pass Christian, Bay St. Louis, and some others are pretty places. Beyond this the rivers, lakes and marshes seem interminable, until the train suddenly emerges from the woods and the long array of electric lights tell us that we have reached the "Crescent City."

New Orleans is a good ways from the sea, but I found that sharks are not confined to salt water. I was not badly bitten, and after a good night's rest felt renewed hope and courage. It is probable that New Orleans, in spite of recent storms and floods, was never so prosperous as to-day. A full cotton crop is being harvested earlier than usual and rapidly marketed. An unusually fine growth of sugar-cane is also early, and is being manufactured. There was a better corn crop, and planters have less to buy. Southern Louisiana has more oranges than in any year since 1880.

I went out to Leland University, and all along St. Charles Street for several miles there are beautiful orange trees bending with fruit. At Leland the young trees that I had supposed killed beyond redemption are quite full. I did not find President Mitchell at home, but met a kind reception from the professors and teachers. I went also to Straight University, where I found an unusual number of students for the season and President Hitchcock and his corps of teachers hard at work, but kindly courteous and sympathetic. At a second visit to Leland I became acquainted with President Mitchell, late a Chicago pastor, and formerly president of Shurtliff College, Alton, Ill. I found him quite in sympathy with our reform. He was quite willing to have me address the students, but advised that we wait till a larger number are in attendance. This school, with its beautiful location, fine buildings and excellent officers and teachers, ought to have a better attendance. It probably will have later.

A new school for the education of the colored, known as Columbia University, has just been opened in a central location under the care of Pres. G. W. Bothwell, D.D., late of the Southern University. I called on Dr. Bothwell and found him hearing a class of young ladies recite in "The History of English Literature." I saw that they were readers and thinkers. The school opened on the 24th with seventy students. He expects the number to double next week. Dr. Bothwell is pastor of the Central Congregational church, and says that he will do all that he can to aid the convention which it is proposed to hold in that church, and that he is in entire sympathy with the work of the N. C. A.

There has been for the last year or two a growing reaction against the secret orders in this city and in this State. This has been due in part to a conviction of their sinfulness, but more to the rascality of many who are at the head of the orders. Never was a more favorable time to push our reform.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES OF NEW ORLEANS.

Among the five so-called universities open to the colored youth of New Orleans, Straight is the oldest, most largely attended and best supported. There are nineteen professors and teachers, including the able president, Rev. Dr. Hitchcock. A Congregational church, made up largely of students, has been organized and worships in the chapel. Prof. Berger acts as pastor. In the Law department of this school there has been for years the co-education of both white and colored students. There has been no friction and no dream of social equality or miscegenation. All have accepted it as the equal opportunity of equal citizens to understand and interpret the laws to which all are alike subject. Had it been in Georgia Mr. Glenn would have been greatly shocked, but here in Louisiana race distinctions have never been so strongly marked. In ante-bellum days there were Negro slaveholders who ranked with the aristocracy, and whose children had the best of educational advantages. The horror of race contamination was never felt by the old French settlers as it was by those of English origin; and Roman Catholicism—with all its faults—is far less tolerant of the proscriptive spirit, which excludes the colored worshiper from his Father's house, than most of the Protestant churches of the South. Whoever visits these five schools will see in all of them every shade of color, from the pure black to those whom the unpracticed eye cannot distinguish from the Caucasian race. Nor will he find that talent depends on complexion. As often as any way the pure Negro comes to the front and carries off the prize of oratory or scholarship.

Among the schools visited, New Orleans University deserves mention. It is under the patronage of the M. E. church and the care of President Adkinson. It has about 150 students, but expects a considerable increase later in the season. A large, fine building is nearly completed, and will add greatly to their means of instruction. The president cheerfully accepted our literature; but, while his treatment was very courteous, he thought it would be very imprudent to allow an address to the students on the subject of secret societies lest friends should be alienated. This is one of the few schools of the South that has declined to give me a hearing, and in all instances by men who had but just come on the field, and had no just comprehension of the nature and importance of the subject. It is only a question of time when they will think differently.

Just beside this large, new university building is one still larger, and, though studiously plain, is a noble structure. It is the new Jewish Orphan Asylum. I was politely shown through the building by Rabbi Heyman, who, with his wife, has general supervision. The Rabbi is a devoted Jew. He had established a school for the education of his people in Damascus and also in Algeria. He said that Jesus was a good Jew, and that he hoped all Christians would become as good Jews as Jesus was. He did not explain how a good Jew could pretend to be the Messiah when he was not. The building cost about $90,000, and will accommodate 300 widows and orphans. The money was raised by the contribution of the benevolent among this people, who, it would seem, contribute more in proportion to their numbers than any other class of people. There are about 150 orphans, most of whom attend the public school, but the youngest have a Kindergarten in their home. The little ones looked bright and comfortable.

The relation of the Jewish body to the secret lodge system is seen in the fact that there are four distinctly Jewish secret societies, and that the Grand Lodge of one of these, the I. O. B. B., appoints one-half of the directors of this institution. The corner stone of this building was laid by the Masonic Grand Master of the State, with the usual Masonic ceremonies. In his address he claimed that King Solomon was a Mason, and that of this fact "there is powerful and convincing evidence." What a wonderful contribution to history if this "evidence" could be shown. No one will question that in all these ceremonies and prayers there was no mention made of Jesus the Christ, though in the last prayer there was a petition for the "Messianic time." It would be a great accession to the Hebrew fold, and no loss to Christianity, but a most consistent and appropriate thing if all Freemasons would consent to be circumcised and unite with a body with which they are so intimately related.

Because of other engagements I was obliged to decline an invitation to address the students of Straight University, where I was most hospitably entertained. I became acquainted here with two Congregational pastors of the city, Rev. Isaac Hall and Rev. C. H. Claibourne, who earnestly sympathize with our work and will do what they can to aid our convention. The former said that out of 150 members he had not one that belonged to a secret order. The latter said he had belonged to the Freemasons, Odd-fellows and the Tabernacle; that he had been swindled by them all, and that he left them because his conscience would not allow him to remain. He had never seen an exposition of Masonry, and when I showed him "Freemasonry Illustrated" he said, "Here is what I paid many dollars for in the lodge." He has promised to write out his experience in the orders. H. H. HINMAN.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE CONVENTION.

Our editor's letters give a general review of the meeting last week in Manchester, New Hampshire, the daily Union of that city has a detailed report of considerable length, and great fairness, from which we gather the following particulars:

The eleventh annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association opened Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The meetings are being held with the Elm Street Christian Advent church, and are productive of much interest, the attendance having been large since the opening session. Delegates are present from all over the State, and speakers from both Massachusetts and Maine are in attendance. A special feature of the session has been the singing, which is led by F. E. Blackmer and wife of Springfield, Mass., Mrs. Blackmer acting as accompanist. Seldom at a convention in this city has finer music been heard than that rendered by these charming vocalists.

The session opened at the time designated with a service of prayer, following which Elder C. L. Baker, pastor of the Advent Christian church, welcomed the Association to the city and to the hearts and homes of his parishioners, his remarks being responded to by the president of the Association, Rev. Isaac Hyatt of Gilford. The appointment of the various committees on resolutions, etc., followed, and then the afternoon meeting was brought to a close by President Hyatt, who delivered an interesting discourse on "How to Overcome Evil," the method advanced being the Biblical one of subduing evil with good.

After a prayer meeting in the evening, business was resumed and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Rev. C. L. Baker of Manchester; Vice-presidents, by counties: Belknap, Elder J. G. Smith; Carroll, B. M. Mason; Cheshire, F. S. Wood; Coos, Elder S. Lang; Grafton, Prof. J. K. Lord; Hillsborough, Rev. E W. Oakes; Merrimack, A. H. Brown; Rockingham, Rev. Edward Robie, D. D; Strafford, Deacon Moses Pierce; Sullivan, C. W. J. Fletcher:

CORRESPONDENCE.

REFORM CONGREGATIONS IN AND ABOUT PITTSBURGH.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 1, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Prof. D. McAllister, LL.D., has been installed pastor of the Eighth Street Reformed Presbyterian congregation, of which Rev. A. M. Milligan, D.D., was for twenty years pastor. This is one of the best congregations in the Covenanter body, and it is believed Dr. McAllister will fill the place with perfect satisfaction. It is fitting that a typical National Reformer should be the successor of one whose whole soul was consecrated to that work. Pittsburgh has been the headquarters for the movement heretofore, and there will be no change so long as this Professor of Political Philosophy occupies that pulpit.

Last Thursday evening I lectured in the McDonald Town Hall on the "Moral Responsibility and Accountability of Nations." The audience was not very large. The superintendent of the public schools was out and Bro. D. W. Irons, United Presbyterian pastor and principal of the Academy. On Friday evening I lectured in the same place on "The State and Moral Law." On Sabbath evening I preached in the United Presbyterian church of which Bro. Irons has charge, on "The Dominion of Christ." After three evenings McDonald ought to be well indoctrinated in National Reform.

Washington county is perhaps the richest in the State in natural resources. A rich soil on the surface, and under it a coal bed of six feet, together with oil and gas wells. Last Sabbath we assisted Rev. John Slater at the communion in the Miller's Run Reformed Presbyterian congregation. Father Slater has been the pastor of this congregation for forty-four years. He is an old blue-stocking Covenanter. He combines the courage of John Knox, who said before the Privy Council, "I am in a place where I am demanded of God to speak the truth, and therefore the truth I speak, impugn it whoso list," with the convictions of Luther, who said before the Diet at Worms, "I cannot submit my faith either to the Pope or the council. Here I stand. I can say no more. God help me. Amen." It is in striking contrast with the sickening conformity of our times. A secular historian says: "I know of none equal to Bunyan's Facing-both-ways, the fellow with one eye on heaven and one on earth, who sincerely preaches one thing and sincerely does another, and from the intensity of his reality is unable even to see or feel the contradiction. He is substantially trying to cheat both God and the devil, and in reality only cheating himself and his neighbor. This of all characters upon the earth appears to me to be the one of which there is no hope at all—a character becoming in these days alarmingly abundant."

THE EVANGELIST MUNHALL AT COLUMBUS.

COLUMBUS, O.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There is a much needed revival work being carried on in this city by Dr. Munhall, assisted by the singers, Dr. Towner and wife. This work was instituted by a union of the pastors of several of the churches. Special services were begun Sabbath evening, Oct. 23d, and have continued every afternoon and evening. We have been wonderfully encouraged, blessed and helped in attending these meetings. The doctor wields the sword of the Spirit with a masterly hand and thus evinces the truth of his calling. So far his effort has been to get Christians prepared for work, by dispelling false ideas, giving them right conceptions of truth, and getting them to act according to knowledge.

I would like to write at length of these discourses, but I may only speak of the sermon last night, as it will the most interest Cynosure readers. The subject was "Separation from the World." Several passages of Scripture were read, Ex. 33: 16 and 2 Cor. 6: 14 among them. The speaker dwelt at length on the latter passage. Said he, "I am going to talk pretty plain to you to-night. I am going to tell you some things that most preachers don't dare to tell you, but it is God's truth," etc. Then with an eloquence that is born alone of God, with a courage that is alone to the saint, he riveted the attention of his audience, while he showed how professed Christians were going hand-in-hand with the world, how they were "unequally yoked together with unbelievers." First the marriage relation was noticed. Christian women united to unholy men, and Christian men married to sinful women. Theater-goers were yoked in, were helping to support ungodly and devilish performances. Card-players who professed Christianity could not ask God's blessing on their game. Business men were often unequally yoked; were partners in business that broke God's laws. The railway business was cited as an instance. "A professed Christian who will rent his building for a saloon or brothel ought to be kicked out of the church, I don't care who he is, or how rich he is!" said the speaker.

Next came the

on which the doctor spoke substantially as follows: "I have been bumped into nearly all the secret societies going, and so know what I am talking about. I am out of all but two, and shall leave them if they don't behave. If these societies do as they claim they may do some good in benevolent ways. One secret society that I joined, shortly after I came in proposed a ball. I protested as a Christian. They went ahead with their ball. I took my hat and said good-bye. Another fitted up one end of the lodge-room for theatrical performances and I left. Two men, intimate friends of mine whose names were on the church book, could not find time to attend prayer-meeting once a year, and yet they traveled half way across the continent to attend a conclave of Knights, dance and parade. There are many professed Christians who pay $250 a year lodge dues who can scarcely pay $10 to church work, times are so hard. Such men are going to the devil. I lived in a town where there were thirty-four secret societies; young men going to hell by the hundreds. We wanted $600 to start a Young Men's Christian Association. I tried to raise the money (and if I cannot raise money then others need not try). I could not get it, and yet every one of those lodges were spending more every year than we wanted. Brethren, there is something wrong somewhere! Why don't you say Amen!" Several responses were heard from the audience. W. B. STODDARD.

TRUTH TRIUMPHING AMONG THE BAPTISTS OF TEXAS.

HEARNE, Texas.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Learning of the efforts and aims of your organization, I drop you these lines, and mail you a list of our pastors and ask that you mail tracts, or any thing that will help them come to the light. My people (colored) are given to societies. I have spent ten years out of fifty-two at their altars. They are greatly injuring my people, and are fast falling into disuse. I got a few of your tracts from Rev. Countee of Memphis, and used them to a good advantage.

Last Sabbath one of our churches had a corner-stone laid in Brazos county by the Odd-fellows, and when they were done the mason (brick-layer) builded one of the pillars on which the church was to rest. Pastor and people stood by and saw the work go on. They don't know of the wickedness. "How can I, except some man guide me?" said the eunuch to Phillip.

At our State convention, held October 12–16 at Brenham, I had private talks with a great number of our pastors, and found four out of five willing to give up the lodge. Some had on pins representing three different societies. The colored people are quite ready for these great reforms. They need reading matter. Thousands are too poor to pay for it, and others don't know where to send for it. Mailing something to a few will greatly help.

I met the chief man of the colored Odd-fellows, who is a professor in our Bishop College, at Marshall, Texas, and gave him a pamphlet which he read with great care, and promised to read up on the matter, and if he found the societies harmful he would quit. It is surprising to know how willing a great many of our best men are to throw off their yoke of lodge tomfoolery.

I would like to take your paper, but am too poor. I have been in the campaign of my State and Tennessee, and in the latter I got nothing for my work, and thereby was unable to meet a note on my home, and lost it. I returned home last week from Tennessee to find my wife and child out of doors. A friend gave me a "crank pin." I put it on and will try it again, and only pray God to give me strength and courage to spend and be spent in saving my people, and advancing the cause and kingdom of Jesus. I am yours in Jesus,

NATIONAL REFORM IN NORTHERN WISCONSIN.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I was overjoyed by Bro. Gault's visit lately, and presentation of National Reform ideas. The impression he made on his audiences was strong, and I trust will be lasting. Living two miles in the country, doing all my locomotion on foot, and 77 years of age, I could not personally do much to aid him; but my acquaintance with him, and the hearing his two soul-stirring lectures was to me as an oasis in the desert of my experience here. I think his remarks on Moses might be well entitled a grand answer to the "Mistakes of Moses," by Ingersoll. And I think if his lecture were advertised in some such words it might attract an audience. I exceedingly regret that no collection nor contribution was made for the cause. But I am certain that such an impression was made as will justify a second effort here. I am perfectly convinced that this country is doomed to destruction; it may be a speedy and a terrible one, if not averted by timely repentance. THOS. BARLAND.

PITH AND POINT.

ALL TOGETHER FOR REFORM.

I have been a reader of the Christian Cynosure for ten years. I have valued its teachings because they are sound, and correct, according to the Bible standard. I have also felt a deep interest in the gradual improvement of the paper and the rapid advance of the great principles which it advocates. I stand in heart with the sturdy workers, men and women, in front of the battle, ever ready to bend the bow and shoot the arrow against this Babylon of modern idolatry, so near akin to Diabolus, the leader of King Alcohol's army. I have taken my stand against both, and try to obstruct their onward movements; but prayer is my greatest weapon, and to take hold of the Almighty arm that moves the world is my blessed privilege.

The temperance work ought to be conducted without secrecy of any kind. Grips and passwords are offensive to a great many. My ideal is one grand open temperance society. Ministers of the Gospel and members of all Christian churches should come together and stand side by side as total abstainers in one mighty phalanx against these two giant sins of the age. To his church Christ delegated this work of saving the world.—MRS. A. P.

THANK GOD FOR CHRISTIAN COURAGE.

I hold my "demit" as a Master Mason in good standing, and for years the devil had me so hood-winked and the Masonic "cable-tow" such a reassuring turn "about my neck" that I really thought Masonry next to godliness. But, thanks be unto the God of all grace, by his Spirit and Word, through sanctified human agency, my eyes were opened to see Satan's hatred of Jesus, and that Masonry not only ignored but virtually dethroned my blessed Redeemer. Since which time (6 years ago) I have not shunned to expose the hell-born oaths and obligations of the order.—B. F. HATHAWAY.

HE SAW THE RESCUE OF MILLER.

I was once tolerably well stocked with Anti masonic works, but they are all stolen from me. I lived in Leroy, New York, and saw Miller, the printer, when they rescued him from the Mason mob; when John Haskell played so conspicuous a part and overcame Dr. Sheldon, who was as rabid as a tiger. I remember many other scenes, too numerous to mention in this short letter; and likewise scenes in the courts where they swore they were Masons and the oaths were true.—LEDGER COWLEY, Farmington, Mich.

FROM AN ARIZONA PASTOR.

Your excellent paper was duly received and I must candidly confess myself much pleased with the bold and clear position it takes for the cause of the church. I appreciate it still the more because it is radical. It gives no uncertain sound. You cannot be charged with the sentence, "I would that ye were either hot or cold, but since you are lukewarm I will spew you out of my mouth". When the church will drop the friendship of this world and trust wholly in the Lord and carry forward without mistrust in the result of a faithful course, and stand like our great men in God's Word, the world will soon worship at the feet of Christ, King of kings and Lord of lords. Since my conversion I understood it my duty to be radical upon all questions of moral reform, and have been convinced ever since it to be the only true position for an honest person to take in order to succeed.—H. J. E.

FROM A NEW ORLEANS COLPORTEUR.

The lodges here are at ease just now, as I am not able to publish free tracts, though every time one of them sees me talking to some one with a paper in my hand they get uneasy. It seems as if our ministers are otherwise engaged and have no time to preach against secretism. My pastor invited me to preach twice since Bro. Hinman was here in last October, 1886. I think Bro. Arnold's tent would do good work here. Any notices, circulars, etc., for the proposed convention here will be gladly received and distributed. As this was Satan's stronghold in slavery days, it is now in lodge days. Pray for our deliverance.—FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII.—Nov. 20.—Judgment and Mercy.—Matt. 11: 20-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.—Matt. 11:28.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The judgment for unbelief. vs. 20-24. The woe pronounced on these cities shows that the greatest sin a nation as well as an individual can commit is that of persistent unbelief. God raises up brave and earnest champions to reprove national sins, and when the people refuse to hear their message they incur terrible guilt. Tyre and Zidon, marts of commerce and trade, rich, populous, luxurious, sunk though they were in the lowest depths of heathen vice, would have repented like Nineveh in sackcloth and ashes if they had beheld "the mighty works" which were of daily occurrence in the cities of Palestine. Especially Capernaum, exalted unto heaven by being made Christ's earthly dwelling place, would have a doom as much more severe than Sodom's as the light was greater against which she sinned. Our own American nation, through her wonderful history, her free institutions and her open Bible has also been exalted to heaven. But she has made material prosperity her god, and, by the election of bad men to power, by the complete secularizing of her government, by the desecration of the Sabbath, by legalizing the rum traffic, and by the rearing of countless lodge altars, the shrines of a false religion and a Christless worship, she is continually provoking God's judgment. The fate of these early nations who have been hurled from their heights of power into the deepest oblivion are set as warning lights for the nations of to-day. Not in vain are these words said (and they apply with special force to America, so strikingly favored of God), "the people or the nation which will not hear that Prophet (Christ) shall be utterly wasted."

2. The truly wise. vs. 25-27. In these wonderful verses Christ's soul seems to have reached a heighth where he could "see the travail of his soul and be satisfied." In a parallel passage it is said that "he rejoiced in spirit;" and all through the Bible God's signal favor to the lowly is made an occasion for exultation. In all ages the true wisdom has been hid from those who make policy their god, and whom their fellow men consider "wise and prudent," but who are only crafty and cunning; while it is revealed to the poor, the simple, the sincere, those who are called by the world "fools" and "cranks" because it can have no appreciation of this highest kind of wisdom. The Huguenots, the Lollards and the Poor Men of Lyons are illustrations. Despised by the world, their principles have triumphed, and their names are honored to-day on the page of history where the names of kings and popes have gathered dust. They saw the truth that prime ministers and courtly diplomats and church dignitaries could not see, because God had revealed it unto them. The history of every reform is an illustration. The world's reformers as a rule have never come from the ranks of the rich and great and learned, but their fountain spring is in humble, God fearing homes. We must become as little children and be willing to be fools for Christ's sake, if we would be the recipients of heavenly wisdom.

3. The call to the heavy laden. vs. 28-30. Many refuse to take up the cross; none can refuse the common burden which all humanity must carry. But when we take Christ's yoke upon us he gives us something else to think about. For our earthly cares he gives us the things of the kingdom to care about; for our daily worries and vexation, the peace and largeness of this new state of being into which we are born. He puts the shadows behind us and the light all before. He makes the prizes of earth show in their real littleness and the rewards of heaven in their real magnitude. It matters little what our worldly lot may be when the world lies at our back. We can take scorn and tribulation and persecution, and be joyful in it. This is to take Chrst's yoke upon us; this is indeed to find rest, to get rid of all the friction of sin, and enjoy the unconstrained freedom of our highest and noblest faculties.

Women of New York State who desire to vote at the coming election are requested to write to Hamilton Wilcox, Esq., 30 East Fourteenth Street, near Fifth Avenue, New York city, for information.

One of the encouraging signs of the times as regards temperance, it is said, is the increasing demand for apples for the drying houses and fruit canning establishments, and which greatly lessen the products of cider mills.

OBITUARY.

DR. JOHN M. CLARK died at Carthage, Indiana, September 6th, 1887, aged 72 years. The notice of his life and character published in the Christian Worker reads as follows:

"He was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, where in 1842 he married Eunice A. Hill, who with one daughter, their only child, survives him. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical School in 1840, and successfully pursued the practice of medicine in North Carolina and Indiana until within a few years. He was a remarkably conscientious and careful physician and was kind and indulgent to the poor. During these years of medical practice he continued to pursue his literary studies, and obtained (in addition to his Greek and Latin) a familiar acquaintance with the German, and also read more or less of the French, Spanish, Italian, Hebrew and Arabic language. He was noted for his close and accurate study both of the Old and New Testament Scriptures (reading them in the Hebrew and Greek) with special reference to the great plan of salvation as taught by Jesus Christ. He had a strong attachment to the principles of the Society of Friends, of which he was a birthright member, but for many years deafness had prevented him from taking an active part in its business or religious meetings. Only a small portion of his meritorious literary productions, both in poetry and prose, have appeared in print from time to time, owing to his natural diffidence and aversion to notoriety. Thus has peacefully passed from us a man of integrity and generosity, whose modest worth endeared him to all who knew him."

Dr. Clark was not only a learned but a pious man, whose whole soul abominated the secret lodge worship which had already in some quarters insinuated itself into the Friends church. His influence and pen were not vainly used to keep the church pure from this evil. He wrote often and ably for the Cynosure over the name "Quaker Boy." He purposed leaving a portion of his property so as to aid in checking the lodge evil. He had provided that $15,000 should be entrusted to the Friends' church for twenty years, the income to be used in circulating, first, anti-secret literature, and second, literature agreeable to the teaching of the Friends on conversion. Before he could put his name to the will he sank under his disease, and never rallied enough to complete his wish. The church and our reform has lost a noble man; may the Lord raise up many who shall take his place.

The death of Jenny Lind Goldschmidt on Tuesday last, at the age of 66 years, removes one who in the prime of her powers was one of the world's most famous singers. She possessed a soprano voice with a range of two and a half octaves and remarkable for sweetness, purity and sympathy. Her advent in this country in 1850, under the management of P. T. Barnum, evoked an enthusiasm in musical circles seldom equaled. There are many people still living in this country who recall with delight the singing and the sweet face of Jenny Lind during her tour of our principal cities. These will learn with sincere regret the news of her death. The song of the Nightingale has been forever hushed, but its echoes will continue to linger in thousands of grateful hearts that beat in harmony with her sweet voice and in sympathy with her nobility as a true woman. Since 1858 she has lived in retirement in London, emerging occasionally to give concerts in aid of the poor, with whom she always deeply sympathized. Her husband was Otto Goldschmidt, a young pianist, who accompanied her on her American tour, and to whom she was married in Boston.—Eve. Journal.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley:—I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals.

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield; In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1887.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 1, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The State meeting in New Hampshire has been eminently crowned with the Divine presence and blessing. I have attended all but two sessions of the three days, and have had reports of them when absent, all but the last evening, which I expect to receive before closing this letter. Others, as well as myself, felt anxious lest bringing in the topics of Faith Healing, Social Purity, and general missionary work should switch off the meeting from its declared object as an auxiliary "opposed to secret societies;" and that tendency was manifest to some extent. The hour and a half assigned to "The National Christian Association" in the printed programme was wholly given to other matters, and I was not heard on that subject, which disappointed some and a few left the hall. But it was good for my humility, and makes my high estimate of the meeting all the more reliable.

Miss I. D. Haines is pastor, or prophetess, of a Free Baptist church in Dexter, Me., where there are ten or eleven lodges and seven churches, and her church is the only one whose pulpit is not struck dumb before the secret lodges. Miss Haines has not been posted in the anti-lodge reform, but this makes her utterances the more weighty in some respects. She is an agreeable speaker, and is "well reported of by the brethren" who know her. She has one "fruit of the Spirit," gentleness, which some lack in all new and earnest movements for Christ.

was to have been presented by a Rev. Mr. Oakes, an eloquent Irishman, who, in words, declared his warm sympathy with anti-secrecy, but said nothing which Masons would object to. He is reputed to welcome Masons to his church. I may hear more from him in the report of last night's meeting. Miss Haines spoke of Divine Healing, but I did not hear her.

The people who cut away the forests from the New England hills, all believed in faith healing, and sent notes to their church pulpits requesting prayers when any were sick. But this faith, like their hatred of secret lodges and human slavery, had died out. It is now following the anti-slavery revival which has wiped out that curse; and Satan, as he is wont, will be sure to inject some "dead flies" to make this ointment stink. If the beloved friends, who are now seeking to turn our minds from our semi-pagan medical science to Christ for healing, happen to read this editorial, let me say to them in brief:

1. Like the return of Christ to our earth, faith healing has fallen wofully into disuse, and its revival is a good token of Christ's approach.

2. The devil always apes Christ, and he will do so in this.

3. If Satan can inflict diseases, as in the case of Job, he can heal them; and will, if he can, turn the healing to further his devilish designs.

4. We have great reason to watch and pray, and be not "ignorant of his devices, some of which are: moving us to use faith healing to draw crowds. Christ, in the case of Jairus's daughter, and other instances, shut off the gaping crowd. Again, he will pervert Scripture. When James taught to "call for the elders of the church" to pray, anointing the sick person with oil, he did not mean taking a little tiny vial of oil and touching the forehead with it. The Word is "anointing him," i. e., the sick one, as the Good Samaritan "poured" oil and wine on the man bruised by thieves. Oil was then nearly a universal remedy (see Barnes, Olshausen, Lange and others), as water cure was in some localities. If that had been universal as the use of oil was, the Word would have run: Applying water in the name of the Lord. That is, use the best means you know of; then pray over him, and if God does not want the sick person in heaven, he will give faith and effect healing, instantaneous, or gradual, as Christ restored sight.

In 1839 I spent two weeks in Oberlin, when the place was full of "bands," praying for "the blessing" of sanctification, and much frailty and ignorance appeared. On my return to Cincinnati I said in our paper that I would rather be the weakest and wildest seeker of sanctification there, than Dr. Morse of the New York Observer, who was a mere observer and critic of reforms and reformers. A few such papers at that time, if they had done their duty, would, under God, have sunk slavery and saved us the war.

Let us not stumble again lest a worse thing come upon our beloved nation.

SOCIAL PURITY

was presented by Miss Annie M. Ray, a daughter of Deborah the prophetess, by her mien and tones. She and her companions have just obtained $5,000 from the New Hampshire legislature to begin their work to save girls of fourteen, fifteen and upward, the many bright-eyed daughters of French emigrants in the factories, who are decoyed, deceived and cast off by the hell-kites in the shape of men. The best of all is, all these reformers look solely to Christ for power.

"THE PILGRIM FATHERS"

is the name of a new secret society in New England. The gentlemanly conductor who informed me, said he belonged to it.

"Did they blindfold you when you were initiated?" I asked.

"Yes."

"What did initiation cost?"

"Four dollars and a half. A quarterly due of fifty cents. A funeral charge of half a dollar for each death."

These are the regular charges. Of course there will be assessments. No more striking proof of their terrible power can be given than this "Pilgrim Fathers" lodge. The local bodies are called "Colonies." I never saw sharper men in money matters large and small than the New England people. But they are hoodwinked by Satan in these lodges, even in regard to money: and the diabolical impudence of using the name of "The Pilgrim Fathers," and their early "Colonies" to cover their devilish worships and taxation, excels everything but its Satanic craft. But the rapid increase of these hoodwink mantraps shows that Satan is conscious that his time is short.

Miss Flagg is here. She is now anxious, more anxious since her mother's death, to have the W. C. T. U. inaugurate another department of women's work against the lodge. She would be an admirable head of it. Their Social Purity work has been well presented here, and a resolution passed and collection taken for Bro. Davis, now still in Boston jail. Elder S. C. Kimball has done admirably in getting up this meeting: and there are many here who deserve and will receive honorable mention. J. B.

THE DOOMED ANARCHISTS.

Friday, November 11th, seven men now in the county jail in this city are to be hung unless Governor Oglesby interferes. These seven men have been found guilty of the most savage and heinous crime, as instigators and accessories to massacre by dynamite. None but the ignorant or the foolish dare say they have not had fair trial, and the utmost effort has not saved them from the condemnation of every court that has heard or can hear their case. There remains but one more event to complete their wretched history—an event toward which their course has tended for years, the legitimate end of conspiracies for the murder of men and the destruction of society.

The story of their crime will not soon be forgotten. In April, 1886, there were strikes in progress in Chicago, partly fomented by these men. For years several of them had been known as professional agitators. A thieves' administration had permitted them to harangue the crowds, and incite to violence. They had formed a number of secret societies in which their plans for general massacre were discussed. Dynamite was kept in their houses and in the office of their paper. Bombs were made and baskets full taken to their meetings and distributed. Under their speeches reckless men were becoming mad and furious. A meeting called by the secret word of the conspirators' lodge met on Desplaines Street just off the old Haymarket Square on the evening of May 4. Had the mayor done his duty this meeting would not have been held nor would many others that preceded it. The police without waiting for his order, ordered its dispersion. They were answered with a bomb which killed seven of their number and wounded more than fifty others. The well-known leaders of this insurrectionary movement were arrested and after a trial of nearly two months were sentenced—seven to die, one to the penitentiary for fourteen years. The Supreme courts of the State and of the United States have heard their case, argued by the ablest men who could be engaged. The unanimous decision in every instance has been of the guilt of these men and the justice of their sentence.

During their trial they gloried in what they had done—they glory in it to this day. They pose as martyrs, because they have helped kill off the guardians of the peace. They have no word of regret, or penitence, and are to-day the enemies of society, criminals of the worst character, as ready as ever to conspire and burn and slay. A year of confinement has not abated their fury or changed their diabolical purpose. If they were free they would begin again their devilish work.

But one man's purpose can stop the execution on Friday, and the friends of these murderers are moving earth to affect that purpose—toward heaven they have no prayers. With them are joined men prominent in the circles of infidelity, as Ingersoll, Booth and Rabbi ———, agnostics, Universalists, Knights of Labor and many other secret lodges of workingmen—and in general all that class of people who are restive under the law of God; who wish to put off his authority, resist his righteous government, and who boast their disbelief in the punishment he has promised to sin. Out of this vile soil of rebellion against the authority of the Most High God has sprung all this poisonous growth of anarchy and massacre. And this is the question Governor Oglesby is to decide. Shall he yield to the prayers and imprecations and threats which load down his tables; or shall he remember the churches, the bulwark of our liberties; shall he remember our common schools crowded with bright hopes for the future of America; shall he remember our homes and their cherished circles dearer than life? These have spoken through government and law. Their word is as the word of God, and has its authority through him. The law is just. It has condemned the crime of these men as one of the worst, a crime including many crimes. Every interest dear to civilization calls for the execution of their sentence. Shall one man take the responsibility of deciding against all these interests that he may please a mawkish sentiment begotten by cowardice and hatred of God's law? Governor Oglesby's position is not one to be envied, but his duty is clear, and this is the great opportunity of his life. Will he be faithful to the trust he has sworn to keep, or will he fail and bring upon his memory the curses of unborn generations?

THE N. C. A. FOREIGN MISSION.

This is the work of the printed page, not the living agent. For several years occasional requests for tracts and pamphlets from West and South Africa, from India and the West Indies have been answered by the Board, until at last the urgent appeals of brethren in Bombay and the interior of India led to the opening of a by the Treasurer, in which donations for this purpose might be placed.

Our readers have not been urged, except in the India letters, to help this fund, but they have sent in some $21. But the calls are becoming more urgent. Bro. Cole says that his friend and agent, Mr. Case of Sierra Leone, has already disposed of a large invoice of Anti-masonic baoks, and writes for more. A letter from the Bombay brother was read last week. We cannot doubt our friends have been moved by these appeals; and their interest in the cause in these foreign lands will rise as they understand the importance of the work.

In India brethren Gladwin and Ward are organizing a great colporteur work. The former is "Lecturing and General Representative in India" of the Gospel Purity Association of England, the latter an earnest and devoted missionary at Secunderabad.

Do not, brethren, let these appeals fall unheeded. It is a day of missionary awakening in the churches. But a small part of the tenth due to the Lord's work will help to scatter thousands of tracts among the English-speaking people in foreign lands.

NEXT WEEK

we hope to present our most important home fund for the circulation of the Cynosure among the Southern ministers with reasons which are unanswerable why that fund should be raised without delay to fifteen hundred dollars at least. One of these arguments appears in our Texas letter on the 6th page.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Board of the Interior was held in this city on the second and third days of November in the New England church. Mrs. Moses Smith, the president, was in the chair, and quite a number of missionaries and mothers of missionaries were on the platform. Devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Pres. Magoon, and interesting addresses made by Miss Porter, Miss Evans an others. While joining earnestly in efforts for the perishing in foreign lands, let us lift up earnest cries for those in our own country who are bowing down to altars where an unknown God is worshiped, and Jesus ignored and despised. It will ever remain true that by no other name under heaven but Christ's can men be saved. Our giving, praying, and earnest doing ought to be greatly increased.

—Bro. M. A. Gault was lecturing last week around Glenwood, Minn., on his way to Blanchard, Iowa, where he will make his winter headquarters.

—Bro. J. B. Galloway and Bro. Isaiah Faris of Vernon, Wis., are using their efforts to prevent the organization of Good Templar lodges in their vicinity.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold after the Wisconsin State meeting has visited Milton Junction, Sugar Creek, Whitewater and Palmyra. He visits Beloit this week and has engagements at Cherry Valley and the Flora Wesleyan church.

—Secretary Stoddard expected to remain over the Sabbath at Greenfield, Missouri. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings he was to be at Carthage, and at Olathe, Kansas, Thursday evening, reaching this city Saturday.

—Our literary department contains some facts of great interest respecting the attitude of Washington toward some of the prominent features of our modern secret lodges. The life of Washington is well worth a careful study in this relation, because of the odious attempt of the lodge to make him a patron saint.

—When President J. Blanchard passed through Detroit on his way to New England he spoke on the secret system in that city. The Detroit Freemason of last week devotes over three columns to a violent and denunciatory letter attempting a reply. This Freemason calls Pike "a Christian gentleman," denies the well-known fact of Masonic baptism, and the equally well-known fact of the influence of the Masonic lodge in promoting the rebellion, etc. The lodge may feed itself fat on such stuff. Dyspepsia, gout and death will follow.

—The Living Way of Memphis reports the murder of a colored minister, Rev. James Tipton, in that city on the 26th ult. The murderer is unknown as are the reasons for the deed. The dead man had on a Masonic pin, and belonged to lodge only twenty-five miles away. But, strange to say, not a lodge or a member of the order lifted a finger to care for the dead body. Two of his brother ministers, with other friends, cared for his decent burial. Brethren Countee and Brinkley make the circumstance the text for an earnest editorial upon the selfishness and false pretensions of the lodge.

—In an editorial on Chinese High-binders and their fearful power in our issue of Oct. 6th, sentiments were attributed to Rev. Mr. Pond, who superintends the Congregational Chinese missions in San Francisco, which we are well pleased to learn from himself personally that he does not hold. It was understood from the report that fell into our hands that he reasoned in favor of the expulsion of the Chinese from this case of outrage, which would be held inconsistent in one engaged as he is in saving them from heathenism. But we were also surprised that he did not see in the affair reason to condemn the secret societies among the Chinese, and Americans as well, which teach assassination.

Secretary, S. C. Kimball of Newmarket: Treasurer, J. F. French of Canterbury: Executive Committee, Isaac Hyatt, Ebenezer Smith, C. L. Baker, J. F. French, S. C. Kimball. The annual sermon, delivered by Rev. S. C. Kimball of Newmarket, followed.

Sunday morning at 9 o'clock the Sunday services opened with an hour's worship led by Rev. S. C. Kimball. The meeting was well attended, and an excellent religious spirit was manifest. At 10 o'clock Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, late president of Wheaton College, Illinois, addressed the convention. His sermon, which was aimed at secret societies, was a vigorous arraignment of the lodge movement, and met with the unqualified approval of those present averse to such fraternities.

His address was followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, Elder J. G. Smith of New Hampton and Deacons Rowe of Gilford and Seaward of Manchester officiating with him at this service.

This comprised the forenoon exercises with the exception of the following resolution endorsing the convicted Boston-Common exhorter, which was unanimously passed, and was supplemented by a contribution of $12, which will be presented to Mr. Davis's family. The resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That we assure our beloved brother and fellow laborer, Elder William F. Davis, now in jail for preaching the Gospel, of our prayers and sympathy, and implore mercy on the people of Boston, whose rulers show more zeal against preachers than against blasphemers, gamblers and rumsellers.

"Christian Women's Work" was the subject of the afternoon's addresses, the speakers being Miss E. E. Flagg of Wellesley, Mass., the well-known author, Mrs. Caroline W. Bixby of North Weare, and Miss Annie Ray of Manchester. Miss Flagg's remarks were, while in their scope largely antagonistic to any and all secret societies, devoted to a discussion of the question, "How can we get the Workingman to Vote the Prohibition Ticket?" Her apparently unanswerable query was left with the advice to the Association to train up the children, teaching them, the coming voters, that righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a reproach to any people. Mrs. Bixby's remarks were also devoted to the temperance cause, while Miss Ray made a most pathetic address, outlining some of her experiences as secretary of the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Her practical, earnest thoughts appealed directly to her hearers, and dry eyes were a rarity throughout her pithy talk.

The day's devotions were brought to a close by a Gospel service led by Miss I. D. Haines, evangelist of Dexter, Me., who had charge of this portion of the exercises of the convention.

The third day's session opened with a prayer and praise service, followed by a discussion of the home mission work, during which Mr. Kimball submitted the following facts, embodying his labors from December, 1886, to April, 1887; and the report was as follows: Families prayed with, 806; subscriptions for religious papers, 560; sermons preached, 41. During this time about 3,000 pages of tracts were distributed. Mr. Kimball was then elected home missionary for the coming year, the Association pledging him $5 50 a month, and donating $17 at the start. A discussion of the work followed by Revs. S. C. Kimball, Isaac Hyatt, J. G. Smith, E. W. Oakes, Deacons I. Leadbetter and S. Rowe. Ex-President Blanchard was announced to speak on the work of the National Christian Association, but the forenoon was occupied by other speakers and he was shut out. He bid farewell to the convention at noon in order to take the afternoon train for St. Johnsbury, Vt. A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered the gentleman on his departure.

During the afternoon the time was occupied by a brief Gospel service, and an able doctrinal sermon delivered by Rev. J. G. Smith of New Hampton, on the subject, "The Coming of our Lord." The only other business transacted was the passing of the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, The evils of intemperance are constantly apparent, and resticting forces are not effectively brought to bear upon the traffic, therefore

Resolved, That we as an organization and individuals voice our protest against any and all connection with this iniquity, and we will use our influence as far as possible for effectual and entire prohibition, and

WHEREAS, The lodge system is closely allied with intemperance,

Resolved, That we recommend all Christians to sever their connection with all secret societies, and

WHEREAS, The purity of the home must be maintained if we would not have our nation engulfed in ruin,

Resolved, That we deplore the existence of social evils which assail our peace and join hands joyfully with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in its noble and persistent endeavors to remedy these evils and restore to paths of purity those who have wandered from them.

Resolved, That the Lord's way to renounce Freemasonry is to confess with heartfelt contrition to God and man its hidden iniquities to the best of our knowledge and belief.

Resolved, That our thanks are due Dr. Jonathan Blanchard for the gratification and help afforded by his presence at our convention and his able and instructive address on the evils of the lodge system; also to Miss I. D. Haines, evangelist from Maine, for successfully conducting our devotional meetings, and for her able exposition of the Scriptural doctrine of holiness and practical piety, and we also appreciate with thankfulness the service of song so finely rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Blackmer of Springfield, Mass.

Resolved, That as we believe there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and are in full accord with our Lord's prayer that his people might be one, we will by precept and example show the world that Christ's church is one united family.

Resolved, That our heartfelt thanks are due to the Advent church, meeting in Arcanum hall, for the use of their place of worship and the generous and Christian hospitality with which they have opened their hearts and homes for our entertainment.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association are hereby tendered to the railroads of the State for their kindness in transporting delegates to the meeting at a reduced rate of fare.

The convention was closed Monday evening by an instructive discourse delivered by Rev. E. W. Oakes of the People's Baptist church, on the subject of "Divine Healing." The sermon was followed by a season given up to faith healing, and during which several persons embraced this new feature of Gospel work.

THE OHIO CONVENTION

Will be held at New Concord, Muskingum county, November 16th and 17th, opening at 9 A. M. of Wednesday, the 16th. Addresses will be given by President Smith, Revs. W. A. Coleman and William Dillon, Secretary J. P. Stoddard, State Agent W. B. Stoddard, and the closing address by Pres C. A. Blanchard. Entertainment as usual will be provided for those coming from a distance. It is especially desired that all churches in sympathy appoint at once as large a delegation as they may think best to represent them at this convention. Let the friends come praying for a glorious blessing, that we may go forth stronger for Christ in the future.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE BRITISH-AMERICAN ASSOCIATION'S ORGAN INDORSES REPUBLICANISM.

To Boston's nearly 300 daily, weekly and monthly publications there was added Saturday last, Oct. 29, the first issue of a weekly paper whose mission is the advocacy of a subject which is deeply interesting a large portion of the peoples of two continents —the naturalization of British-Americans. Next to its advocacy of naturalization, is its devotion to Republicanism. In recommending the most worthy ticket to be cast at the next elections, it says:

"The Republican party has the conspicuous merit of having definite ideas."...."In the State to day, it stands as the representative of pure government, as the champion and resolute defender of the free schools, as the hope of those who value the American idea of self-government and of liberty without license."

"Champion and resolute defender of the free schools!" We hope the writer means to include the saloon schools, which with undeniable success teach our young men and women the way to destruction. Aye! it may defend the free schools, but does it defend the scholars? Thousands upon thousands of boys and girls are forced to leave these defended schools and seek their own livelihood, because this great champion Republican party fails to defend their parents against dissipation, which is the direct cause, in a majority of cases of their being compelled to give up the school for the work-shop. I can bear testimony to this fact—for such has been my own sad experience, and I was brought up in a household of Republicans "of the straightest sect."

If the Republican party thinks so much about the education of our boys and girls, let them first turn aside the course of the rum traffic.

"It cringes to no foreign ideas to seek support," claims this newly created British-American citizen, with utmost confidence in what he says, perhaps. Would God that it cringed to no domestic facts—the distillery and the saloon!

With a burst of enthusiasm, which would be commendable, were it not a case of "the pot calling the kettle black," referring to the Democracy, this newly born babe of British-American journalism strikes a dramatic attitude and cries:

"Political poverty, like that of a more personal kind, is subjected to the disagreeable necessity of finding strange bedfellows. For this reason the Democracy, especially in the large centres of population, has been compelled to be of all complexions, till its motley garb excites disgust and distrust. Here it edges cautiously to free trade; there it sidles up to woo protection ideas; again it nurses Greenbackism, and changes front to whisper its abiding faith in the currency basis, and hangs on to the edge of socialism, and every other ism, good, bad or indifferent, which has a vote to give."

Naughty, naughty Democrats! How such acts must shock innocent, unsophisticated little Republicanism. Of course it is never imitated by its Democratic cousin in fishing for votes in the same streams. Of course pure little Republican has never been guilty, even of edging, sidling, wooing, nursing, whispering and hanging to—the king of the vat, while hypocritically pretending to be that tyrant's enemy!

Referring for one brief second to the temperance question, as if almost frightened at its own little speck of weak trepidity, in another column, this new paper, in words which would really occupy four lines, but which is generously spread into nearly five, says:

"Republicans, being lovers of the race, are arrayed in almost solid phalanx in efforts to reduce the terrible evils of intemperance and limit the power and demoralizing influence of the saloon."

I wonder how many votes such an extract will cost? That it is not a fancy tempting little bait for Prohibs to nibble at I have no doubt. There is one member, however, of that aquatic family whom such bait will fail to tempt, viz: D. P. MATHEWS.

THE HOME.

HAND IN-HAND.

The thinker must work and the worker think,
For both go hand-in-hand.
The smithy's stroke and the drop of ink
Make the brawn and brain of the land

O, you at your forge and you at your books,
Be both at your implements striving,
To uplift from the dust the kingdom of man
To a higher and better living.

The man that toils and the man that thinks
Must work now, shoulder to shoulder,
All labor is worthy, if honest it be,
The world must grow wise as older.

When we lift the man at the desk, we lift
The laborer at the plow;
When from a measure of wrong we sift,
Two measures are sifted somehow.

MORALS OF SPECULATION.

The Christian Advocate is throwing light on a dark subject—speculation in stocks and futures. It is a needed light, for much of the wealth of metropolitan churches comes from this source, and there is a growing uneasiness about the business in the Christian conscience. This uneasiness has been increased of late by certain notable cases that have been before the public. The Ives Pool bill, which recently passed the Legislature at Albany, is an act to legalize gambling at horse-races. This bill is a step backward in Christian civilization, and reverses the almost universal verdict of Christian nations. That it meets with so many defenders can only be explained by the influence on the public conscience of the gambling in securities in the Exchanges. If it is fair and right to gamble in Wall Street, it ought not to be a criminal offence to gamble in Jerome Park or Sheepshead Bay. So say the people.

In order to get clear ideas, let us lay out the ground a little.

What do we mean by stock? When a company is formed and money is paid in, receipts are given in acknowledgment. Those receipts are provided with a blank power of attorney, and are transferable from one owner to another. In this shape they are called stock. When wheat is stored in an elevator, or oil is stored, receipts are given for them, and these receipts are transferable. The ease of handling such receipts and the fluctuations and uncertainties of their price in the market furnish the conditions which lead to illegitimate speculation or gambling in the money centers of the country. The uncertainties of value arise, for the most part, not from the ordinary laws of trade or growth of the country, but from the manipulation of powerful or crafty operators. These manipulations create artificial values in stocks—values that have no fixed relations to the actual values which the stocks are supposed to represent. These artificial and uncertain values furnish the prime conditions for gambling, and place such stocks on the level with the roulette table or the pack of cards.

The purchase and owning of stocks for investment is as legitimate as owning houses and lands. The Exchanges for the transfer of stock and produce are a necessity of civilization, and the broker in these Exchanges who mediates between buyer and seller is as necessary as the broker in real estate, or the jobbing merchant who buys from the manufacturer and sells to the retailer.

Operators may be classed under three heads:

1. The investor—the man with surplus money who prefers to put his money in stocks rather than in real estate or business. There is an element of speculation in such investment, but as he is depending upon rise in actual values from the growth of the country and other legitimate causes, this element is reduced to a minimum, and is not greater than the risks of ordinary business.

2. The speculator—the man of large means who uses his money for the purpose of manipulating prices, who cares nothing about actual values or the prosperity of the country except as they enable him to so move prices as to make a profit for himself. He enters the market, not for purposes of permanent investment, but to wrest wealth from his competitors by an unscrupulous employment of his capital in creating fluctuations favorable to himself. These are the men that force the market, whether as "bulls" or "bears," and whose operations are known as "raids."

3. The small speculator—who cares and knows nothing about values, but who plays with the market as the gambler plays with the cards. He seldom owns the stock he trades in, but puts up a margin and borrows the balance from the broker. The small speculator is a gambler, and the large speculator is a gambler who plays with loaded dice.

Wherein is the immorality of gambling? That question is easier asked than answered. Let me make an attempt. There are three ways of obtaining wealth: by work, by the gifts of charity or affection and by stealing. Omitting now the consideration of gifts of charity and affection, it may be said that the only honorable way to obtain wealth is to give to another or to society some equivalent for what one obtains. All legitimate business should be profitable to all engaged in it and to society. Real ownership only exists when you have given value for value. The gambler gives nothing for his gains. He is a non-producer and a parasite on the public wealth. It is no defence to say that the loser agreed to the chances of the game, for that plea will exculpate Burr for the murder of Hamilton in the duel, or the prize-fighter who kills his opponent in the ring. The actual wealth of the country is not increased one dollar by the hundreds of millions that are exchanged annually in the nefarious modes of gambling. And all who lost hoped to win. That character should break down and all wholesome habits of thought and conduct be ruined by the gambling habit is inevitable; and hence even pagan nations, like ancient Rome, and nearly all the nations of Christendom, have made gambling a felony. The man who wins by the throw of dice has in his possession what belongs to another. He cannot say, "I earned it; it represents honest work and useful toil." But, "I played for it and won it." The man who carries home from the horse race circuit $100,000 as the result of his summer's work, has captured money that was produced by hard toil, and that once had legitimate owners. He won it, and the only return he gave for it was heart-burnings and chagrin, perhaps beggary and suicide. He won because he was lucky or shrewd, or, as is most probable, because he was a party to fraud and treachery. But the bread that his children eat and the pillow on which he sleeps belong to others.

As to future in the technical sense—that is, pretended sales for future delivery—the honorable merchant keeps clear of them. It is sheer betting on the market. If the future is not too remote, as selling a crop that is ready for harvesting, there is little risk; but if it is quite remote, and especially if large operators are liable to manipulate the market, then the chance element is uppermost, and the transaction becomes a wager. It is estimated that not one-tenth of the transactions in wheat are actual sales.

Let us take, for illustration, a transaction of a common type among large operators in Wall Street. John Doe is a "bear," and is about to make one of his "raids." Finding things favorable for his purpose, he enters the Board and sells a certain stock to all buyers. He sells at lowering figures. By innuendo and deed he depresses the stock. Men who hold the stock become alarmed; those who hold it on "margins" are forced to sell at a loss. Lower and lower falls the price. John Doe was selling what he had not got, but he is rich and can back his transactions. And now when the price is low enough to suit him he buys it again, the stock recovers its old rate, and John Doe pockets his gains. The operator used his wealth to browbeat the "lambs," just as the highwayman used his pistols, in the olden time, to browbeat the stage-coach passengers. The morality of such a transaction needs no illustration perhaps; and yet an illustration might "bring it out," as the photographers say. A man sees that the new Elevated Railroad in Brooklyn is about to boom property in a certain suburb. He buys heavily in houses and lots. He mortgages and buys more. Another man finds out his condition and plans, and purchasing a few lots adjoining builds a brewery and a glue factory. Property goes down in that neighborhood. The first man is swamped, and sells out at a loss; the second man buys in, and then pulls down the factories; property rises and he makes a fortune. That is "business," but it does not illustrate the Golden Rule. But it is precisely what is done, and done constantly in the Stock Exchange.

A kingdom was once offered for a horse, but only a rogue would accept the offer.

Let us now put a sample of pagan morality over against the morals of speculation in this Christian century. In his De Officiis Cicero discusses some questions in morals, and raises the following case: "A ship laden with corn, on the way from Alexandria to Rhodes, passes several other corn vessels, bound for the same port. When the vessel had reached its destination, shall the master sell the corn for what he can get, concealing the fact that such a supply is at hand, or shall he tell the facts, and then find a market for his corn?"

Cicero declares that in honor and morality he must tell, and that to do otherwise is to act the part of a swindler.—Rev. Joseph Pullman, in N. Y. Christian Advocate.

BOYS WHO SUCCEED.

Thirty years ago Mr. H———, a nurseryman in New York State, left home for a day or two. It was rainy weather and not the season for sales, but a customer arrived from a distance, tied up his horse, and went into the kitchen of the farm-house, where two lads were cracking nuts.

"Is Mr. H——— at home?"

"No, sir," said the eldest, Joe, hammering at a nut.

"When will he be back?"

"Dunno, sir. Mebbe not for a week."

The other boy, Jim, jumped up and followed the man out. "The men are not here, but I can show you the stock," he said, with such a bright, courteous manner, that the stranger, who was a little irritated, stopped and followed him through the nursery, examining the trees, and left his order.

"You have sold the largest bill that I have had this season, Jim," his father, greatly pleased, said to him on his return.

"I'm sure," said Joe, "I'm as willing to help as Jim, if I'd thought in time."

A few years afterward these two boys were left, by their father's failure and death, with but two or three hundred dollars each. Joe bought an acre or two near home. He has worked hard, but is still a poor, discontented man. Jim bought an immigrant's ticket to Colorado, hired as a cattle-driver for a couple of years, and with his wages bought land at forty cents an acre, built himself a house, and married. His herds of cattle are numbered by the thousand, his land has been cut up for town lots, and he is ranked as one of the wealthiest men in the State.

"I might have done like Jim," his brother said lately, "if I'd thought in time. There's as good stuff in me as in him."

"There's as good stuff in that loaf of bread as in any I ever made," said his wife, "but nobody can eat it. There's not enough yeast in it." The retort, though disagreeable, was true. The quick, wide-awake energy which acts as leaven in a character is partly natural. But it can be inculcated by parents and acquired by a boy if he chooses to keep his eyes open, and to act promptly and boldly in every emergency.—Springfield Republican.

A LITTLE GENTLEMAN.

His cap is old, but his hair is gold,
And his face is clear as the sky;
And whoever he meets, on lanes or streets,
He looks him straight in the eye
With a fearless pride that has naught to hide,
Though he bows like a little knight,
Quite debonair, to a lady fair,
With a smile that is swift as light.

Does his mother call? No kite, or ball,
Or the prettiest game can stay
His eager feet as he hastes to greet
Whatever she means to say;
And the teachers depend on this little friend
At school in his place at nine,
With his lessons learned and his good marks earned,
All ready to toe the line.

I wonder if you have seen him, too,
This boy, who is not too big
For a morning kiss from mother and sis,
Who isn't a bit of prig,
But gentle and strong and the whole day long,
As merry as boy can be;
A gentleman, dears, in the coming years,
And at present the boy for me.

RICH MEN'S SONS.

A wealthy broker in New York began life as a farm-hand in New Jersey. He had the craving, natural to a poor boy, for fine clothes, a splendid house, luxury of every kind. To acquire these he worked hard with brain and body.

As he rose in life, he was thrown in contact with educated men, great financiers, rulers of commerce, artists, teachers, scientific men. His own intellect, strengthened by its work, was bold and broad enough to appreciate them all.

By the time he was fifty, he cared little for the physical luxuries which his money could buy for him. His pursuits, apart from his business, were noble and elevating—those which belong to a many-sided, enlightened American, who keeps abreast of his time in its great movements.

His son, on the contrary, was born in the lap of riches. Luxuries, the lack of which urged his father to incessant activity, were as familiar to him as the air and daily sunshine. Fine clothes, rich food, amusements of all kinds, gave him little pleasure; they were matters of course.

He knew no life of which they were not a part. He did not work at school or at college. Why should he? Other men worked to make a place for themselves in the world. His place was already made for him. He needed no more millions than his father could give him.

He had literally nothing to do but to amuse himself.

Now, there is but a limited number of amusements in the world, and after a certain time the senses, the nerves, the whole body, grow jaded with each of them.

By the time this young man had reached the age of twenty-five, he was as sated with pleasure as a gray-haired debauchee. Cards, wine, sport, travel, bored him; his physical strength was exhausted; his mind, though still immature, was almost imbecile. When a sudden attack of illness carried him out of this world, nobody in it was sorry; himself, perhaps, least of all.

The story of this rich man and his son has been repeated countless times in the lives of our rich men.

The "gilded youth" of our great cities grow weary of balls, of steam yachts, of even the theaters, gambling and drink. Their jaded appetites crave stronger diet.

In the great centers of riches and folly some of them crowd, in the small hours of the morning, to dens unknown to the police, to see brutal combats between prize-fighters. At a recent fight between a woman and a dog, the ring was surrounded by men worth millions.

"The only real sensation I have enjoyed for years," said one of this class lately, "was in China, last July, when I saw the executioner chop off five heads in an hour."

At heart, these lads are made of as good manly stuff as others. They are victims to the popular idea that the sole use of money is amusement. Even when weighted by huge fortune, as Napoleon Bonapart once wrote to his marshal, "Surely, we should endeavor to do something, to say that we have lived; to leave some impress of our lives upon the sands of time."—Youth's Companion.

WHY BOYS SHOULD NOT BE SNUBBED.

Don't snub a boy because he wears shabby clothes. When Edison, the inventor of the telephone, first entered Boston he wore a pair of yellow linen breeches in the depth of winter.

Don't snub a boy because his home is plain and unpretending. Abraham Lincoln's early home was a log cabin.

Don't snub a boy because of a dullness in his lessons. Hogarth, the celebrated painter and engraver, was a stupid boy at his books.

Don't snub a boy because of the ignorance of his parents. Shakspeare, the world's poet, was the son of a man who was unable to write his own name.

Don't snub a boy because he chooses an humble trade. The author of the "Pilgrim's Progress" was a tinker.

Don't snub a boy because of physical disability. Milton was blind.

Don't snub a boy because he stutters. Demosthenes, the great orator of Greece, overcame a harsh and stammering voice.

PROUD OF HIS PATCH.

A poor boy was attending school one day with a large patch on one knee of his trousers. One of his schoolmates made fun of him for this, and called him "Old Patch." "Why don't you fight him?" cried one of the boys, "I'd give it to him if he called me so." "Oh," said the boy, "you don't suppose I'm ashamed of my patch, do you? For my part I'm thankful for a good mother to keep me out of rags. I'm proud of my patch for her sake." This was noble. That boy had the courage that would make him successful in the struggles of life. We must have courage in our struggles if we hope to come right.

MANNERS BETWEEN BOYS.

There is a great deal of rudeness between boys in their intercourse and bearing with one another that is not really intended as such, but is not, therefore, any the less to be disapproved. It is often simply the overflow of excessive high spirits. But the very best good humor, unrestrained by the proper bounds and limitations, may become the most positive incivility.

We often apologize for the coarseness of people by saying, "He meant well." It is well if we can make such an apology for them, for if their rudeness is really intentional, they are not fit to be received into any worthy person's society. But they who mean well should also do well, and the ways of politeness are never so easily learned as in youth.

The boy who is habitually coarse and rude in his bearing toward other boys will be such as a man toward men, and all his life will never gain the reputation of being a gentleman.—United Presbyterian.

TEMPERANCE.

THE RUM POWER.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

'Tis rum, my friends, that rules the land,
The ballot's cast by beer;
And liquor is the sovereign power
The politicians fear.
If whisky pays the voter's tax,
Then will it have a voice;
And if it pays a larger tax
'Twill claim the ruling choice.

If statesmen license rum and gin,
And share in part the pay,
Then must they shelter rum and gin:
There is no other way.
It is not fair, it is not just,
To murmur and to frown,
And curse the drink that pays the tax
And run the business down.

If rum is made a lawful trade,
And it is gainful, too,
And if it pays the voter's tax,
As other people do,
Then why, whilst pocketing the cash
With one right willing hand,
The other use, as many do,
To stamp an odious brand?

The higher up the license goes
The stronger flows the beer;
"It costs to sell, more must be sold,"—
The reason is quite clear.
And wealth and style will gild the trade,
And this will be its boon:
The palaces of rum and gin
Will shame the low saloon.

What pays the cash and "cuts a dash"
Is sure to hold the sway,
And men will think 'tis fine to drink
In such a splendid way.
The license concentrates the trade,
And links in one the cause
Which buys the votes and pays the tax,
Which makes and breaks the laws. —Sel.

PROHIBITION IN ATLANTA.

The Prohibition campaign is fairly opened, and has begun with vigor. Rev. Sam Jones threw the first shell in the Opera House on Sunday night to an immense audience. The house was filled to its utmost capacity, and at least one thousand were turned away for want of room. On the stage were seated, in addition to many ladies, Judge Hillyer, chairman of the Prohibition Committee, and a large number of prominent citizens. Mr. Jones, in opening his address, alluded to the fact that twenty-four months ago he was the speaker of the first public assembly, which met to work for prohibition of the liquor traffic. It was not now a question whether they should put bar-rooms and liquors out of Atlanta, but a question whether they should suffer them to come back into Atlanta. "What you want in Atlanta," said he, "is a mayor who will enforce the prohibition law." I am not bringing politics into this issue, but I see the anti-Prohibitionists say: "All ye Democrats come to the front." If anti-Prohibitionists claim the Democratic party, if the Democratic party will be claimed by it, then anti-Prohibitionists are welcome to the Democratic party." "The red-flag Anarchists of Chicago," said he, "never did as much harm since they were organized as the bar-rooms of Chicago have done in a single night." All he said was received with immense applause. Dr. Hawthorne and others prominent in the cause of prohibition spoke, and were enthusiastically received. The ladies of the city are taking an active part in this cause, and a meeting of the ladies was held yesterday and organized a club, to be known as the "Ladies Prohibition Club." The plan of the organization is to make the principal field of work in the prohibition cause in the homes of the city, and a committee was appointed to canvass the city for membership. Even the children are included in the work of organization. The Prohibitionists have fitted up a hall in comfortable style, seats having been arranged, and a speaker's platform erected. They have also put up tents in different parts of the city where they will be accessible to a great number of people. The ministers of the city of all denominations have rendered their services to the prohibition cause. The negroes are forming organizations, and all the colored ministers are active in the matter, and state that the colored vote will be at least 1,000 greater than at the last election. Everything points to an exciting campaign. The anti-Prohibitionists are forming clubs and organizing meetings in different parts of the city. A large number of leading Antis met last night to adopt a plan of campaign for the Prohibition canvass, and take such other action as they might deem proper. Great interest was taken in the object of the meeting by those who were in attendance, and several animated speeches were made. This warfare will be exciting, and many predict that it will be a close fight.

CALL FOR A WORLD'S DAY OF PRAYER FOR THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

NOVEMBER 12 AND 13, 1887.

(Abridged from Official Call.)

From the first, the woman's temperance work has been a work of prayer and faith. The little praying bands in the United States and Canada have many times appointed special days of prayer. And now, when this heaven-born movement has expanded into the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the same spirit leads to the same methods, and from many hearts comes the cry for a world-embracing prayer-day, wide as the circuit of the sun. It will unify the thoughts of the white-ribbon women all around the globe; strengthen their purpose, and make their hand-clasp firmer, as together they bear onward the white flag, inscribed "For God and Home and Every Land." It will claim the blessed promise made to Christ's disciples when they are agreed as touching anything, and from heaven bring such a blessing upon our sacred cause as is not otherwise to be secured.

Therefore, it has been agreed, after consultation with Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas, President of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to set apart the 12th and 13th of November, 1887, as days of prayer for the growth and universal diffusion of all forms of temperance work, especially those that have their origin in the conviction that the use of, and traffic in brain poisons of every kind, must be abolished by an appeal to the intellect through argument; to the heart through sympathy, and to the conscience through the quickening power of Christ's almighty Gospel.

The same days herein set apart are to be observed by the National W. C. T. U. (United States), as their day of prayer, not only for the World's W. C. T. U., but for the blessing of God upon the approaching annual convention, to be held at Nashville, Tenn., November 16 to 21, 1887; and all our auxiliaries are asked to take a collection for the World's W. C. T. U., if practicable. FRANCIS E. WILLARD, President National W. C. T. U.

At a recent banquet of Insurance men in New York the young Prohibition candidate for Assembly in the twenty-first district, Brooklyn, so we are told, "Woke the echoes," by a manly appeal for prohibition, even while the glasses clinked and the champagne sparkled on every side. And again, during the recent sessions of the National Editorial Association in Denver, Col., a case of true courage and heroism was exhibited, when at a large banquet attended by two hundred persons, Dr. Moore of the Denver University in respose to his toast, "Irrigation," made an eloquent appeal for total abstinence, with the wine glasses clinking all around him. And, what was more wonderful, Dr. Moore sat down amid the applause of his audience, and was warmly seconded in his views by Governor Adams of Colorado.—Christian Nation.

The Pennsylvania State W. C. T. U., meeting at Lewisburg, adopted the following strong endorsement of National reform principles:

"God being the Universal Sovereign, Christ the Supreme Ruler, and the Holy Bible the supreme law on which all law should be based; therefore, be it resolved, that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pennsylvania do heartily endorse and will zealously co-operate with the National Reform Association, in its work to secure a recognition in the National Constitution of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ as the Ruler of Nations, and his Word as the higher law to which appeal should be made in all things; and also that we unite in their efforts for the retention of the Bible in the public schools as an educator to Christian citizenship and Christian legislation."

The Turkish government is making an effort to close the drinking saloons of Constantinople, owing to their demoralizing influence upon the people.

A NOBLE MISSION.

Few of our readers understand the depth of devotion to Christ and strength of self-denying purpose required to undertake a mission among the lost women of a great city; nor what wisdom, tact, skill and perseverance is needed to make it successful. Such a work is the Anchorage Mission at No. 40 Fourth Ave., Chicago, carried on under the control of the W. C. T. U. and conducted by a most devoted Christian woman, Mrs. A. L. Prindle. From her late report we print the following portion, with the warmest commendation of its usefulness:

This mission has given food, shelter and lodging to about 700 women and girls, since the 16th of September [1886]. The money received for lodging from these has not amounted to more than $5 in the aggregate, therefore we are very dependent upon the Christian public for the support and maintenance of this most Christ-like work. We would very gratefully acknowledge the ample donations received from the warm friends of our cause, and especially the literal answer to our prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread," through the generosity and liberal kindness of H. H. Kohlsaat, of Clark Street.

Situations in Christian homes have been found for a large number of our inmates, in both city and country. One who was thoroughly redeemed has gone out as a missionary, with a prospect of going to India in the near future. Our first trophy in rescue work was a young French woman, twenty-seven years of age, who had been nine years a woman of the town. She was beautiful and graceful when sober, and bore marked evidences of cultivation and refinement. Six months of careful Christian training in the Erring Woman's Refuge developed her latent noble womanhood, and she is now earning her bread as a dressmaker and seamstress.

In one of our daily rounds of brothel visiting, we were attracted by the lovely face of a young girl of eighteen, smoking a cigarette. Upon inquiry, we found that she would gladly leave this shameful life, but for an unpaid board bill. Being assured that her avocation was unlawful, and the debt also, she escaped from the house at night, and came to us. She was the honored daughter of a Christian mother, residing in an adjacent town, was visiting friends in Chicago, and invited to ride by an apparently respectable young man in the social circle. Passing through Fourth Ave., to which she was a stranger, he alighted, and invited her to do so, saying he wished to call on an old friend. When once in the house, he escaped through a back door, and left the poor, unfortunate girl to her fate, a victim to the cruel mercies of the wicked. She spent a few months in the Refuge for treatment, and was then returned to her mother.

A young widow, found in one of the lowest dives in Chicago, has been redeemed, and gives evidence of a special call to missionary work. The Holy Scriptures are a wonderful revelation to her new-born faith, and she drinks in the precious truths of the Gospel, as the parched ground does water. She expects to enter a Training School for nurses the coming season, and thus fit herself for a useful life.

A free registry office has been most fully appreciated by many a poor respectable girl, seeking employment, far away from home and mother.

Our Mothers' meeting on Wednesday afternoons still continues to be owned and blessed of God, and our Bible class is made very interesting and instructive by a young lady from the Training School.

The heavy rent of $75 per month, with other expenses, induces us to make a very earnest plea to the benevolent public for aid to prosecute this sadly needed work in our great city. Surely every purity-loving and God-fearing man and woman will heartily respond to our call, and send us speedily clothing, bedding, groceries, and money, for which you shall receive our hearty thanks, blessing and benediction.

—The Covenanters have rented a hall and are making an effort to organize a congregation in Kansas City.

—Three of the Methodist Episcopal bishops have died since the last General Conference—Bishop Matthew Simpson, Bishop Wiley, and Bishop Harris.

—The Salvation Army, entering India five years ago, has now 120 English and eighty native missionaries.

—Joseph Cook of Boston is delivering a course of six lectures before the students of the Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, N. J.

—Rev. Narcisse Cyr, a well-known French clergyman and preacher in Boston, a professor also in Boston university, has been cordially invited to return to France to labor in connection with the McAll mission and in the Reformed Church. Mr. Cyr has accepted the invitation.

—The last Wesleyan Methodist has a full report of the most important and interesting meeting of the denomination—the General Conference. This meeting at La Otto, Ind., Oct. 19 to 26, was generally harmonious and satisfactory in its results. No change is made in the editorial and business management of its papers and book-room at Syracuse, brethren Wardner and Kinney remaining. The impetus to the foreign missionary work through the work of Bro. J. A. Cole was most hopeful. The welcome given to the representatives of the National Christian Association and of the loyal United Brethren was most cordial. A delegate was appointed to attend the N. C. A. convention in New Orleans.

—The annual meeting of the New West Education Commission took place in this city Friday. Rev. Charles R. Bliss, the general secretary, read his report, setting forth the work the commission is accomplishing in Utah in the erection of schools; also the relation of Mormonism to Christianity, and the present attitude of the Mormon question. The commission has now incorporated academies at Salt Lake, U. T.; Albuquerque, N. M.; Las Vagas, N. M.; Tillotson, Trinidad, Col., and unincorporated academies at numerous other points in Utah and New Mexico. The number of teachers is sixty-four, and of pupils 2,600, and there are thirty Sunday-schools. From the treasurer's statement it appears that the total income for the year was $61,318.79; current expenses for the year $43,580.12; leaving a balance of $17,738.67. At the close of the preceding year there was a deficiency of $2,998.32, and a debt and interest amounting to $5,238.29, which have been paid. The receipts for the present year are estimated at $61,000, $20,000 of which will be required for the completion of new buildings, and $45,000 will be needed to pay teachers and meet current expenses. Rev. F. A. Noble, D.D., was re-elected president.

Literature.

The Life of George Washington. By Washington Irving. In four volumes, illustrated. Price, half-morocco, $4. John B. Alden, New York.

This great biography was the crowning work of a literary career at once one of the most popular and brilliant in the history of American letters. The project was early entertained by Mr. Irving, almost, it would seem, from the time that his literary fame was firmly established; and the resolution was taken nearly thirty years before the result was fully reached. An Edinburgh publisher was the first to urge Mr. Irving to undertake the work, and the collection of materials was begun, but not until 1855, when the great author had reached an age when he realized that few years were left him, did the first volume appear. The fourth was not published until 1859, so pains-taking and conscientious was he in the work. It will probably remain the best and most popular of the histories of the life and work of Washington. It is a remarkable fact that though lodge writers have regarded the Masonic career of Washington of so great importance to the world and of so great moment in his own life as to fill a good-sized volume with it (see Hayden's work on Washington as a Freemason), yet Irving, the first of American prose writers, says not one word of this incongruous relation, which Washington abandoned years before the Revolutionary war broke out. Irving, who must have been familiar with the history of the Masonic lodge, evidently regarded the early affiliation of Washington with the order as a piece of youthful folly, into which he had been persuaded, but which formed a relation too incompatible with his truth-loving and dignified character to be long sustained. The same significant fact may be noted in the life of Washington by Chief Justice Marshall, who himself had been lured into the lodge in his early years. Both these eminent writers regard this episode in the life of their hero as an indiscretion over which the mantle of charity should be drawn, and which the world should forget,—and it would be forgotten, as it has long since been forgiven, were it not for the shameless effrontery of Freemasons, who, not satisfied with the personal degradation into which their system has plunged themselves, desire to drag down into the same pit the great name of the Father of his Country. The history of the order of the Cincinnati is given in the last volume. This was a society composed of the officers of the American army, who, after seven years of companionship in trial and suffering, desired to maintain a closer relation than that of private citizenship, merely. There is nothing to show that this was a secret order, though erroneously supposed by some to be so. The original proposition to make it an hereditary and perpetual society aroused much opposition among the patriotic spirits of a century ago, and by Washington's advice it was given up. Mr. Irving says of this event:

"Washington endeavored to allay this jealousy. In his letters to the presidents of the State societies, notifying the meeting which was to be held in Philadelphia on the 1st of May, he expressed his earnest solicitude that it should be respectable for numbers and abilities, and wise and deliberate in its proceedings, so as to convince the public that the objects of the institution were patriotic and trustworthy.

"The society met at the appointed time and place. Washington presided, and by his sagacious counsels effected modifications of its constitution. The hereditary principle, and the power of electing honorary members, were abolished, and it was reduced to the harmless, but highly respectable footing on which it still exists."

It is an unhappy contrast between the loyal spirit of that day and our own, to notice how similar societies at the present time, not satisfied with the laudable objects of fraternal associations, have added the forms of a secret lodge and the obnoxious hereditary principle. The decay of patriotism is in nothing so marked as in this fact.

The rebellion in western Pennsylvania in 1794 was the occasion of a famous proclamation by Washington against the political societies organized with more or less secrecy, after the pattern of the Jacobin clubs of France. Irving quotes from Washington's denunciation of the "self-created societies" which had fomented this rebellion:

"'When, in the calm moments of reflection, they shall have retraced the origin and progress of the insurrection, let them determine whether it has not been fomented by combinations of men, who, careless of consequences, and disregarding the unerring truth, that those who arouse, cannot always appease a civil convulsion, have disseminated from ignorance or perversion of facts, suspicions, jealousies, and accusations of the whole government.'

"This denunciation of the 'self-created societies' was a bold step, by which he was sure to incur their resentment. It was not relished by some members of the Senate, but the majority gave it their approval. In the House, where the opposition party was most powerful, this passage of the President's speech gave rise to much altercation, and finally, the majority showed their disapprobation by passing it over in silence in the address voted in reply.

"The "self-created societies," however, which had sprung up in various parts of the Union, had received their death-blow; they soon became odious in the public eye, and gradually disappeared; following the fate of the Jacobin clubs in France."

The publisher of this edition of Irving's greatest work has made a very happy and successful effort to make it popular. It is issued in two and four-volume sets, at prices ranging from $1.50 to $4, according to binding.

Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature. Vol. VII. Dowden to Ferrier. Pp. 480. Price, cloth, 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

The value of this literary encyclopedia lies as much in its entertaining selections, as in those statements of fact and discriminating judgment which make it a valuable book of reference. Some will miss the critical and judicious remarks of Chambers and other historians of literature, but an opportunity is given for a little personal study and exercise of taste which may be quite as well as to always depend on the judgment of another. One is astonished to see what treasures wrapped up in our English tongue here peep out of their coverings. And it is a public benefaction to make this wealth available to poor as well as rich by such cheap but tasty volumes as this.

In Mr. Kennan's first paper in the series on "Siberia," which is printed in the November Century, he protests against the use of the word "Nihilist," which, he says, the Russian government and the Russian conservative class have made the world accept as descriptive of all their opponents, from the "terrorists" to the law-abiding members of provincial assemblies who respectfully ask leave to petition the Crown for the redress of grievances. He states that the word was first introduced in Russia by Turgenef in his novel, "Fathers and Children," and was there used appropriately. Mr. Kennan says: "It has been my fortune in the course of the last two years to make the intimate personal acquaintance of more than five hundred members of this Russian protesting party, including not fewer than three hundred of the so-called Nihilists living in exile at the convict mines and in the penal settlements of Siberia." This first paper in Mr. Kennan's series is one of four, descriptive of the present state of feeling in Russia, and its causes. It is calculated as an introduction to what he will have to say later on Siberia and the Exile System. The frontispiece this month is a portrait of Washington by Wright of Philadelphia, made in 1784 and now for the first time engraved. Of this portrait it is stated that Washington wrote to Mrs. Powel, for whom it was painted, that "it was the best for which he had then sat," while Tuckerman said that "perhaps no portrait of Washington bears such convincing marks of genuine individuality without a particle of artistic flattery." Articles on the "Home and Haunts of Washington" and "Mt. Vernon as it is" accompany the portrait. The special art feature of the number is the sculpture of Augustus Saint Gaudens, of which several beautiful examples are reproduced, including two of his portraits in low relief, the large relief portrait of Dr. Bellows, the Puritan statue at Springfield, Mass., the Lincoln statue, etc. Professor John T. Stoddard of Smith College contributes a second paper on "College Composites," in which he shows the results of his experiments in the combination of photographs, the examples being drawn from several large college classes of 1887. The conclusion of the Battle Series is emphasized in this number by an admirable presentation in text and pictures of the break up of Lee's army and the surrender at Appomattox. The article is by General Horace Porter, and is entitled "Grant's Last Campaign." With the November number the Lincoln History reaches a most interesting part of the great President's career, the period between his election and his inauguration, and one upon which, by their personal relations to him, Messrs. Nicolay and Hayare able to throw much new light. This installment contains large quotations from unpublished MS. letters to and from Lincoln.

The prevalence of scarlet fever in all parts of the civilized world and the great mortality therefrom, amounting in England alone during five years to 88,273 deaths, have induced Science to institute an inquiry into the reasons for such a condition of things,—whether it is a fact that this disease is not amenable to control by sanitation; or whether sanitarians have not suggested any practical method by which it may be controlled; or whether parents, teachers, health authorities and others neglect to carry out the recommendations which sanitary science has made. With the object of helping to determine these questions, Science has issued a circular letter containing specific inquiries, which can be obtained by addressing Science, 47 LaFayette Place, New York.

Dr. George F. Pentecost, who has just been conducting a hopeful evangelistic work in Amesbury, Mass., was one of the most interested participants in the late American Board meeting at Springfield. The discussion of Andover theories there inspired him to write ably on that question in the November number of Words and Weapons Especial attention is also given to the subject of family prayer and two powerful and practical articles appear which are worth re-reading a dozen times in most Christian households. Dr. Pierson concludes his sketch of John Knox, and a sermon on the "Precious Blood of Christ" adds much to the value of the magazine.

Louisa M. Alcott contributes one of her charming stories, entitled "Pansies," to the first number of the new volume of St. Nicholas. It is followed by a bewildering array of short stories, entertaining sketches, and bright jingles and verses. Of a more instructive turn are: "A Peasant Painter—Jules Bastien-Lepage," "Elephants at Work," by John R. Coryell; the true story of Pocahontas, by E. S. Brooks; and "The Last Chance of Life," by David Ker, a characteristic episode in the life of Napoleon Bonaparte.

The Swiss Cross is a most attractive magazine wherein young people may begin scientific study. Its leading article tells of the geologic attractions of Mazon Creek, in Grundy county, Ill. Wheaton College has in its cabinet probably one of the largest and best collections ever gathered in that locality. Lieut. Schwatka writes a very entertaining and instructive article on "Wintering in the Arctics."

The American Agriculturist for November, 1887, is a double number, far surpassing its editor's claim, any previous issue in the amount and variety of reading matter, in the number of contributors, in the number and variety of illustrations, etc., etc. There are no less than one hundred and ninety-seven columns of reading matter proper, embracing four hundred and eight editorial, contributed and descriptive articles; fifty-five different contributors, representing twenty-two States, Territories, the Provinces and Europe, and two hundred and forty illustrations, including full page illustrations and premiums. In alluding to the death this month of one of its editors, Col. Mason C. Weld, the American Agriculturist says: "What is note-worthy, the body of writers, who for nearly a half a century have made it a power in both hemispheres, are still, with this exception, connected with the periodical. Publishers have come and gone, but the editors and their associates remain." Address American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

LODGE NOTES.

Rev. J. B. Finn, of Watertown, is Grand Chaplain of the Grand Commandery of Wisconsin Knight Templars.

Chief Justice Way of South Australia is a Freemason and lately provided a grand entertainment for the Grand Lodge of the province.

The Royal Templars of Temperance report 7,000 members in Canada, and are active and aggressive, holding "Royal Revivals," in lodge parlance, through the country.

Lord Wolseley, England's commander-in-chief, who was made a Mason in 1854 in a Military Lodge, No. 728, in Dublin, has been appointed Grand Junior Warden of the Grand Lodge of England.

On Wednesday last 125 ladies, above named, visited Waukesha, Wis. The Sunday previous seventy-five of the delegates to the National meeting of the brotherhood spent the day there and participated in the organization of a new division of the order.

"White Caps," a gang of ruffians said to be as bad as the "Bald Knobbers" of Missouri, are terrorizing the people of Crawford and Harrison counties, Indiana. They wear masks, carry hickory switches, and lash the unfortunates who fall under their displeasure.

Prince Albert Victor, son of the Prince of Wales, Grand Master of England, is appointed by his father Grand Senior Warden. Prince Victor was initiated on the 17th March, 1885, in the Royal Alpha Lodge, No. 16, the disgraceful and pagan ceremony being performed by the young man's own father.

District Assembly No. 3,115 K. of L., the oldest assembly in New Albany, Ind., has gone out of existence. It had at one time a membership of 800, but this number was reduced to 70. There was no dissenting voice to the proposed dissolution. The charter and secret work of the order will be sent to headquarters.

At a meeting of Chicago local assembly 1307, Knights of Labor, it was decided by a majority vote that the assembly would withdraw in a body from the Knights of Labor organization. A committee was appointed to confer with the "provisional committee" of dissenters, with the object of forming the nucleus of the proposed new organization.

The Grand Lodge of Scotland recently issued a charter for a lodge in the town of Alexandria, in Egypt, and within the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Egypt. The Egyptians made short work of the invaders. The representative of the Grand Lodge of Scotland at "Egypt" was peremptorily ordered to "pass in" his commission. Eventually, Scotland withdrew the charter and apologized.

The wives of the engineers attending the Locomotive Brotherhood in Chicago organized at the Palmer House the Grand Lodge of the "Ladies' Auxiliary of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers." Lodges have existed in various cities, but there has never been heretofore any regular organization. After this all the lodges will get charters of the Grand Lodge. The objects will be sociability and help in case of sickness. Every member of the order pays 50 cents to this Grand Lodge yearly.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

HOME AND HEALTH.

CHILDREN AND CITY CHILDREN.

City children are apt to be undersized. They seldom get to be mammoth frequenters. Ask a country man used to hale and hearty boys brought up on the farm the age of the next boy he passes on the pavements and three chances to four, measuring the height and shoulder girth, with his eye he will put it two or three years lower than it is. The fourteen year old dozen I now above called to mind are the fifteen year old as if he had entered his teens. I got tired of some figures he once cut which show that these things need not be as they are. Dr. Anderson, who is well known in connection with the Physical Education Association, compared the height and weight of the girls pupils of a Boston grammar school, regular gymnasium exercise is indeed kept up, with another by age for to see how much girls taken at random. The results are as follows:

HEIGHT.

Years	10	12	14	16
With exercise	54 in.	56 in.	60 in.	62 in.
Without	54 in.	56 in.	59 in.	60 in.

WEIGHT.

With exercise	62 lb.	70 lb.	91 lb.	102 lb.
Without	62 lb.	70 lb.	85 lb.	94 lb.

The figures show an average in height of about two years difference, while in strength it is even more than education of the body as well as the mind. The new approach of the opening of the school year ought to make parents careful to have an eye to muscle as well as text books. This is especially necessary in the case of girls, for the average boy will in some way work out for himself in such matters.—Philadelphia Press.

THE CITY AND THE COUNTRY BOY.

The explanation of why young people brought up in the country so often excel those of the cities is perfectly set forth in the following from Mrs. J. Ramsdell, editor and lecturer: "Remember my son you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or a pen, a wheel barrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a paper, they'll be cast-iron bet or wrong, hasty to age, you must work. If you have sound, you will be the men who are the most wise to live the rest of their days without work, are the men who work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with overwork. It is beyond your power to do that, on the money side of thirty. They die sometimes, but it is because they quit work at 6 p. m. and don't get home until 2 a. m. It is the interval that kills, my son. The work gives you an appetite for your meals, a deep welcome to your slumbers, it gives you a perfect and grateful appreciation of a holiday. There are young men who do not work, but the world is not proud of them. It does not know their names even. A nameless species of them are sold by auction every day. Nobody goes down the promiscuous world does not know that they are here. So find out what you want to do and do it, and take off your coat and make a dent in the world. The busier you are the less harm you will be apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier will be your holidays, and the better satisfied will the world be with you.

INFANTILE JEALOUSY.

The case of the four year old girl who nearly succeeded in killing her baby brother at Port Jefferson, L. I., brings vividly to the memory of elderly readers the story of the Rag-a-Muffin of rank eminent for learning and piety who was never known to smile from the moment she appreciated the consequences of a lie of childish jealousy. The occasion was but five years of age when a baby sister was born, and the nervous and restless began the unusual use of exchange of "one out of joint," which unfortunately, has not yet gone out of fashion. The poor child, driven desperate one day by the jeers of a maid, fled to the mother's chamber and was met by a nurse, who ordered her away. Returning in a position of woe to the nursery, she was greeted by fresh taunts and "I told you your mamma did not love you now." The maid was pressing out some garments for the new-comer at a table while she talked, and the infuriated little girl, catching up a flat iron turned it upon the head of the baby as it lay in the cradle. The shock was fatal to the invalid mother. She and the infant were buried together.—Babyland.

FARM NOTES.

IS A BEEF FAMINE IMMINENT?

Are we to experience a beef famine? The facts seem to indicate it, and many sources believed to be trustworthy point to the scarcity of beef in the near future. Some authorities expect short commons in 1888, others defer the evil hour until 1889. The severity of the winter of 1886-87 was such as to heavily deplete the herds of the Northwest. The losses which occurred were in old cows and in yearlings. These are classes which would not affect the supply of the coming year, nor yet of 1889, save that a general shortage would stiffen prices in some degree. These old and very young animals died from poverty rather than from exposure. No matter how extreme the cold, had the cattle been well fed only a few would have succumbed to the influence of the extreme cold; as it was, the ranches were overstocked. The winter feed, which consists of the natural grasses cured on the ground, had all been eaten down long before winter really set in, and starvation followed. Another source of apprehension arises from the numerous losses in the Southwest, where the want of water was such that entire districts were cleared of their herds; the drouth caused the death of all ages of cattle, so that an immediate drain was felt at many local points. Still the numbers of Spanish cattle seem to represent legions. On our Eastern markets these same long-horned wanderers of the plains are most unwelcome visitors. The large wholesale butchers are timid of them; the beef is coarse, discolors readily, and the carcasses dress to poor advantage. These far-apart losses give rise to apprehension, which is rather shadowy when calmly investigated. No losses heavier than usual are reported from any other cattle growing States. Now the worst that our cattlemen need fear is a probable rise in prices which will decrease the volume of our export trade, in that as soon as a margin of profit ceases, foreign shipments from our ports must also cease, until prices again go down to a lower plane.—Agriculturist.

HOW SHEEP PAY.

If a farmer has plenty of patience, and is willing to give close attention to details in the care of stock, he can make more money for food consumed from sheep than from any other stock. But not one farmer in ten will care to give them the attention they require at certain seasons of the year; so the few who do take good care of a flock will find a good market for mutton and a demand for wool at some price usually enough to pay for wintering the flock. A farm which is rolling in its surface seems perfectly adapted to sheep raising. Such land needs grass on the hill-tops to keep it from washing, and sheep need hill-tops and sweet, short grass. They like to lie down on a hillside in the spring, where the sun makes the ground dry and warm, and where they are protected from the cold sweep of the wind.

The greatest profit from sheep is not in mutton or wool, but in the enhanced fertility of the farm on which they are kept. No other stock can compare with sheep in this direction. This increased value comes from two causes: the large quantity of solid and liquid manure deposited on all the land, and particularly on the highest and poorest points in the pasture. The manure, being fine and well scattered, is pressed about the roots of the grass, where it gives the greatest possible benefit. Another source whereby the grasses are encouraged is the destruction of bushes and many kinds of weeds which grow where cattle and horses only are pastured. Hazel brush fares very badly in the sheep pasture, and wild roses, ragweed, burdocks and other weeds are selected first and then the sheep look for grass. In this way a sheep pasture becomes like a beautiful lawn and every year grows better; but if the farmer sees "millions in sheep," and overstocks his fields, then the grass goes with the bushes and weeds. Then the sheep get poor, tumble down one after another, their ambition lessens as their flesh goes, and the unfortunate owner or imprudent manager votes sheep a perfect nuisance.—American Agriculturist.

APPLES FOR COWS.—A Maine farmer, who had a dozen cows, tried this experiment with them. To six he gave from a peck to a half bushel of apples daily for two weeks. The result was very gratifying, for the amount of milk was greatly increased, and it was also of much better quality.

He then returned to the previous method of feeding, and the quantity of milk at once began to decrease. At the same time he commenced feeding apples to the other six cows, that had been kept on a different diet, and they, like the first six, at once gave more and better milk than formerly. Thus he changed back and forth two or three times with the same results, until he was fully satisfied that apples were valuable food for milch cows. —Ex.

BEREA EVANGELIST,

A monthly journal whose aim it is to advance

and to help break down everything that hinders its spread.

It teaches that men need to be converted to the personal Christ, and not simply to a system of truth, and that there must be implanted in them a divine life as well as a correct belief. The seeks to show that the division of Christians into sects is a great wrong, and a very serious obstacle to the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and it seeks to show Christians how they may be one in Christ, and to persuade and help them thus to unite. The also opposes Intemperance, Secret Societies, Worldliness, and the spirit of Caste, and aims to "war a good warfare" against all wrong.

EVANGELIST

OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND
ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE ANARCHISTS.

Spies, Schwab, and Fielden have indicted a letter to the Governor appealing for mercy, in which they declare that they never advocated force and are really very sorry. Petitions are being constantly received by Governor Oglesby, some asking a commutation of sentence and others that the law take its course.

In a speech at a meeting of the Progressive Labor party at NewYork Friday night, S. E. Shevitch, editor of the Leader, said that if the condemned men in Chicago were executed, "something thousands of times worse than the late civil war will follow," and that persons concerned in the "outrageous murder will have to answer for the blood they shed by every spark of life in their worthless bodies."

Mr. McLane, United States minister in Paris has received a communication from M. Bardolet, president of the extreme left in the Chamber of Deputies, to the governor of Illinois, praying for clemency for the condemned Chicago anarchists.

A large and violent meeting of anarchists was held in Marseilles, France, Sunday night, at which were adopted resolutions giving warning to American representatives in France that their safety would be endangered by the execution of the condemned Chicago anarchists.

COUNTRY.

Several masked men stopped the eastbound Salt Lake express on the Denver & Rio Grande railroad at about 1 A. M., a few miles east of Grand Junction and robbed the passengers of their money and valuables. The robbers then entered the express car, but failed to open the safe. The mail pouches were cut and the registered packages and letters opened. The robbers took to the mountains. It has not yet been learned how much money they secured.

A freight train crashed into six cars carrying Robinson's circus in the union depot St. Louis, Thursday evening, killing one man, hurting several persons and setting free among the people the wild beasts of the menagerie. The tiger bounded into the crowd. One man was bitten in the neck by the infuriated animal. Officers were present, but they dared not shoot at the beast in the crowd. A flight of stairs leads to the upper offices, and up this the tiger sprang. Near the top he met one of the clerks. Man and animal stood facing each other. The former got into the office safely, put his revolver through the slightly-opened door, and fired at the tiger. The latter became more and more infuriated by every shot. At this juncture circus men arrived with poles and canvas, and, after a struggle, succeeded in overpowering the brute. Nine cages were demolished in the collision, and fourteen animals in all were liberated. Two mountain lions are dead and a big boa constrictor was cut to pieces. A lion was overpowered with pikes and canvas under a freight train; a leopard was shot in the head; an ibex was captured slightly injured, and the Bengal tiger has three bullets in him and numerous pike wounds. The company's loss is $30,000. Eleven animals were at large at one time, creating a reign of terror in the southern section of the city for over two hours. The last secured was a mountain lion, which fought desperately in the ticket office of General Manager Taussig until lassoed with strong ropes and nearly strangled.

A dispatch from Evansville, Ind., says, This section of the country is now experiencing one of the most prolonged drouths in the memory of the oldest settler. The effects are being felt through the wide area of country from Owensboro, Ky., to the mouth of the Ohio river at Cairo, comprehending all of southwestern Kentucky and a large section of southern Indiana and southern Illinois. In some parts of the stricken territory a copious rain has not fallen for more than four months. In the extreme western counties of Kentucky a deplorable condition of affairs is reported. Wells and springs have not only given out, but streams have disappeared for the first time in their history. Many of the people are compelled to travel several miles for drinking water, while the cattle and hogs are said to be dying by hundreds in a hopeless search for water along the beds of the water courses.

The Utah Supreme Court has decided to appoint a receiver for Mormon church property in excess of $50,000.

The receipts of the Post Office Department were $48 837,000, and the aggregate expenditures $52,391,677; excess of expenditures over all revenues, $3 554,068.

Father McGlynn said in NewYork that he will soon be reinstated in the Catholic church, but the Archbishop says the story is absurd.

General Ruger gave battle to the Crow Agency Indians in Montana, in which Sword Bearer and three or four of his desperate followers were killed and the outbreak virtually crushed. The authorities at the Interior Department consider the situation decidedly grave, and that no delay should occur in the arrest of the malcontents. Business is suspended and the settlers continue in a state of alarm.

FOREIGN.

The British cabinet resolved to continue its present vigorous policy in Ireland, especially as regards speeches at proclaimed meetings.

The Hawaiian Government will cede Beard River Harbor, near Honolulu, to the United States, as a coaling station, with the proviso that it shall be relinquished if the American Government abrogates the present reciprocity treaty. The harbor is regarded as the finest in the Hawaiian group.

Berlin dispatches state that the date of the Czar's departure from Copenhagen is still in obscurity, The 17th and 20th are mentioned. German uniforms have been sent to Copenhagen, and a rumor is current in Berlin that the Czar and Emperor William have arranged a meeting for the 17th. At the same time there is a vague rumor that the arrangements have been broken off. Nothing definite can be learned, but a meeting is counted upon on all sides. A failure to meet now would be looked upon as an extremely bad sign for the relations of the two empires.

Germany, in connection with the other powers, has adopted a tolerant policy toward Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria, believing it to be best for Europe that his position should be made secure, and that any attempt at violent interference in Bulgarian affairs will be strongly resented by Prince Bismarck.

The Prussian budget will show a deficit of 40,000,000 marks. It is hoped to cover the deficit by increased returns from the state railways and the share of Prussia in the brandy tax from October, 1887, to April, 1888.

Wm. O'Brien, the sensational Irish editor who made such disturbance in Canada a few months since, has been arrested. He resisted the attempt to force him to put on the uniform of the Tullimore jail. The prison doctor then directed the governor to desist on account of the unfavorable state of Mr. O'Brien's health. Dillon spoke at Castlerea. He entreated his hearers to swear with him that as long as life and liberty remained they would do everything in their power "to avenge Mr. O'Brien, and to make suffer the hateful class who consigned this beloved and gifted Irishman to a felon's cell."

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Francis Murphy, the temperance evangelist, began the fourth week of his Gospel temperance campaing in this city with an overflowing house last Sabbath night at the Union Park Congregational church, where he will hold meetings every night this week. Instead of holding daily meetings in Farwell Hall as last year, he is now visiting all parts of the city, reaching those districts which may never have been penetrated with an appeal for temperance on Gospel grounds. He is assisted by the officers and supporters of the Gospel Temperance League which was formed here last spring at the close of his several months' labor, and is reaching many by his sympathy who might be repelled by severer arguments.

The vote for constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic was lost in Oregon last Tuesday, but Dakota nearly redeemed the day. The verdict of that Territory is decidedly in favor of prohibition. The vote was by counties, and of the sixty-eight, sixty-two are against the traffic by majorities of from fifty to 600 votes. Only six counties are for license. We print their names for the benefit of readers who propose settling in Dakota: Bonhomme, Codington, Dent, Ramsey, Stutsman and Ward. The vote on dividing the Territory also received the great majority of 15,000. This question settled, both north and south divisions will soon be ready to enter as States; and with such a grand vote for temperance both parts will come in pure and clean, with no taint of the infamous traffic upon them.

Anarchy and its suppression has been a judgment also upon Chicago. For eight years this city suffered Carter H. Harrison to be at the head of municipal affairs. He was notoriously the friend of gamblers, saloons, and the vicious classes generally. They all voted for him as often as possible; and reputable men voted for him also, because they thought him shrewd to veto jobs and plundering of the public funds, and careful in providing good streets, etc. What fatal economy! Finely paved streets have been torn up month after month by some corporation under authority from his administration; the boodler trials and steals have come in to swell the reckoning, and the fatal results of anarchy are also laid at the door of the Harrison rule. What profit is there in the economy of wicked rulers? Verily, "when the wicked bear rule the people mourn." This city spurned the law of God, she sowed to the wind of license and greed; she has plentifully reaped the whirlwind of consternation, of murder and of rebellion.

The expiration of a lease in England drawn for 999 years in the reign of Alfred the Great is noted as a remarkable witness for the stability of the English government and institutions. The West Side Chicago street railway has just leased its property and franchises for the same length of time. Will our social fabric survive the assaults of anarchy; will they not be undermined by the causes just enumerated? The open Bible has preserved England for a thousand years. Will it so preserve America?

"A thousand years, my own Columbia."

Shall that day break in gladness upon our Atlantic headlands? It is a momentous question, but He "who hath power over the nations to set up or to destroy" will be with us according as we obey his revealed Word. Verily, blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord.

Chicago and her anarchists have been furnishing sensations for the world long enough. The eight-hour strike on the 1st of May, 1886; the bomb massacre on the 4th, by which seven policemen were slain and fifty-nine wounded; the trial in August and September following; the appeal to the higher courts; the desperation of Lingg and his suicide; and the execution and burial—these have been invariable topics of morbid interest. But Chicago has met these emergencies with firmness and courage, and has proved to the world that we may put confidence in American institutions, which were founded in the name of God by men who worshiped him with the utmost sincerity. The anarchist leaders are now at rest in prison and the grave. "Rest" (Ruhe) was their watchword of insurrection on the fatal 4th of May—a word of fearful prophecy. Let us hope that the world also may have rest from such sort of Chicago sensations.

Dr. James McCosh has resigned the position of president of Princeton College, which has just been raised to the rank of a first-class university under his charge, and retires just as that work is completed. The public can only surmise whether he feels the burden of seventy-six years too heavily for the responsibilities of the office, or whether he wishes for his few remaining years of activity to devote his energy to the School of Philosophy in which he is profoundly interested. For his successor in the University the name of Dr. John Hall, now Chancellor of the University of New York, is mentioned; but more certainty is expressed that Prof. Francis L. Patton of Princeton Theological Seminary or Prof. Wm. M. Sloane of the college will be chosen. Prof. Sloane is the son of the late Dr. J. R. W. Sloane of the Reformed Presbyterian Seminary, whose addresses were among the ablest in the conventions of the National Christian Association. Prof. Sloane is editor of the Princeton Review, and was for a time secretary to the historian Bancroft, whose literary life he sketched some months since for the Century. He is now compiling a life of his father and will represent faithfully his convictions on Christian reform. The good that Dr. McCosh has accomplished in elevating and advancing the standard of higher education in this country can never be adequately repaid or fully estimated. He can honorably retire from an active service crowned with the gratitude and blessings of thousands of young men.

"If Chicago had kept the Sabbath there would have been no anarchists," said Dr. Everts in his address at the Elgin Sabbath Convention. If there had been no saloons there would have been no anarchists. If the secret lodges had been suppressed there would have been no anarchists. The open saloon is on the side of anarchy—there these conspirators against society met and plotted. Sabbath violation is on the side of anarchy—meetings in favor of lawlessness were always held on that day; and they are still in Chicago, in London, Ireland, and New York. The secret lodge is on the side of anarchy—it subjects part of this people to other governments than the American, to other oaths than the oath of God, and schools them in such lessons of assassination as hardened the heart of Lingg and his companions. Casting out the Bible from our schools is on the side of anarchy, since it allows the youth of our cities to grow up with no convictions on the right basis of authority in the state, much less with proper respect for the authority of God. The homage paid to infidelity in the person of an Ingersoll, or its more subtle manifestations of Dr. Thomas and the lodge of which he is the religious functionary—this also is on the side of anarchy. The wretched men who have given up their lives were hardened against God; the appeals of Miss Dryer, of the Bible workers, and of Dr. Bolton were vain to penetrate their armor of unbelief and hardihood. They had reached the "seat of the scorner." Shall not the churches of America arise and make war on these evils, no longer by words, but by such deeds as shall give us a peaceful, joyful revolution?

The association formed in Memphis lately for the establishment of a new academy at a meeting reported in the last Living Way have agreed to locate the school in Memphis as central to the district of Western Tennessee, Northern Mississippi and Eastern Arkansas, and it will be called the Memphis Baptist Bible and Normal Institute. This will add one to the institutions for the colored race that are out and out for Christ against the lodge.

WHY THIS WASTE?

BY REV. J. F. AVERY.

Often, as in Christ's time, we find men asking this question, Why this waste? as though they were the greatest of economists. They talk of our modern missionary enterprises as being a waste of precious lives and means. But the fact is, they love the bag and hate the thought of any possible toll therefrom to Christ Jesus, who proved himself by word and deed to be bitterly opposed to waste. Did he not say, after the miracle of the loaves, "Gather up the fragments that remain that nothing be lost?" Yet he commended the breaker of the alabaster box. To Jesus the escape of its pleasant ointment was no sin. The story of the donor's benevolence, Christ declared, should last longer and spread farther than the sweet perfume she loosed in honor of her much-loved Lord, from whom she had learned the meaning of full and free salvation.

These cavillers against Gospel liberality selfishly sniff the air and murmur against the gifts and sacrifices of true and liberal givers, men and women, who, knowing the preciousness of the saving Name, would tell others the story and count not their lives and offerings worthy to be compared to love's greater demand. Wasters enough, of a truth, there are who can stand idle and say never a word, whilst the mills of the drunkard makers grind cruelly, but alas! not slowly.

The squandering of money in the saloon and the lodges should afford food for deep reflection and consideration. It certainly shows a great waste, a needless waste, and a great deal of liberality on the side of those who love the world. Economy appears to be tightly and rigidly practiced where liberality might well abound. The following lines give a fair and proportionate idea of expenditures, showing in round numbers sundry yearly expenditures by the people of the United States. It compares the cost of vices with expenditures for the necessaries of life, and sharply defines the interest of the people at large in the things that relate to the best interests of society.

Alcoholic Liquors, $900,000,000.
Tobacco, $690,000,000.
Wool, Cotton and Sugar, $602 000,000.
Iron, Steel and Lumber, $523,000,000..
Bread, $505.000,000.
Meat, $303,000,000.
Public Education, $92,000,000.
Home and Foreign Missions, $5,500,000.

With such a showing can we wonder at the crime, social disorder, domestic unhappiness, sickness and sorrow that abound among us? Should Christians be niggardly in the face of such large liberality? Surely the followers of Jesus need a spirit of fuller consecration of themselves and theirs to Christ's service. When we see missionaries forsaking homes, and going to other work amongst the unhealthy parts of the earth, we ought to give them our sincerest respect. We see men and women of culture and of means devoting themselves to missionary work, and we are bound to support them in the work which they have undertaken, and that with a liberal hand. If we economize, let us see to it that we begin in those matters which are carnal and selfish. Then, and not till then can we fully know the blessing of true increase. All denial and surrender of self for Christ's sake and kingdom brings the fatness of soul which is gladdening and satisfying.

Mariner's Temple, New York.

PAUL'S METHOD OF REFORM WORK.

BY REV. J. D. NUTTING.

The following is intended as a short sermon for all concerned—including the preacher. And since the Scripture in a sermon is always good, whatever be true of the rest, let me begin with two texts instead of one.

1. "Let every one of us please his neighbor, for his good to edification."—Rom. 15: 2.

2. "I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. And unto the Jew I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that were under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, as without law (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ), that I might gain them that are without law; to the weak I became as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some."—1 Cor. 9: 19-22.

Two dangers constitute a Scylla and Charybdis in every moral reform. On the one hand is the danger that those who should be its friends will, instead, be the supple tools of indolent or opposing public opinion, without sufficient moral stamina to stand for the truth unless the crowd is at their backs; and on the other, that those who are genuine friends will become narrow-minded, unbending, repulsive dogmatists, hindering almost as much as they help the movement with which they are connected. The one class erects a flabby, rubber idol falsely called "expediency," and may often be seen in great numbers bowed in a very disgraceful attitude before it, having sacrificed the truth, the commands of God, their own self-respect and that of their neighbors, more or less consciously, to secure the smiles of the hideous caricature before them. The other class builds many idols, out of the various cast-iron sets of ideas possessed by its members, and around each of them is gathered a group of devoted worshipers. These idols all have a strange, though varying resemblance to the hollow, red-hot Moloch of old, into which devotees cast even their children; sacrificing in fanatical zeal the things which should be most dear to them for other purposes.

Neither of these classes rightfully contains a single human being, yet a vast multitude of mankind is found in them, and temptation towards them is constant and universal as gravitation; and one hardly knows where he is until it may be almost too late for recovery. How can we escape? St. Paul, by inspiration, shows the way in our texts. Consider two germinal thoughts:

I. "Edification" is the constant object of a true life—the saving of souls and "building them up" into the best possible "temples of the Holy Ghost." We are, as Christ and Paul were, to be constantly going about doing good; hourly carrying the moral welfare of ourselves and others upon our hearts; joyous in being able to do even a little for others, and so for the blessed kingdom of our Christ. We are to be co-workers thus with Christ, and "laborers together with God" (1 Cor. 3: 9, 10, etc.). Real reform work is only a branch of Gospel work, not a separate thing; and is hence controlled by the same principles, commands and instructions as were given for preaching the Gospel.

And we often need to bear in mind that no one's work for edification is rightly to be limited by his own wishes or tastes. I once had a member in my church—a business man of fair ability—who was our choir leader, and who excused himself from ever attending prayer meeting or taking part in social revival services, by saying that the music was his part—an excuse that would not stand a second in the Judgment. A lady member of the same church excused herself from doing more for church work than occasional attendance at Sabbath morning service, because of her great devotion to the W. C. T. U. and other temperance efforts, an excuse no more valid than the other. So many reformers, as they style themselves, do. But when Christ gave his last command, to go and preach his Gospel, addressing it not to the twelve, but to every Christian soul according to ability and providential circumstances, he meant the whole Gospel; no more meaning that bold men should preach our little part of the Gospel alone than that timid men should omit reform truths. We are to build a symmetrical temple, on His plan, not ours.

II. The spirit in which it is to be attempted.

1. A spirit of service to others, not of dictatorial "lording it over God's heritage." Paul says that he "made himself servant unto all;" Christ says that the greatness of service is the only true greatness, and that even he was "among you as one that serveth." Right here is a very great danger to any one who attempts to bring about any moral reform. Because he feels conscious of possessing a truth which others do not, and of laboring for that truth while others give it a cold shoulder, he is apt insensibly to grow Pharisaical, thinking himself better than they. (see 1 Cor. 4: 1–7; 8: 2.) The next step, often coming insensibly, too, takes him to a point at which he will peaceably brook no dissent from his opinion, and may make various attempts, this side of physical force, to compel others to either echo his opinions or keep silence. The next step is the Inquisition, when power permits. How opposite to all this were Paul and Christ! Paul spoke of "in honor preferring one another," and of "in lowliness of mind each esteeming other better than themselves," and signed himself "Paul the servant" (Rom. 1: 1), tracing thus the signature of Christ over after him. Thus we are, as the condition at once of the Divine blessing on our labors and of our success in them, to do all in the spirit of service marked by these characteristics.

2. A spirit of adaptability to others, and to the circumstances in which we are placed. Verse 3 says, "For even Christ pleased not himself." Says Lange, the author of what is probably the greatest commentary accessible in English, speaking of this passage, "Pleasing one's self denotes the inconsiderate or unfriendly pursuit of the ideals of our own subjectivity in the selfish isolation of our personal existence;"—like a train between iron rails trying to throw every obstacle to one side or the other, and ending in a smashup when it cannot. The Christian has no business with such a stiff-set, unadjustable course of travel. He is, by Divine injunction, if his truth be not received in one city to go to another; if swine trample his pearls, to take them to a better market; and to seek to please all men to their edification by adapting himself to their peculiarities, instead of trying to smash his way through them, or attempting to go through in spite of them. (See second text.) He is to regard true expediency, which means, as Paul uses the word in 1 Cor. 10: 23, a contributing to the end sought by the means used; using such means and rejecting others. So Paul says he did (second text). From the references we see that in accord with this principle he circumcised Timothy (though circumcision had been abolished) "because of the Jews which were in those quarters," to avoid arousing their prejudices against this young minister; and to the pagan Galatians he almost ridiculed the Jewish ceremonial law which some strove to impose on them, while in preaching to Jews that was often the basis of his argument (Gal. 3: Rom.3). So in many other cases. In his loving, hungry zeal after the souls of his hearers his own personal likes, dislikes, and peculiarities, and even the means used, faded almost out of his view. As a physician in a critical case has no love for remedies in themselves substitutes one for another as need demands, so this greatest of the apostles, "forgetting those things that were behind, reached out," with longing earnestness, for souls and character, "unto those things which were before." Festus called him mad because of his earnestness, but we find nobody calling him a slave to methods or to "cranky" personal peculiarities. He used these, so far as he had them, as men ought to use political parties—not as masters but as slaves; tools for certain kinds of work, to be dropped or changed for others the moment they became unsuitable. He could face the beasts at Ephesus, the howling mob at Jerusalem or the Cæsar of the world at Rome, and could withstand his co-laborer, Mark, "to his face, because he was to be blamed;" yet his motto was, "All things to all men, that by all means I may save some." Practically, this is the World's Evangelical Alliance motto: "In essentials unity, in non-essentials diversity," with the addition, "and terribly in earnest" for the main chance of good; never crossing God's commands, but otherwise sacrificing all to success in his work.

Now, allowing me the Scripture privilege of judging others by myself, these Bible directions meet a very great need, and will correct great faults if observed. When God lays down a plan no other will succeed, because that is the plan on which he built the universe to go. We have an adage that "Vinegar catches no flies." Let that serve as a background, and over it write: "But 'let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification,'" and take the two for a guideboard to success. It will lead to greater adjustability of method and view; to a greater sweetness of spirit and feeling in many cases; to a greater variety in kind and direction of effort; to a greater endeavor to put ourselves in the places of lodge-entangled souls so that we can meet just their view of the case, instead of shooting wide of the mark with our, mayhap, crooked-barreled blunderbusses of a past generation; to a far greater appreciation of the differences of view which separate many from us who would otherwise be workers; to a much greater unity with God in this work for souls—and to a much greater measure of success in it.

God's plan is always safe; let us try it as fully as we can learn how.

ANTI-CHRIST PERSONIFIED.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

What strange language is this I find in Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 93; Masonic Ritualist, page 106; Sickels's Ahiman Rezon, page 169: "It is one of the most beautiful, but at the same time most abstruse doctrines of the science of Masonic symbolism, that the Mason is ever to be in search of truth, but is never to find it."

"Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." And why? "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me. I and my Father are one. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father; but he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven."

See again Webb's Monitor, page 73; Sickels's Monitor, 2nd part, page 5; Mackey's Ritualist, page 271; Macoy's Monitor, page 86: "Ye, also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God. Wherefore, also it is contained in the Scriptures, Behold, I lay in Zion, for a foundation, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste to pass it over."

How does that read in the Bible? "Ye, also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Wherefore, also, it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded." 1 Peter 2: 5, 6.

Again, Webb's Monitor, page 120; Mackey's Ritualist, page 348; Sickels's Monitor, page 50, part 2nd; Macoy's Monitor, page 156: "Now we command you, brethren, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which ye received of us." "Now, them that are such, we command and exhort that with quietness they work and eat their own bread." These passages appear thus in the Bible: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the tradition which he received of us." "Now, them that are such we command and exhort, by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread." 2 Thess. 3: 6, 12.

Thus we have in our midst a religious organization that deliberately turns the Lord Jesus Christ out of his own blessed Word. It takes from and adds to. (See Rev. 22: 18, 19.) Every member of the order, knowingly or unknowingly, in swearing allegiance to Masonry, adopts pure theism, abjures Christ, and bows to anti-Christ.

Such are the solemn truths in this matter; therefore, let me oppose such a society, and anything that affiliates with it. "He that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds." Let us use these facts for God and perishing humanity, warning the people to renounce evil, and accept Christ and his free salvation.

THE GROWTH OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ASSOCIATION.

In the annual sermon before the Christian Association of New Hampshire, lately held at Manchester, Elder S. C. Kimball spoke from the text, Mark 4: 28, "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear:"

My text, he said, well illustrates the growth of the National Christian Association and its eighteen auxiliary State Associations. It is my purpose to speak only of our own. Apparently small causes when of divine origin led to immense results. A dispute between Martin Luther and another priest named Tetzel in reference to the so-called sacrament of penance led to the Protestant reformation. Luther was so blinded by prejudice and sectarian zeal that it took the gross wickedness of his fellow priest, Tetzel, to wake him up and lead him to investigate the New Testament that he might find out what Christianity really was. So the gross abuses practiced in our New Hampshire churches led the brethren who formed this Association to enter upon a line of prayerful investigation, which resulted in a flood of light on many points of faith and practice. Gambling in many forms was practiced by churches of the prominent evangelical denominations. Theatrical plays were brought into the church, men and women were sold at auction to the highest bidder for sport, feasting and backwoods games were carried beyond the extreme limits of decency, while minister and deacons looked on without descent or joined in the frolic. These things were defended on the ancient plea of Rev. Mr. Tetzel that they brought immense revenues to the church. At the same time many ministers and church members united with the various secret orders. Indeed, most ministers, especially among the Methodists and Freewill Baptists, were members of some mixed fraternity, ostensibly to help some good cause or to get help. Before this time President Charles G. Finney of Oberlin published his great work on Freemasonry, accompanied by a statement of his own experience in the lodge. President Jonathan Blanchard of Wheaton, and others, had already organized the National Christian Association. To purge the church from these evils, especially the last named, the New Hampshire Christian Association was organized at Lake Village, November 24, 1875. It may be asked why we did not work for reform in the church and through the regular channels. We prayerfully and patiently attempted that, but were generally voted down and stigmatized as disturbers of Zion. Scattered among the several denominations, boycotted by the leaders, and destitute of a local paper through which we could communicate, we were shut up to the choice of submission or avert undenominational resistance. Most of the evils that we had opposed were of such a nature that they were death-struck as soon as we were able to hold them up to public gaze. Our success has been so complete that were it not for public records some would doubt whether such evils ever so crowded into the church. Of all the evils mentioned the fraternity question alone remains a live issue, and as to that, it is exceedingly rare to hear a Christian man publicly defend the secret lodge system as necessary for the accomplishment of any good end. It is an axiom in mathematics that the whole is greater than any of its parts. So in morals, all truth is stronger than any one truth. The whole Decalogue stands firmer together than any single precept would alone. The Gospel as a whole will make more rapid progress than any single virtue called from it. Our temperance advocates err if they expect by multiplied agencies to cause that reform to outrun Christianity. So our anti-lodge friends will greatly err if they expect to accomplish anything without Christ and the power of his Spirit. Archimedes said: "Give me whereon to stand and I can move the world." So in morals: The depravity of the human heart is such that outside the Gospel of Jesus Christ there is neither motive nor power that can save a sinner. That Rock alone furnishes a fulcrum adequate to raise fallen humanity.

Of all the glorious fizzles, the recent big-named "International Encampment"was the most cheering. It was another of the last gasps of the effort to keep alive the sectional issue by the worship of G. A. R. secret society. It will not attract this people. We are not a war people, and cannot be made to look upon an army save as a last and sad resort. The army does not represent to us the grandeur and power of the nation—the ballot-box is the palladium of our liberties. The "International" Encampment is now in the hands of a young sprig of a sucker who is called a "receiver," and he is hustling the gory soldiers around livelier than a major-general of regulars. Thank the Lord that the War of the Rebellion is nearly ended.—Geneva, Ill., Patrol.

MASONIC MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETIES.

The annual meeting of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Indiana, was held some time last August in Indianapolis. Total membership 10,300. Total receipts $269,531.29. Disbursements $258,-612 58. Total death benefits paid $212,000.00, leaving $11,918 cash in treasury. Let us look at these figures a little closer. If the reader will but take pencil and slate and figure for a few moments, he can convince himself that the benefit this society proposes to offer its members, is a benefit for which the members must dearly pay. Remember, the total receipts for the past year were $269,531.29; now if we divide this sum by the total membership 10,-300 we have the amount contributed by each member on an average in the past year, namely $26.16. Divide the $212,000.00, the sum paid for death benefits, by 10,300 again, and we have the amount each member received on an average, for the $26.16 which he contributed, namely, $20.57. Now subtract $212,000.00 from $258,612.85 leaves $45,612.85 and you have the sum required to carry on the association in the past year; namely $45,612.85. In other words: every member paid on an average $26.16 into the treasury, but received on an average—please remember as benefit (?) for this is a benefit society —five dollars and fifty-nine cents less than he contributed. Is that not rather a foolish business transaction. Just think of a person placing $26.16 in a bank, and when calling for this money again, the banker saying to him: My dear friend, 'tis true, you deposited $26.16 with me with the understanding that you were to receive a benefit by doing so; on this condition, I received your money, here are $20.57, all that is coming to you, I having expended $5.59 of your deposit to "manage" the same. Do you think that person would ever deposit another cent with that banker? Certainly not. To give $26.16 and receive in return but $20.57 is bad enough; but the benefit received by the members of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society on an average, must, in fact, be still less; for I. J. Spann, a delegate to the convention and a member of the auditing committee, and consequently in a position to know the facts, said, during the sharp discussion which followed the financial reports, that it cost 33 per cent. of the entire fund to run the association for the past year. What does this prove? It proves that the members did not receive over $20.57 on an average for the $26.16 they contributed; but only 67 cents worth of benefit out of every dollar contributed. Thirty-three cents were expended in running the association. A benefit society, indeed! If merchants and tradesmen would run their business on like principle, it would financially ruin them in a short time, and printing offices would be kept busy printing notices for sheriff's sales.—Lutheran Witness.

WRONG FELLOWSHIP.

Fellowship between faith and unbelief must, sooner or later, be fatal to the former. "I would thou wert either cold or hot" has a deep significance for us. Truth is truth, and error is error. There the case begins and ends. The blending of light and darkness can at the best only produce twilight, not noon. We may tamper with doubt, may trifle with certainty, and we may succumb to public opinion, but what will the end be? Has the one great Oracle spoken? Has it spoken accurately and intelligibly? If it has, our only honest position is acceptance of its utterances. Every revealed truth has a distinct, personal claim to be believed, however offensive to the taste or spirit of the age. Truth never demands a vote. It refuses to go to the poll or to acknowledge majorities. It presents its evidence and claims submission. To attempt to gather truth out of a multitude of errors, by setting them to neutralize each other, is to revive the vain alchemy of the Middle Ages to turn iron into gold, or to imitate the folly of an old student of prophecy, who gathered some scores of conflicting prophetic dates together, and struck the mean among them in order to reach the true year. We are apt to forget that error is sin; that truth does not reverse itself; that inspiration and non-inspiration are two opposite poles admitting of no medium; that fidelity ought not to cloak itself under the name of candid inquiry; and that candid inquiry should beware of being landed in unbelief, perhaps, before it is aware.

There are some who are cowardly enough to trifle with, or nibble at truth, but not bold enough to fling it away. It would be well for us to remember that not merely accepted error, but undervalued truth, has often made havoc of a church and shipwreck of a soul. Much of the teaching of the present day is not in the direction of certainty, and men feel that to be tossed to and fro with curious speculations will make but a poor life for them. Meanwhile revelation remains to us, and, when human thinkers have spent themselves, it will re-assert its authority and power. The cross still stands, and with it Jehovah's eternal purpose of grace—grace finding its way to the sinner through the righteous channel opened by the death of the Divine Substitute.—Horatius Bonar, D. D.

THE SABBATH—AMERICAN AND CHRISTIAN.

Citizens as law-makers are to distinguish between the American Sabbath and the Christian Sabbath. The former is a day of rest from labor, a day of quietness when those who desire to worship God in the sanctuary can do so undisturbed. This can be and ought to be preserved by law. The churches and all who work have a right to it. The Christian Sabbath, however, is a day to be religiously observed. That cannot be made obligatory by law without a violation of freedom of conscience, except where a community is of one mind and all its members are agreed that the day should be kept holy unto the Lord. The American Sabbath is established by law. Those who come to America from other lands if they do not like the law can go back to where they came from. Americans, by which we mean those who are American in sentiment as well as those born in the United States, by a large majority desire the preservation of the American Sabbath,and are opposed to the introduction of the Sabbath of continental Europe. That desire has made the law closing the saloons on Sunday. That desire, we believe,if it had an opportunity to express itself, would cast a large vote in favor of the suppression of Sunday newspapers. The publication and sale of newspapers on the Sabbath is as much a violation of the American Sabbath as the work of carpenters, masons, blacksmiths, or the prosecution of any kind of business on that day would be. And the making of newspapers on that day is just as demoralizing and injurious as to conduct any other industrial pursuit would be. There are certainly twenty-five millions of people in the United States who wish to worship God in Christian churches on the Lord's day, unmolested and undisturbed, and they have a right to the protection of the law and a faithful execution of the law. But while those who wish to maintain the American Sabbath make this their argument against the Personal Liberty party, Christians ought to assert and maintain more than this. They ought to claim that the Protestant Christian church does a great work on the Sabbath, by its method of observing the day, in making men righteous,in maintaining a high moral standard,in enlightening and strengthening the conscience of men, in holding before them a perfect example of obedience to a perfect moral law—an example acknowledged by infidels to be a perfect one. Righteousness is absolutely essential to the maintenance of a free representative government. Without it a government by the people, of the people and for the people can not be preserved. Nothing the world has ever had upon it has been so efficient in producing and maintaining righteousness as the Protestant Christian church, and the work of that church which has yielded such a result has been done chiefly on the Sabbath. The welfare of the community demands that the church shall be protected from molestation and disturbance while performing this supremely necessary and important service. Let Romanists take part in preserving the American Sabbath for their own reasons. But the Papal church never has anywhere produced righteousness in men as the Protestant Christian church has. This has been true in all the past, is true to-day, is the record of history, the testimony of every Papistical country. The state cannot afford to allow the Christian church to be molested and disturbed in its endeavor on the Sabbath to establish and maintain a high, courageous, conscientious, hearty righteousness. And while Christian people unite with others in a resolute effort to preserve the American Sabbath, they ought at the same time to assert the value and the necessity of the character which, under God,is formed and nurtured by the Christian church on that day. Legally we can claim only the right to worship God undisturbed, but we must not allow the importance of the worship of the church to be overlooked. This country owes more than words can tell to Protestant Christianity. The people who frequent and support Christian churches are among the most valuable citizens of the commonwealth. No other men have contributed more to the unparalleled progress of the country.—Christian Intelligencer.

There are seven papers printed in the Norwegian and Swedish language in this country that are advocating prohibition.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

A meeting of the Board, called by Pres. L. N. Stratton, chairman, was held at 10 o'clock Saturday forenoon and engaged in the discussion of important measures for promoting the work of the Association.

It was voted that the National Convention in New Orleans be opened on Friday afternoon, February 17, 1888, and to continue through the 20th. A circular setting forth the objects and work of the N. C. A., prepared by the General Agent for general distribution, was approved. The employment of Bro. Francis J. Davidson for colporteur work in the South was referred to the General Agent. L. N. Stratton, J. P. Stoddard and W. R. Hench were appointed a committee on programme for the New Orleans meeting.

The disposition of property in St. Louis, Michigan, Kansas and Minnesota, donated or proposed to be donated to the Association, was referred to a committee. A proposition from Prof H. A. Fischer to offer premiums for essays on secret societies by students of academies, colleges and theological seminaries was approved, and brethren Stoddard, Kellogg and Phillips requested to arrange details and put the resolution into effect.

It was voted to request Rev. W. H. French of Cincinnati to present to the American Branch of the Evangelical Alliance meeting at Washington, Dec. 8th next, the subject of secret societies as an obstacle in the way of the progress of the church of Christ. A committee was appointed to examine the records concerning the purchase of the Washington building and make a statement of facts at some future meeting of the Board.

The effort to evangelize the colored churches of the South in respect to their connection with secret societies, by increasing the donations of the Cynosure to their pastors by 1,000 copies, was endorsed, and friends and agents of the cause were requested to aid this important work in every practicable way. The Board also directed that Carpenter Hall should be opened November 30th for the use of any who might wish for conference during the Prohibition convention.

The importance of Miss E. E. Flagg's proposition to secure a department of the W. C. T. U. on secretism was mentioned and the General Secretary was instructed to correspond with her respecting the devotion of her time and exceptional talents to this reform. The Board learned after thus voting, with expressions of regret and sympathy, of the serious illness of Miss Flagg's aged father.

THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION CONFERENCE.

In response to a call issued July 28th, 1887, the National Committee of the Prohibition party will assemble in Chicago on the 30th day of November, 1887, to fix the time and place of the nominating convention of 1888. On the day following the friends of prohibition from all over the country assemble for a conference. A cordial invitation is extended to all Prohibitionists to be present on this occasion.

Dr. Herrick Johnson is designated as president of the conference, which will be held in Battery D armory on Michigan Avenue, beginning at 9 A.M. with devotional exercises. The following topics will be discussed:

"A Political Party with Prohibition its Chief Aim is the only way to Accomplish the Needed Reform." A. B. Leonard, of Ohio; Samuel Dickie, of Michigan.

"Party Organization and Finance." T. C. Richmond, of Wisconsin; Fred F. Wheeler, of New York.

"High License—Is it a Step toward Prohibition?" Mrs. Clara A. Hoffman, of Missouri; W. W. Satterlee, of Minnesota.

"Prohibition as Related to our Agricultural Interests." Jno. A. Brooks, of Missouri; Fontaine T. Fox, Jr., of Kentucky.

"The Prohibition Party Movement the only true Solution of the Southern Problem." A. A. Hopkins, of New York; E. L. Dohoney, of Texas.

"The Proper Attitude of the Prohibition Party toward Woman Suffrage." Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, of Ohio; I. K. Funk, of New York.

"The Relations of Labor and Liquor." Jno. L Thomas, of Maryland; Walter Thomas Mills, of Ohio.

It is intended to give an average of one hour to each topic under discussion, allowing one-half the time to the speakers above named.

At the mass meeting in the evening the speakers will be Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Hon. John P. St. John.

A large number of the railroads have made arrangements to return attendants on this conference at one-third regular fare. When you buy a ticket state that you wish to attend the National Prohibition Conference at Chicago, and, if arrangements are made for reduced rates, you will be given a certificate showing that you have paid full fare to Chicago. Then secure the signature of the railroad secretary at the Conference, and, on presenting this at the ticket office in Chicago, you can buy your return ticket for one-third regular fare.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

CONVENTION AND LECTURES IN SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI.

GREENFIELD, Mo., Nov. 2nd, 1887.

The anti-secrecy discussion opened here last evening with a fair audience and continued for two hours with excellent attention and order. My remarks of a general character were followed by a stirring speech by Bro. Butler, and recess was taken to 9 o'clock this morning. The forenoon audience was exceptionally large for day session in the busy season. The first hour was spent in singing, prayer and Scripture reading, with remarks interspersed, when the meeting was formally organized by the election of T. C. Cook of Bates county as chairman, and J. W. Thompson of Dade county, secretary. After a few remarks by the General Agent on the origin and history of the N. C. A. and the rise and progress of the American party, Bro. Butler read and explained the platform of the party, which lead to an informal discussion occupying most of the forenoon. Elder Love having arrived from Osceola was introduced by the secretary and made a brief and happy speech.

The afternoon session was a continuation of business and discussion. The committee on resolutions reported, and after thorough discussion their report was adopted and will be forwarded to you by the secretary. The lecture of the afternoon was on the Masonic covenant. Elder Love being compelled by previous engagement to leave at the close of the evening session, he was given so much of the time as he desired to occupy. His discourse was upon the Masonic oaths, in which he successfully demonstrated that they are neither legally nor morally binding. There was much pleasantry, wit, and many sharp points in the elder's speech, and he made an impression that will long remain and not be easily effaced in this community.

LAMAR, Mo., Nov. 5th.—Bro. Butler gave a very able speech on Masonic government on the evening of the 3rd inst. at Greenfield, which was listened to with the most profound attention. It was a masterly effort and will bear fruits for years to come. Leaving Greenfield at 9:30 P. M., we reached Dadeville at 12 o'clock, and enjoyed a few hours of rest hugely. In the morning it was arranged that I should speak at Friendship in the evening and that efforts should be made to invade new territory, but the way seemed hedged up beyond last evening, and as Bro. Glassford urged that we come to Carthage in advance of the convention we bade our friends farewell and started at an early hour for Everton, twelve miles distant, where we took a train for this point, where we are awaiting a train for Carthage. Looking back we can say truly, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us," and we are now in the midst of one of the most beautiful and fertile prairie expanses I have ever chanced upon.

CARTHAGE, Mo., Nov. 9.—With Bro. M. N. Butler I reached this city on Saturday last. We have since been busy at work. Sabbath offered no open door for either of us to speak. On Monday I attended ministers' meeting, and was surprised to see the hour pass without a song, a Scripture reading, or a word of prayer. I hope this is not usual, and although they heard me briefly on our work I could not expect much sympathy from a prayerless meeting, even of clergymen.

Monday evening I preached with liberty to the "Holiness" people and found friends. Last evening the Opera House contained a good audience at the hour appointed for services. Good order prevailed and responses from the audience were frequent and hearty. Bro. Butler has visited 675 dwellings and left over 5,000 pages of N. C. A. tracts which are quietly but effectually doing its work. He is advertised to speak at 7:30 P. M. on the "Government of Freemasonry." The town is stirred already and the outlook is encouraging. I leave here at 1:10 A. M. to-morrow for Olathe, Kans., where I am to address a union meeting in the U. P. church at 7:30 P. M. and shall take the next train for Chicago.

This is Jasper county and the third in population in Missouri. Carthage, its "seat of justice," was sacked and burned during the war. It has now a population of 8,000, and is surrounded by mineral and agricultural resources which are being rapidly developed. Its type of society is Northern; its historical politics, Republican; its sentiment, prohibition; and its last vote was pronounced and emphatic by 352 majority against high license, low license or license of any kind. It has eight conspicuous houses of worship, and most shades of religious opinion have representatives here. The W. C. T. U. has two bands that as usual are doing most effective work and are cordially supported by the evangelical clergy of the city. Carthage Collegiate Institute has a fine structure nearly completed. The principal thoroughfares are broad and neatly kept, and well lighted with electric lights and gas at night. Street cars furnish cheap transit from the depots to remotest points in the city, while two railroads connect this with the great centers of trade East, West, North and South. Two woolen mills run one hundred looms and give employment to about that number of hands. Four flouring mills average about seven hundred barrels each day. Two foundries are running with full force. Limestone is abundant along the banks of Spring river that drains the city. Fruit is abundant, and when properly cultivated, is of superior quality. It has become one of the prominent sources of wealth that is accumulating here. Rev. John Glassford ("mine host") took from his trees 7,300 bushels of apples and five hundred of pears this season, beside small fruits; for all of which he found ready sale at a fair price, and is planning for still further enlargement of his orchards.

The above will give our friends some idea of the present and prospective importance of this region and I am sure every one will be glad to learn that this town at least is comparatively free from lodge domination. The Odd-fellows maintain an organization here, but it is not known that the Masons hold lodge in the place. Bro. Glassford was the third man who pitched his tent here under reconstruction and his influence and voice has been constantly against the secret lodge system. He was "entered, passed and raised" in Waverly, Iowa, in 1858. He was disgusted with the performance and did not hesitate to say so. When threatened he asserted his freedom and manhood, and though often denounced, he kept steadily on, speaking his sentiments, and when occasion seemed to call for it, worked the blue lodge degrees publicly. To him more than any other one is due the present condition and sentiment of this community on the secret lodge system, and he feels much encouraged by the present prospect.

10 P. M.—The audience was much larger in the opera house this than last evening. Bro. Butler spoke one hour and a half on Masonic Government, and I followed with a few remarks in the same line. I am now waiting for a north-bound train to Olathe.

HOWE INSTITUTE OPENED IN NEW IBERIA.

OTHER NOTES OF WORK AND TRAVEL FROM THE N. C. A. AGENT IN THE SOUTH.

NEW IBERIA, La., Nov. 1, 1887.

From New Orleans I came to New Iberia by daylight. For one hundred miles west of the city there is a succession of marshy prairies and cypress swamps, with a few fine plantations of sugar-cane and rice and some unimportant towns. Not till we passed Morgan City was there any large tracts of good land. If these vast regions of Southern Louisiana could be drained it would add immensely to the wealth of the State. South and west of Bayou Teche is prairie country sufficiently dry for cultivation and with a soil of great natural fertility. It is the great sugar region of the State, though cotton is also cultivated to a considerable extent. A magnificent crop of cane is being harvested and made into sugar and molasses.

I met Bro. Gunner at the depot. He was just starting to fill an appointment at a mission twelve miles away, but I was kindly received and entertained at his hospitable home. On the next day (Sabbath the 30th) I preached twice to his people, both morning and at night, and taught a class in the Sabbath-school. I was impressed with the earnest and intelligent piety of the people, and am sure they have greatly prospered under so able and judicious a pastor.

Monday morning I attended the opening of Howe Institute. The building has been thoroughly repaired, though the painting was not quite finished. The school opens auspiciously under the care of Prof. Y. Clipper, a graduate of Straight University, and Miss Sarah M. Farley, to whose indefatigable labors is largely due the success that has attended this enterprise. Other teachers are expected soon, and the outlook is very favorable.

Last night I spoke in Bro. Gunner's church on the secret lodge system, to a good audience, who were nearly all in sympathy with my views. An alarm of fire somewhat disturbed us, but the meeting was a success. There are in this church quite a number who have been members of the lodge, and who now strongly oppose the whole system. Some members of the church belong to the Knights of Labor, otherwise none have lodge connections. It is hoped and believed that they will speedily purge out this leaven of evil, and be a light in the midst of the abounding darkness.

The people throughout the southern part of Louisiana are largely of French origin. The French language and the Roman Catholic religion prevails extensively. These have left their impress on that entire State. It is a remarkable fact that while the inter-marriage of the races is strictly prohibited by every other Southern State, it always has been and still is tolerated by law in Louisiana. Nor do such marriages call forth any social protest, unless a colored man should marry a white woman. Six such marriages have recently taken place between white men and colored women with whom they had long been living in concubinage, a practice that extensively prevails. I am glad to be able to say that the persons thus united became convinced of the wretchedness of the former lives, and desired to make the best possible reparation to their children, to the church to which they belonged, and to society.

"All Saints Day" is everywhere celebrated. At New Iberia the whole day was spent in visiting and decorating the graves of the Catholic Cemetery, and late in the afternoon the priest conducted religious services in the French language. Candles were kept burning during the day and night over most of the graves.

Southeast of New Iberia about ten miles are the Army Salt Mines, one of the greatest wonders of America. A high plateau of several miles in extent, but cut by ravines and valleys, rises up out of the prairie. It is called an island, but there are only small bayous around it. These are salt and abound in crabs and other salt-water fish. Near the center of this island is an immense deposit of pure, solid crystallized salt. It has been bored to the depth of five hundred feet with no diminution of quantity or purity. It commences about five or six feet below the surface, and none can tell how wide is the breadth of the deposit. I went down to the lower chamber, 175 feet below the surface. Here was a cavern of solid salt. The roof averaged about fifteen feet in hight, and tram-ways led out in four ways from the central shaft. They were in one of the chambers blasting with dynamite cartridges, two of which were exploded while we were below. Great masses of salt were thrown down weighing several tons. There was ample ventilation and light and the work went on rapidly. A perceptible saline odor was in the air, and affected the nostrils and eyes, but not so much as in the grinding room above. There is a much larger chamber 100 feet from the surface, with walls thirty feet high and galleries more extended. This we did not visit. Over 300 tons are shipped daily, much of it in large cubic blocks, some in coarse salt, while much is ground to different degrees of fineness. The little stream which runs away from the mill is saturated brine, and the ground is strewn in all directions with salt crystals that look like coarse, white gravel. A railroad to New Iberia takes one loaded train a day, and the cars seemed to be from all parts of the country. How such a vast deposit could have been formed and preserved is something for geologists to decide. It seems practically inexhaustible, and will continue to be a source of great wealth.

We reached New Iberia in time to take the train for Lafayette, twenty miles west. As we went west the prairie seemed to be more elevated and more devoted to cotton, though sugar plantations are frequent, and the work of harvesting both cane and cotton is being pushed. Sugar-making goes on both night and day. Lafayette is essentially a Creole town, even more than New Iberia. It has about 2,000 inhabitants and seven fine hotels. Roman Catholics are largely in the ascendency. There are but two white Protestant churches, Presbyterian and Southern Methodist. Both are small. There are three colored congregations, Baptist, M. E. and C. M. E. churches. A talk with the pastors revealed the usual state of things. They had all joined some of the "orders," and all were satisfied with their mischievous character. The great pressure of sugar-making, which keeps most of the laboring men employed night and day, prevents the holding of evening meetings during the week. For this reason I have concluded to return to New Orleans and go farther North.

I spent the Sabbath at New Iberia and preached in the morning for Bro. Gunner. It was a communion season and seven members were received into the church on their profession of faith. It was an occasion of deep interest. In the afternoon I attended a meeting of the New Iberia Moral Reform League. This is a movement started by the colored pastors and others with the object of promoting social purity and saving the youth from the prevalent vices of the land. The meeting was conducted with great dignity and propriety. A constitution was adopted and most able and excellent remarks were made by Bro. Gunner and others. At night I preached to a full house in the Baptist church, Rev. Livingston, pastor. This brother, having seen the inside of the lodge, fully endorses our reform. It is only a question of time when he will carry his church with him. Howe Institute is progressing favorably under the care of Prof. Clipper and Miss S. A. Farley. They expect other teachers soon. The school will do a great and most important work. I go this morning, amidst a heavy rain, to New Orleans.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LECTURE NOTES FROM SOUTHEASTERN NEW YORK.

Walton, N. Y., Nov. 8, 1887.

Last Sabbath I preached in the Reformed Presbyterian church of Walton, New York, Rev. S. G. Shaw, pastor. This was the charge of Prof. D. McAllister, L.L. D., of Pittsburgh, for sixteen years. It is like carrying coals to New Castle to come here with National Reform. The Dr. held the banner so high and displayed it so faithfully that all have seen it. The editor of the Reporter, a local paper, has very kindly consented to open his columns for the movement, and accordingly I have written an article setting forth the principles and objects of the Association. The editor of the Chronicle very generously made the same offer, which is gladly accepted. On Monday evening I spoke at a prohibition meeting on the "Basis of Moral Reforms." This was on the eve of election and a large crowd turned out. On Wednesday evening I lectured in the village hall on the "Moral Responsibility of Nations." Our cause received a very good hearing in this place.

Walton is a village of 2,000, nestled among the great hills of Delaware county. Its cozy dwellings, wide streets, pavements of flagging and large yards make it an inviting place, and the large-hearted people and their wealth of hospitality make one forget he is a stranger in a strange land.

Let me give a bit of experience. I arrived in Sidney, twenty-three miles from here, Saturday night at seven o'clock. Our train had been delayed by a wreck and was late. The train for this place had left Sidney just ten minutes before. There was no other train until three o'clock Sabbath morning. I do not believe in using the Sunday trains, and could not wait for that. A young man, Mr. D. R. Fosbury, agreed to drive me down for $5. In fifteen minutes we were on the way. It took four hours and it was very cold. But we got here, and the driver returned to North Walton, where he stayed with a cousin till morning, intending to go with them to church Sabbath morning. I would rather lose $5 and be chilled through than use these Sunday trains.

On Thursday evening I lecture in Bovina. This is Rev. O. B. Milligan's charge. This young brother, like his father, the late Dr. A. M. Milligan, is in striking contrast to the mild and affable pastor in Walton. Clocks strike; watches must be consulted. Rev. Joseph Parker of London spoke in Cincinnati last Friday night on "Clocks and Watches." Men differ, he said, in movement, like wheels of a watch. "Men are of different styles; but, like time-pieces, they are all set to do the same kind of work—to fulfill the truth. Clocks strike—some in one tone, some in another—but all tell the same story. Some time-pieces do not strike at all. They must be looked at to learn the time from them. The striking clocks are needed particularly in the dark. In dark periods of the world's history there have always been striking clocks, such as Luther, Lincoln and Gladstone. All time-pieces have to be regulated. There are also regulators among men. They, too, are regulated by the sun. So all men must look to the source of light—to the source of truth. All persons, all churches, all creeds, must be regulated from the same source, and all tell the truth in their own particular place."

On Friday evening I expect to lecture in Syracuse, if Bro. Wallace succeeds in arranging for it. During the month of October I preached and lectured thirty-one times, besides twenty-seven short addresses. The receipts amounted to $163. Rev. T. P. Stevenson, D. D., says the ideal National Reformer will make his own way, i. e., his receipts will cover his salary and expenses. For one month we were ideal and a little more.

THE MOTHER OF BRO. COUNTEE PASSES HENCE.

Memphis, Nov. 8, 1887.

Dear Readers of the Cynosure:—Once more, amid the busy scenes of life, I am permitted to write you. Many things have occurred in our city that I feel would have been interesting to you, but the increasing work of my pastoral care, and the increasing demands of the Living Way upon the limited time the Master has allotted me to labor, has caused me very reluctantly to cut off something from my monthly correspondence with you. I have not for one moment ceased to think of you, for I have around me such a cluster of mementoes, as well as a file of Cynosures, that look where I may I am reminded of the friendships that are mine through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and wrought out by the noble Cynosure. I read the Cynosure each week with increasing interest.

Few persons are aware of the deep-seated hatred the lodgites can have in their bosoms against those who are led by the Spirit of God to leave and to denounce their organized infamy; and few have any idea of the venom these people can heap upon one who dares arouse their indignation. For over two years I have been unrelenting in my warfare against the lodge, and all kindred forms of ungodliness in which Christians affiliate with the world of sinners. My cup has been full to the brim, and God only knows the depth of my anxiety. He knows of my sleepless nights, of my days of hunger, of my bitter, bitter tears. Yet I trusted him. I laid all my care upon him, "because he cared for me." He knows of my joy amid sorrow, of my strength amid weakness, and of my help in the time of trouble. And now he comes again to prove me, it may be, or to lift my heart higher, as you know we sometimes sink down in the depths lower than the Master would have us. We do not always maintain that degree of holiness we ought, our growth in grace is not always that steady, every-day continual augmentation. He sees us and would lift us higher.

To this end, no doubt, the Master has come, and on last Saturday night, at the hour of 2 A. M., he came and took to himself my aged mother, who had been with me in all my woes. She had scarcely any sickness, and, in fact, none that had necessitated the calling in of the family physician. She retired at 10 P. M., and at 1:30 A. M. she called me from an adjoining room. I hastened to her side, and she was sitting on the side of her bed breathing heavily. She asked for water. I gave it to her: she took the cup and drank, and folding her arms, she said, "Well—Lord Jesus, receive my spirit," and without a sigh she passed out of time into boundless eternity.

The hand of the Lord is here, and he has surely visited us. I realize that it is all right. He has been my joy and my stay, and in this I bow before him and say unto my Lord, Do unto me as seemeth good in thy sight. Our work for the Master is progressing, and I yet ask your prayers, to be kept by the power of God.

HIGH-PLACE WORSHIP.

Fairport, Kansas.

Editor Cynosure:—I am still laboring for the overthrow of all false worship, and am allowed to see considerable results from the labor. Quite a number have withdrawn from all lodge associations, and others have been saved from entering. I am laboring with a tent in the summer and in school houses in winter; and while I do not make a specialty of the lodge worship, I always let my light shine on it as devil worship and absolutely inconsistent with the religion of Jesus, exhorting those entangled to "come out from among them and be separate." At Alton, in Osborne county, which is a perfect devil's seat of lodgery, I made it the special subject one evening and succeeded in getting them wonderfully stirred. The editor of the paper attended the meeting and spouted considerably, and then called on the lodge worshipers in the audience to verify his statements. Then the M. E. preacher, who was a Mason, took a turn at it. I told them to go ahead; it only needed agitation to make the people see the nature of their unfruitful works of darkness.

The next morning an old man who had attended the meeting, and who had been particular to display his Odd-fellow pin the day before, came in and said, "If the editor had only kept still the people would not have believed what you said; but now they will believe the whole of it, and as for me, the lodge has received the last dollar it will ever get from me. That night they threatened to tear down our tent.

While I recognize with you that the lodge worship of to-day is the old Baal worship of Ahab's time revived, I feel more especially my call is against the revived High-place worship of olden times which was the first step which led them down to the Baal worship, and which has its parallel in our denominational worship, destroying the unity of God's people. It was the sin of Jereboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

ODDS AND ENDS FROM A REPORTER'S NOTE-BOOK.

STREATOR, Illinois.

At the corner of one of the gin mills in this saloon-cursed town is this sign in large letters: "WANTED—5,000 men to unload schooners." The whisky-blinded youths who are induced to enter the groggery, perhaps never stop to think of the awful significance of the sign. "Unloading schooners," indeed! What awful cargoes they at times contain; how heavily are they freighted with blasted hopes, with ruined homes, with wasted and degraded manhood. Truly, a "schooner" of beer is a small vessel, but many of the brightest specimens of American manhood are sailing straight to perdition on that sort of a craft, and that, too, at a speed that leaves even the victorious Volunteer away in the distance. This should not interfere with our pressing this fact upon them.

And yet young men are encouraged in this course of conduct by the weak-kneed advocates of temperance who "are heartily in favor of temperance, but who don't see how we are to get rid of the evil." These weak brethren preface every statement they make in favor of temperance by an unmanly whine about the great power of the liquor traffic. You might as well put a mustard plaster on a bald head to cure heart disease as to expect any active aid from such as these in the suppression of the liquor traffic.

By the way, it is from the ranks of these people that the liquor traffic secures its most powerful allies, the "regulators," who want to control(?) the business by legalizing it. "Regulate it." "Keep it confined within certain limits." "Regulate," indeed! It seems like a dream to me that "once upon a time" a dark shadow of evil rested over this nation. Good men cried out against it and denounced it. Then the statesmen and politicians tried their hand at "regulating" it. They drew a chalk-mark of legislation across the map of the United States and decreed that south of that line the evil should be undisturbed, but north of it it must not set its foot. The older readers of the Cynosure will remember how the "regulation" worked in that case. The chalk-mark was washed out by a sea of blood, and the evil was overthrown and destroyed.

I have noted also in connection with that little event that every old, white-haired citizen I meet now was an Abolitionist "before the war." I would be the last one to doubt their word; but I have often wondered where the opposition came from if they were all the unflinching advocates of right they now claim to have been. But history is repeating itself, and it is only a question of time when the legalized liquor traffic will, as was the slavery question, be wrapped up in a constitutional amendment and shoved back upon the top shelf of history. When that time comes the man who has been on the "other side" will be in a terrible fix. He will either be so ashamed of himself that he won't dare show himself on the street or else he will have to do an enormous amount of lying to keep up his reputation. The trouble is that many of the very people who ought to be thoroughly alive to this question—our Christian people—have allowed themselves to drift into a state of hopeless, helpless imbecility, a state of lazy, selfish, utter and complete indifference. The matter has not as yet come home to them personally and pointedly.

For instance, some Christian young lady reads of the fearful slaughter of birds for the sake of their plumage. Then she lays down the book or paper and goes down town and straightway falls in love with a bonnet, so covered over with plumes that it looks like an inanimate zoological garden. "Perfectly heartless," says the unthinking observer. But just let a poor little English sparrow that isn't worth two pins flutter down at her feet with a broken wing and how changed is her attitude! How tenderly will she care for the poor mute sufferer! One little agonized flutter of that maimed wing strikes with a thousandfold more force upon her heart-strings than all the dry statistics that were ver compiled. Just so with this temperance question. Well-fed, well-dressed Christian people sit in comfortable pews and listen to able speakers depicting the fearful ravages of drink. But somehow it does not seem to get down deep into their hearts. What is that vast army of 100,000 annually slain by drink to them? Merely a little straight mark followed by a row of ciphers. But if the "one" that gives that row of ciphers their awful significance was "some one" near and dear to them, what a difference it would make! So I have about concluded that it is a waste of temperance ammunition to fire statistics into a Christian community with any hope of arousing them to active work. Their consciences, not their intellects need to be awakened.

WILL H. MILLER.

INTELLECTUAL AND MORAL STUPIDITY.

HIAWATHA, Kans.

The good work is gaining all the while. The people are being educated to think more independently on reform work and to feel that secrecy is evidence of wrong doing. The amount of gross ignorance of some of our loud-mouthed opponents on this subject is wonderful. In talking to an Odd-fellow recently, he said, "The Bible was full of Odd-fellowship. If you will read the 2nd chapter of Genesis and the 4th chapter of Fith-ellonians you will find Odd-fellowship taught in unmistakable language," etc. When told that no such Book as Fithellonians was found in the Bible, he was not able to make the correction, not knowing the correct names of the books of the New Testament. He then said that "Paul taught the doctrine of the order to the children of Israel when he led them through the desert!" When I told him that Paul did not live till thousands of years after the exodus of the children of Israel from Egypt, he seemed confused and said it was Moses. he believed.

At this point in the conversation a Mason who was present began to inquire of me how old Masonry was. I said, "The first lodge of speculative Masonry was formed in 1717 in Appletree Tavern, Covent Garden, London."

"No," said he, "Masonry was originated at the confusion of languages at the laying of the corner stone of Solomon's temple!" "O, tempora! O, mores!" What could I do better than to retreat from the field, vanquished before such crushing arguments! Verily, such mental and moral darkness is seldom found even in heathen lands. I should have said that said Odd-fellow is a member in a Protestant church and sometimes leads in the weekly prayer meeting, and boasts of contributing to send charities to the heathen!

When the startling news came of Mr. Finch's death, I felt that it was an interposition of God to save the Prohibition party from disruption. I have seen, or thought I saw, the movement ahead to place Mr. Finch in nomination at the head of the ticket for the Presidency, and I knew that in such a case there must be division. Startling as his death was to us all, still let us all feel to realize that "God moves in a mysterious way," and let us hope and pray that our standard bearer for '88 may be a man true and tried, and one who is free from lodge entanglements. Yours for the cause,

PITH AND POINT.

A CHEERING LETTER FROM A RICHMOND PASTOR.

I wish to let you know how much I admire your paper, and how thankful I am for the kindness shown in sending it to me. I have not been able to make any contribution, but hope to soon. Bro. Hinman was to see me and also preached for me. I am in sympathy with the great reform movement and do recognize the obligation I am under as a minister to do all I can in aiding this grand and noble work. All evils that afflict mankind and all institutions that are opposed to Christ, and therefore to Christianity, should meet the just condemnation, especially of the pulpit and of the religious press. I bid you God speed. May the seed that is sown from time to time, bring an abundant harvest.—J. WHEELER, pastor of the Leigh Street M. E. Church.

THE TWO KINDS OF LIGHT!

What can better convey this fact than the light of the world, Christianity, ordered to be everywhere freely and openly taught to every person; and the light which is everywhere hidden under the bushel, quart and pint measures of lodgery! "Men do not light a candle to hide it under a bushel," said the Lord Jesus Christ. "Oh, yes they do," says Freemasonry. "If you walk into my lodge, I'll bind up your eyes, make you take my oaths, and you shall be glad to see my light when I take your hoodwink off!" If Christians by pure lives and good works are "the light of the world," as the Son of God said, what are those who prefer different lights, and another gospel with its false teachers and false Christs and the offer of a Christless grand lodge above instead of the heaven with Christ and his redeemed forever.—T. BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX.—Nov. 27.—Jesus and the Sabbath.—Matt. 12: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—It is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days.—Matt. 12: 12.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The True End of the Sabbath. vs. 1-9. These sticklers for the law "devoured widow's houses," perverted judgment, and were apologists and defenders of the grossest immorality, just as many who are very orthodox in their religious belief defend the evils of our own day. To license the rum traffic is to do just what these Pharisees did. It is to lend one's vote and influence to perpetuating the worst kind of oppression, to breaking the hearts of widows and orphans, as well as robbing them of their earthly goods. It is to do even worse. The greatest sins against social purity follow in the wake of the saloon. The drink curse is at the bottom of the many blighted lives which go down in starless night after their brief career of vice in our large towns and cities. It stands in the way when tender hands would lift these wanderers up and restore them to paths of happiness and virtue. Before we condemn these Pharisees for their hypocrisy, let us be sure that our own garments are clean from their sin. The lesson our Saviour would have us learn is this: that the Sabbath is his day, he is Lord of it, and service for him is always Sabbath service, whether it be the work demanded by our own bodily needs like that of the disciples plucking the ears of corn, or ministering to the wants of others. It is mercy he requires and not sacrifice—not the mere tithing of anise and mint and cummin, but the weightier matters of the law, love to God, and obedience to that other great command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

2. The Test of Hypocrisy. vs. 10–14. It is impossible for hypocrisy to always keep the veil on. In some act or word it is sure to reveal its true nature, and our Saviour's scathing answer to their question, "How much is a man better than a sheep," convicts them at once of that selfishness which is at the root of hypocrisy. They would lift a sheep from the pit where it had fallen, on the Sabbath day, not from any humane feeling but because they did not want to lose their property. It used to be England's national disgrace that the life of a rabbit or a deer was held by the law as of more value than the life of a man, and it is equally to America's discredit that stringent laws are passed to stamp out cattle infection while the saloon plague is allowed to scatter the germs of moral and physical death all over the land. Many say it is not fitting to discuss reform subjects on the Sabbath day, and that every question which trenches on politics, as indeed almost all our great moral questions do, should be carefully excluded from the pulpit. They stand just where these Pharisees stood. The Sabbath day is of all days the most fitting on which to break off fetters, whether they are the fetters of sin or of false opinion. It is always lawful to do well on the Sabbath days, and any subject for which a text can be found in God's Word is fit to preach upon on that day. What day more fitting than the Lord's day on which to show the sin of false worships and break the fetters of the lodge captive. The conduct of the Pharisees in seeking to destroy Christ after he had healed the paralytic was another test of their true spirit. Hypocrisy is a wolf. Unmask it, and we find the wolf's fangs and the wolf's heart.

PRACTICAL.

1. Vers. 1-8. Jesus always obeyed God's law of righteousness, but he rebuked and opposed the false theories and interpretations with which men distorted and neutralized the truth.

2. Jesus refrained from doing some things he had a right to do, and which he defended as right, lest his enemies should gain an advantage over him. He did not himself pluck the ears of corn, nor did he do anything to the man with a withered hand, except by speaking.

3. Jesus did not abolish the Sabbath; he only restored it to its true place and purpose.

4. An intolerant and censorious spirit in religion is one of the greatest curses a man can well fall under.—A. Clarke.

5. The object for which any institution was created is greater than the institution was created to accomplish it.

6. No ceremonial exactness or observance of forms will compensate for the absence of the right spirit.

7. The Sabbath is made for man; that is, for the whole man, not for his body alone. A religious observance of the Sabbath best rests the body, cultures the mind with the grandest thoughts on the noblest themes, and exalts and comforts the soul, and fits it for heaven.

8. The Sabbath should be made a joy, especially to children, and its very method of keeping should be such as to impress its delight upon them.

9. The Sabbath was made for all men, and we have no right to so spend the Sabbath as to deprive others of its privileges.

10. Vers. 10–13. The Sabbath should be a day of doing good to the bodies and souls of men.

11. With the word of command here, as in others of Christ's miracles (Matt. 9: 6; John 5: 8, etc.), comes power to obey it. So he requires what are impossibilities of withered souls, but with the command imparts power to fulfil (John 1: 12).—Abbott.

12. Ver. 14. Those whose lives and interests are bound up with false doctrines and wrong practices hate those who seek reform and proclaim the truth.

LETTERS FROM THE ALPS.

[To a friend.]

A Tyrolese mansion and the household devotions—Fashions in the Alps—Three kingdoms a day—The highest hotel in Europe and a venturesome journey to it—Italian speculation—Glimpses of Switzerland—Thorwaldsen's memorial to the Swiss Guard of 1792—The dangers of Zug—and of German doctors.

PRAED, Tyrol.

Since my last writing we have been to Bruneck in the Pulsterthal, and I have made a sketch of the old house where Mrs. L. spent all her summers during the seven or eight years she was in Italy and Germany. The owner of the house, a peasant, but very well educated, was delighted to see an acquaintance of Mrs. L.'s, and she seems to have been a great favorite with all the people there. The house is an immense, great stone building, partly plastered outside and painted pink, and has windows of tiny panes protected by iron gratings. In the yard are stone seats which have been there two hundred years, at least, and some very large trees, I suppose centuries old. Inside the house is a little chapel, where is some beautiful wood carving and several rare paintings. The head of the house has prayers there with his servants every evening. It is, everywhere in this vicinity, the custom among the Catholics to have evening prayers after supper, but the way they do it seems rather absurd. The prayers are repeated by rote and in unison. Meanwhile the whole company is on their knees, but several heads are probably outside the window and occupied with whatever is passing there, and the remainder are amusing themselves in various ways.

We staid one night with a peasant woman whom Mrs. L. had as maid, and wanted me to see. This woman had the first real costume I have seen in the Tyrol, a very pretty one which was her mother's at the time she married. I had supposed that the peasant's costumes were light and comfortable to wear; I wish you could only lift the skirt of this one! There were twelve yards of heavy woolen material besides the lining, and over this an apron of homespun linen weighing several pounds more. Miss E. is slender, but in that costume any one could think she would weigh three hundred pounds. It is so with nearly all the costumes, I am told. These are worse than the dress of the most fashionable ladies, as far as concerns health, and I do not wonder that the people will not wear them longer. Only Sundays and holidays is any one in costume to be found; even then it is seldom.

We are going from here the nearest way into Switzerland, and I suppose will be on the border tomorrow evening at this time. We are going over a mountain which I understand lies partly in Austria, partly in Italy, and ends in Switzerland. For three or four hours we will very likely be in Italy. From here we have a very good view of several glaciers, and will to-morrow go across the foot of one. The mountain in "Stilfser Joch." I forgot to say that around Meran we saw figs and pomegranites growing, and quantities of the large chestnuts sold here. We have had the first fruit in a month the last two days.

LUCERNE, SWITZERLAND.—If I remember right, I wrote last from Praed in the Tyrol. Since that we have been over "Stilfser Joch" into Switzerland, and were, on the way, over night in Italy; where we were nearly frozen, saw a snowstorm, September first, and slept under four heavy blankets. The hotel where we spent the night is the highest inhabited place in Europe, 7,605 feet above the sea. I sketched a glacier and nearly blew away in the process. You would be surprised to hear what flowers we found the highest—our garden monkshood or larkspur, after no other blossom except a sort of this was to be found in the region. We were a little belated on our way over "Stilfser Joch," and in consequence were precisely on the highest point, 8,488 feet, at nine o'clock with the full moon shining its highest. I do not think it often happens that any one gets a view by moonlight of such a place. I certainly would not advise anybody to make an evening expedition at such a height; and we were very fortunate in not having gone alone, for the thermometer must have stood near zero, the wind blew a gale, and when we arrived at the hotel it was nearly an hour before we could rouse any one. A lady who was with us began to have palpitation of the heart as soon as we came into the higher air, and had to be carried or led the last two hours; that is why we came so late.

As we came over the border the prices on everything doubled immediately. In the Tyrol everything is very reasonable, and the food exceedingly good, but here nothing is well made, and the waiters and hotel people are not at all agreeable.

We were yesterday in Coin and to-day in Zurich, coming this evening to Lucerne, where we have of course seen nothing yet. I had hoped we would get as far as Berne, but think we will not manage it, for the hotel bills are too large, and besides we must both be back in Munich by Monday. So far the Swiss scenery is, to me at least, not what I had expected. I think our own Rocky mountains must be much grander.

MUNICH.—....We had very good weather nearly all the way, only in Lucerne it was foggy over the mountains so that we never had a good, clear view of the lake, though several times we saw nearly to the top of the "Jung-frau." What interested me most there was Thorwaldsen's great lion, hewn in the solid rock, and the "glacier garden." The lion is immense, and lies in a cavity cut out of the hill of rock behind Lucerne. Before it is a little lake with swans upon it, and altogether it makes a very strong impression. All over Lucerne are pictures, carvings, and casts of the famous lion, until I should think any one remaining there would get tired to death of the bad, good and indifferent representations. The "glacier garden" is an acre or more of bare rock, which was formerly under a glacier and shows the effect of its action. Where stones were between the ice and the rock underneath there are great, round cavities, like huge bowls, some of which are twenty-five feet in diameter and more than that in depth. The spiral is yet quite plainly to be seen where the smaller stone (the mill-stone, it is called) wore the other away.

From Lucerne we went across the lake to Kassnacht, celebrated from its associations with William Tell's adventures. It is a little place with quaint old houses. From there we walked through the "Hollow way," where Tell shot the tyrant Gessler, to Tell's chapel, and to a village on Zuger Sea, from which we took a boat to Zug, and went from there by rail to Zurich.

I presume you read how a part of Zug suddenly "caved in" and fell into the lake last summer. When we were there they were still fishing for valuable articles in the lake above the ruins. We saw a part of a house and considerable furniture recovered. The other houses in the vicinity are all deserted, and it is altogether a desolate looking place. It seems remarkable that only eleven lives were lost.

After the journey back to Munich I was sick again, as usual, after a long railroad trip. I had to visit a German doctor who gave me medicine that made me so entirely sick that I was several days in bed, and even the Germans had to allow that their medicines did not agree with me. They all imagine that we Americans are sick because we are not so red as they are. They think their doctors can cure anything, but they don't say any more to me since I made the experiment. R.

—Professor Harper has this year conducted summer schools of Hebrew at Philadelphia, Chicago, Newton Center, Mass., the University of Virginia, and Evanston, Ill. His work at Yale University is most successful. President Dwight is reported as saying: "Young Harper and his classes have done more to popularize the study of Hebrew in this country than all the schools and the theologians who have preceded him."

—Mr. George W. Cable has conducted the great Tremont Temple teachers' meeting for a month, and has demonstrated his ability to succeed. He is a very different man from his predecessor, Dr. Meredith. His methods are different; his spirit is different. Each man, however, has something which the other lacks. Dr. Meredith certainly made the class a brilliant success, bringing it up out of littleness and obscurity into proportions unequalled. His fitness for such work is of a very high order. But I venture to say that Mr. Cable's fitness, although so different, is no less high. In some respects I think he may even excel Dr. Meredith. His spiritual insight, for instance, is of a rare quality. He sounds depths in Scripture that surprise and delight you. He has also great originality and independence. He sets tradition at naught. He tramples on conventionality. He sees with his own eyes, thinks with his own mind, and decides with his own judgment. You may not always accept his view, but you none the less respect it, because it represents honest and earnest thinking. I can see that from week to week he is winning the class by his kindness of heart and suavity of manner, that he is drawing larger and larger audiences, and that he is surely and permanently mastering the difficult situation. He is not filling Dr. Meredith's place, nor is he "rattling 'round in it," nor trying to, but is making a place for himself of his own peculiar kind, a large place, too, a useful place, and a unique place which none but himself will be able to fill.—Cor. Christian Standard.

LITERATURE.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Edited by W. G. Clark and W. A. Wright. In twelve volumes. Vols. IX to XII. Price for the set, $6.00. John B. Alden, New York.

The completion of this handy volume series of Shakespeare is a boon to all who admire the beauties of this great author, but who abhor the bulky volumes or the fine print, which either weary the holder or injure the sight. The print is large, the binding neat and serviceable, and the volumes of convenient size. Book buyers may be congratulated on this result of Mr. Alden's enterprise. Few publishers would have ventured to sell at such a price, but the whole is in keeping with the literary revolution affecting the price of books which he has inaugurated.

"ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language. Vol, II. America to Artemis. Pp. 632. John B. Alden, New York.

It is the purpose of the compiler of this work to combine the characteristics of both cyclopedia and dictionary, and the plan is happily succeeding, and in the end will be a great and useful work, well suited for the ordinary household, where bulky volumes are seldom used by the children, who should most be using them, because of their weight, or soon go to pieces with a few falls. It is a great and beneficent enterprise if the children alone are considered, as by means of these handy volumes their facilities for a thorough understanding of many subjects are wonderfully facilitated. The publisher offers to forward the whole set as each volume appears for the wonderful price of $8.30 if received by him on or before November 20, 1887.

THE HAPPY SINGER, for revival, camp tent and social meetings and the Sabbath School. By C. E. Rowley.

This is a compilation of gospel songs much resembling the familiar "Moody and Sankey" book, which have been received with great favor wherever sung by Bro. Rowley and his wife. At the late Wesleyan General Conference they rendered great service in the devotional meetings. Its author was for a time associated with Bro. Doty of the Christian Harvester, Cleveland, and later with Rev. S. Rice in the Holiness Conservator. If we were to criticise anything in this collection, which seems to be one of much merit, it is in following too much after the fashion—that is, adding to every verse of good hymns a chorus of repetitions. It is time we left such things pretty much to the nursery. How would it sound in reading the description of the New Jerusalem we should repeat the words, "over there," half a dozen times after each verse. We are not commanded to lay aside our good sense in singing any more than in reading.

With its November issue Babyhood completes its third year and volume. From the first number it has been a pronounced success, winning praises alike from press and subscribers. There is not a home in the land, blessed with small children, but would be made happier and better for its monthly visits. With the November number is given an index of the volume just closed, embracing more than 1,000 topics. We have first editorial notes, brief and to the point, on such subjects as ear-boxing, early drawings, diphtheria, watered milk, and the evolution of nursery sciences. Then follow articles on the "Contagious Diseases of Children," "Bumps and Bruises," "First Attempts at Art," "Proposed Training School for Nursery-maids," "School Lunches," etc.

Now that the committee of eminent and philanthropic Englishmen are visiting our country in the interests of peaceful arbitration, and President Cleveland has given them an attentive hearing, it is a good time to circulate documents in behalf of peace. An excellent tract is an "Address of the Representatives of the Religious Society of Friends for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, to their Fellow Citizens on the Subject of War." Copies may be had for gratuitous circulation by writing to Jacob Smedley, Friend's Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

The Evangelical Lutheran Almanac for 1888, edited by Pastor D. Simon, English Secretary of the Joint Synod of Ohio of the Evangelical Lutheran church, and published by the Book Concern of the Synod at Columbus, is just issued. It contains a very comprehensive and complete survey of the Lutheran church in its various Councils and Synods with their institutions of learning, ministerial lists, teachers, hospitals, homes for orphans and the poor, etc., being altogether a valuable reference work for the church. Price 10 cents each.

A THOUSAND "CYNOSURES" FOR THE SOUTH.

It is but seven years since our reform began to take root in the South. The first efforts sprang from a movement to divorce missions from the secret lodge, which was aided by the Cynosure, but in which the N. C. A., as a body, at first took no special part. Bro. H. H. Hinman spent about a year in this work and was supported by special contributions for the purpose, when his salary was assured by the Association, and Rev. P. S. Feemster engaged for a time to assist him. A demand for the circulation of the Cynosure arose in connection with these efforts, and was fostered and encouraged greatly by Dr. J. E. Roy, then Southern secretary of the American Missionary Association.

Since June 1, 1885, up to the present time a little over $900 have been contributed to send copies of the Cynosure to colored pastors in the South, or an average of less than $450 per annum. The results of this circulation of the paper have been wonderful. They are—

1. Reports from pastors in all parts of the South, thankfully acknowledging the aid thus given them to overcome the pestilent lodge influence in their churches.

2. The formation of the Good-Will Association of some twenty-five Baptist churches in and about Mobile which forbids secret societies.

3. The sustaining of Rev. R. N. Countee in his seceding from the lodge, and maintaining his paper and church until many Baptist churches and pastors of Tennessee and Arkansas are standing by him.

4. The action of the St. Marion Baptist Association of Arkansas to expel the lodge from their churches.

5. Similar action of the State Baptist Convention of Louisiana, comprising all the churches of that denomination in the State.

6. The condition of the Texas Baptist Convention which is nearly ready for the same action.

7. The founding of schools for the higher education of the colored children in New Iberia, La., and Memphis, Tenn., on the distinctive principle of opposition to secretism.

THIS GRAND WORK

has been accomplished not without the aid of brethren Hinman, Feemster, Woodsmall and others; but while the living agent or the paper could neither alone have achieved so magnificent results, the circulation of the Cynosure has been the great agency, and at the same time the least expensive. It has often been the pioneer, reaching sections where no agent has penetrated, and after his departure keeping alive the fire of reform.

In view of these facts we conceive it to be a duty to call upon the friends of this cause everywhere for means to send A THOUSAND COPIES of the Cynosure for a year to as many pastors in the South, especially the colored Baptists, that the good work now well begun among them may reach to every one of the 800,000 colored members of their churches. The Congregational churches supported by the A. M. A. are already taking the ground of separation from the lodge, under advice from the secretaries of their Association. With these churches saved to Christ from the lodge curse, and the Baptists brought up to the same line, what may not our faith ask for in this respect for the Negro race? An earnest, faithful pushing of our work may, in a few years, redeem them wholly. What more noble object now invites our aid; and to attain it what means more economical, more sure and more convenient can possibly exist than scattering a thousand copies of the Cynosure? If $900 spent in this way can show such results, $1,500 would double them. Let, therefore, every friend of the reform make an effort to contribute to this fund and share in the blessing and triumph which must follow.

A number have already been asked to each make one of a hundred to complete this fund before January, 1888. The reasons for this investment are so convincing that not one has refused. Why should not these hundred shares be immediately taken? If one person cannot assume so much alone, let clubs of two, three, five, or ten make them up. The N. C. A. Board has given its hearty endorsement of the plan; and the friends of reform and of the Negro race, now toiling under this second bondage, have only to know of it, to send back an echo, saying, THE WORK SHALL BE DONE.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1887.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MIDDLEBURY, Vt., Nov. 8th, 1887.

One year more will be sixty years since I entered Middlebury College. The good Dr. Bates was president. Prof. Hough(whom we students called Prof. Johnny) had the ancient languages (modern languages were not taught); Prof. Turner,mathematics; and Henry Smith, since president of Marietta College and Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, was tutor and examined me (much trembling) for a Freshman.

I preached on Sabbath from the pulpit of the sainted,large-souled Dr.Morill,who baptized the most excellent mother of my children and myself,and yesterday I addressed near seventy brilliant young men in the college chapel. I think all Middlebury alumni, all Vermonters, and all others who read this article will be glad it is written, except those whom it censures.

THE SAINTED DEAD.

I cannot say with the wassail poet Moore:

> "I feel like one who treads alone,
> Some banquet hall deserted,
> Whose lamps are dead, whose guests are fled,
> And all but me departed."

But rather with another poet, not yet renowned, as I walk these new streets and look on new faces, familiar,though unknown,

> "Sweet storied scenes swift over memory pass,
> Like shadows, pictured on a sea of glass."

"Are they not all ministering spirits?" Samuel Swift, Peter Starr, Gov. Slade, the modern Socrates, with his wedded Xantippe, now escaped the demons who troubled her,—these then front-rank citizens of this town, with their compeers and associates, were men "of whom the world was not worthy." And while the college taught us to be scholars, these taught us to be men. There were few such towns' populations as Middlebury then held, and their names would fill a long catalogue or a short volume.

THE VERMONT COLLEGES.

Burlington began,leaning on the State,and still retains a tinge from the complexion of her origin. Middlebury leaned on God. One had funds; the other revivals. And though the latter has waded through the slough which successful Christians must have in order to correct their Pharisaism, she has reached,or is reaching the opposite bank,and is coming up. Twenty years ago God sent down from St. Albans a young student from the family tree of Lawrence Brainerd,a stalwart Vermont farmer, who turned a lakeside morass into a thousand-acre farm. And when the lodge frogs of the Apocalypse (Rev. 16:13) who murdered Morgan for telling truth, attempted,but failed to pollute Vermont with their uncleannesses, Lawrence Brainerd's name filled the newspapers as their fearless antagonist, and Vermont went solid, sole and single, for Wirt and open, fair dealing.

The present president of Middlebury is that young St. Albans student, who passed by Burlington on his way to college. When he took the presidency, the college began to rise to its feet. And now, if it had a Western preparatory department, it would stand, numerically, above Marietta, Jacksonville, Knox, Ripon, Iowa, and the other oldest and strongest colleges in the West.

President Brainerd is an eminently sound, successful and practical man; and, though he has given little or no study to the lodge, he has not defiled himself with its Christless devil worships. But the air of Middlebury is hostile to secret meanness, and in the national discussion of the lodge system now approaching a glorious future awaits Middlebury College.

Burlington now receives $3,500 a year from the State legislature for analyzing a little cows' milk, and specimens of soil, after obtaining the princely donation from the U. S. Surplus Revenue: and Congress sends a high Mason four months in the year to teach military tactics to the pious students of Burlington, to hasten the time when men shall not "learn war" any more! But though the spirit of war is anti-Christ, and the lodge is demon-worship,Christianity is gaining in Burlington,and they have some sincerely pious professors who are popular; and statesmen, like Hon. Daniel Roberts, a Middlebury alumnus, may yet help the college to shake off the leprosy of the lodge.

STATESMEN.

The Cynosure has reported Senator Edmunds as a Mason. He does not, however, train with them; and his raid on Mormonism, which was recognized as Masonry by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, is much in his favor. Senator Morrill, in a mountain town east of the mountains, seems to hold his place in the Senate because he has no competitors like Collamer or Phelps. Gov. Stuart of Middlebury, now in the House at Washington, is a strong, sensible man, and no Mason. But his law-partner, a brilliant young lawyer, worships no God in particular, not even the world-god of the lodge. But he, yesterday, argued that though Masons are sworn by secret oaths, which they recognize as binding on them to conceal Masons' crimes and aid to deliver them "right or wrong," that oath does not hurt them for jurors, if they will also swear that they think they can do justice! That is tantamount to saying, that in our late war, though a man might own he had sworn treason, and consider his secesh oath binding, yet that oath would not hurt him as a juror to try rebel criminals who are on trial for murdering Union men! I hope before this lawyer becomes a judge, God will give him a braver heart, better judgment, and freedom from tobacco. But the men who are to rescue our court-houses from sinking into popular contempt, because the cases are so often decided in secret lodges, are now in the colleges.

Women sink less rapidly than men, because they grapple less with the world outside the home; and there are women here now, as there were fifty years ago, whose eyes are not darkened by the hoodwinks which their husbands have worn in the lodge.

URBANITIES.

The last three days are a bright oasis in my life. Hon. Phillip Bartell, of the class of 1826, who married the beautiful Emma Seymour, and who now owns and occupies the old Senator's residence, came yesterday and took President Brainerd and his gifted companion out to ride. Of course I went along. The mysterious dream-mist of the Indian summer "had robed the mountains in its azure hue." But the scene was exquisite beyond language, and the ride delightful. Though an octogenarian, Mr. Bartell has his team so trained that they run, walk, or rest by the slight motion of their owner's hand without a word spoken; and our ride was terminated in social converse and an elegant repast presided over, by Gov. Stuart's daughter, the grand-daughter of Emma Seymour, who reproduces in person the picture of sixty years ago. And here also are the descendants of "the beloved physician" Dr. Jonathan Allen, who befriended bravely the soul and body of the late stately Senator Phelps, (whose son is now our minister to England) when the rum-fiend made a fearless physician needful to him. Dr. Allen's son now presides over Rush Medical College of Chicago; another is a prominent physician in Rutland.

But the time would fail me to speak of the loved ones departed who "all died in faith" here "having received the promises and were persuaded of them." To-day I climb and cross the Green Mountains by steam, and will write from the hills where all my young imaginations were born.

BURLINGTON, VT., Nov. 4.—I spoke in St. Johnsbury night before last for our excellent brother, Rev. W. R. Laird. During the day we called and conversed with Col. Fairbanks, whose father has furnished scales to weigh the commerce of the United States, and as war governor, taught other States by by his example, as did Gov. Andrews of Massachusetts, and quickened them by his zeal. The Colonel joined the Masons when a young man, and assured us he "had nothing to do with them" of late. But the Masons claim him, and report that he went to Scotland to receive a degree which he could not get here; which is doubtless one of the lies on which lodges live. He is talked of as governor, but does not seek office, and is an active Christian and devoted Sabbath-school superintendent.

The beautiful village of St. Johnsbury is really the creation of the genius and taste of the Fairbanks family. We requested him to sign a paper to send to Secretary Strieby, assuring him that if the A. M. A. should divorce their Southern churches from the lodges, it would not diminish the Fairbanks's princely contributions. Col. Fairbanks is not posted enough to take so decided a stand as yet. He, in my opinion, however, would be pleased if the poor colored churches could be rescued from the secret lodge vampires which are silently sucking their life blood.

THE ANARCHISTS.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Nov. 11.—The dispatches just now tell us that four wretches must hang to-day. Lingg, the human rattle-snake, has gone by his own hand; and two go to the dungeon. The country appears dignified and its judiciary august. Millions breathe freer when those anarchists cease to breathe. The secret lodge is the college and these criminals are its pupils. When two oaths are put in a man's conscience, it begins to break down. Twenty-eight make a Mason; and the degrees up to thirty-three each help to exterminate to the roots all sense of divine obligation in the man's moral nature. One thing is as right as another to him then. The churches are now supporting the secret college and the country is hanging its graduates. May God open their eyes in time, before we have a repetition of the war. For if Baal worships will not bring war the Bible is a mistake. But it is not a mistake! J. B.

—During October Bro. Hinman labored in three States, Alabama, Florida, and Louisiana, and lectured twenty-one times.

—After a prolonged and tedious voyage Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes and his family reached Montreal on the 4th inst., and after a few days spent in that city they will go on to New York for the winter. Their many friends in this country will be glad to hear of their safe arrival.

—Pastor J. Meier of the First German Baptist church, corner of Bickerdike and West Huron streets, Chicago, reports his church of 400 members as established in the faith of Christ so firmly and wisely that they all condemn the secret orders and refuse to admit their members to church fellowship until the evil associations are forsaken. He has taken a quantity of German tracts to distribute and wishes a lecture on the subject for his people. This is a regular Baptist church but of German membership.

—Some time since we noticed the interesting fact of the nomination last spring of a local Anti-masonic ticket by the good people of New Haven, Michigan, who were weary of lodge domination. One of the candidates has written Secretary Stoddard of his willingness to engage in lecture work, and is encouraged to begin about his own home, where success may extend his field to a State work. Such local efforts are tokens of greatest encouragement. Would that they might be more often reported.

—The committee appointed by the Board on premium essays by students will have arranged the details of this plan so that it can appear next week. It will be favorably received everywhere, and be the means, no doubt, of saving thousands of our youth from the lodge. The proposition includes prizes of twenty dollars for the best essay, and ten for the next in merit on the two subjects: "Secret Societies and the Labor Problem," and "The Relation of Secret Societies to the Temperance Cause." "The object of the above essays shall be to present the evils resulting from secret societies in the above relations."

—A note mailed from Miss Flagg on the 7th brings the most unwelcome news of the sudden and severe illness of her father. He was attacked on the Saturday previous with an acute brain trouble, the origin of which the best physicians from Boston were not able to locate. The attack was of such severity that at times several attendants were needed to restrain the sufferer. The latest word was hopeful of recovery, but for a few days the anguish of the daughter was great with the dread of parting from the only one left her. The interest and joy of her father in Miss Flagg's noble work for the reform has always been one of her greatest encouragements in it, and our readers will heartily join with us in the prayer that the Lord may restore him to so devoted a daughter.

THE PROHIBITION CONFERENCE

in Chicago, Dec. 1, will be attended by many who object to voting for members of secret lodges. All such are requested to meet for consultation and prayer at 3 o'clock P. M, also at 7 in the evening, on Wednesday, Nov. 30, in Carpenter Hall of the N. C. A. Building, 221 West Madison Street. The room will be open all day and evening for the accommodation of friends visiting Chicago at that time.

THE OHIO CONVENTION

Will be held at New Concord, Muskingum county, November 16th and 17th, opening at 9 A. M of Wednesday, the 16th. Addresses will be given by President Smith, Revs W. A. Coleman and William Dillon, Secretary J. P. Stoddard, State Agent W. B. Stoddard, and the closing address by Pres C. A. Blanchard. Entertainment as usual will be provided for those coming from a distance. It is especially desired that all churches in sympathy appoint at once as large a delegation as they may think best to represent them at this convention. Let the friends come praying for a glorious blessing, that we may go forth stronger for Christ in the future.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Twenty years ago a modest sign on the front of Tremont Temple announced the occupancy of the Boston Young Men's Christian Associatian of a part of that building, whose front was cut up into a number of small offices, as it is now, the Temple proper being located in the rear, and the Meionaon, a smaller hall, immediately beneath it. Five years ago a more conspicuous sign-board denoted its location on the corner of Tremont and Eliot streets. These quarters, though less cramped than those at the Temple, were inadequate for its growing work. It now occupies a magnificent building of its own on Boylston street, corner of Berkeley, one of the most aristocratic parts of the city. The entire edifice is 105 feet front, 100 feet deep, and 105 feet in the highest part. The land cost $97,000; the building, appointments, etc., $203,000; making a total cost of $300,000. Fifty-nine donations toward the payment of this sum, in amounts of from $1,000 to $25,000, footed to $143,000. The building has a large hall which will seat 900, called "Association Hall;" two smaller halls, seating respectively 350 and 200, and a lecture-room seating 250; also parlors, library, reading-room, recreation-room, coal-room, fourteen class-rooms, lavatory and gymnasium, 40x95, with dressing-rooms attached, for 942.

On different evenings of the week the following classes are held for annual members: banking and commercial arithmetic, book-keeping, common-school arithmetic, elocution, free-hand drawing, mechanical drawing, penmanship, short-hand and type-writing, telegraphy, vocal and male chorus music, emergency lectures and physiology, French, German, New Testament Greek and Spanish. The instructors are all first-class—among the best in the country. The additional cost of attending these classes is the price of text-books, etc.

Every Thursday evening during the winter months an entertainment consisting of readings and singing is given to members in "Association Hall." In connection with all these advantages there is a Rambling Club, which takes excursions to manufactories, art galleries, etc. Thanksgiving a dinner is given free to all members unable to reach their own homes, or who have none. Young men of good character, church members or not, can become members on payment of annual membership fee, $2; life membership, $25.

Among all the papers on file in the reading-room, one looks in vain for the clear-cut features of the Cynosure. Hundreds of young men visit this room weekly, and what better reading of a religious nature could they pick up by chance, as they saunter from paper to paper, than the Cynosure. Its very name, so unusual, would be sure to attract their attention for a moment at least, but in that single moment they would become aware of an organized effort to suppress secret societies. And the question would naturally arise in their young and inquisitive minds—why? Why suppress secret societies? Thus their minds might be opened to receive a reason. Alas! however, I am afraid that, Christian institution as it claims to be, it would hardly welcome a journal representing anti-secrecy reform.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

One of the most widely known and popular of Congressmen is the late American minister to Turkey, the Hon. S. S. Cox, of New York, who is known to fame as "Sunset," and as the wit of the House as well. Messrs. Cox and Mills are the only members prominently named for chairman of the ways and means committee of the Fiftieth Congress, but as the New Yorker declines that great honor in advance, the Lone Star statesmen appears to have the field to himself, and will probably attain the distinction to which he aspires. Mr. Cox has just reached the Capital, and he expresses some interesting views upon political and legislative questions—especially the tariff, which he believes will be materially modified this winter by the passage of a compromise measure repealing the tobacco tax and placing a large number of the necessities of life on the free list.

Of contemplated legislation none is of more general interest or importance to the people of the United States than the proposed postal telegraph, which finds many advocates, particularly among those statesmen who were influential in pressing the Inter-State Commerce bill to a successful issue. In fact, it seems that the country's only safe hope and protection against the grasping greed of the grinding telegraph monopoly is Government control of that system of communication. And that it will come sooner or later there is little reason to doubt, unless the lobbyists can raise enough boodle to capture Congress, which I do not believe is purchasable, as a whole, though there are reasons for concluding that some members have their regular prices for votes and influence. If that were not true the occupation of the lobbyists would be gone, and these persuasive individuals would disappear from the corridors of the Capitol.

Other legislation that is needed and will be attempted is a change in both the time of electing Congressmen and the date for the meeting of that body. At present a Congress is chosen thirteen months before it convenes, which is neither in accord with our plan of popular representation, nor with the advanced ideas that dominate and permeate the modern republican system of government. The right way would be to elect Congressmen in November, and have the session begin—not on the first Monday in December, as now,—but on the first Monday in January, following the election,—thus at a single stroke of good policy dispensing with the long interim and the useless holiday adjournment, which latter, coming in two or three weeks after the opening of the session, seems to your correspondent to be largely in the line of a farcical performance for a body of such power and dignity as the national legislative.

There is a good deal of gossip floating around the White House, which those who are well posted claim to have some foundation in fact. It is said that among the first communications that will go from the President to the Senate will be Secretary Lamar's nomination for Supreme Justice, and that Postmaster General Vilas will be appointed to the vacant portfolio, to be succeeded himself by Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan. I merely give these reports for what they are worth, and that may be much or little.

The past week a youthful newspaper correspondent created a great sensation by mailing to Chief Justice Waite a bogus "infernal" machine. At first it was attributed to anarchist sympathizers, but the youth, when confronted with the evidence of his indiscretion, said it was a joke. In the eyes of the law it is a criminal offense. *

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE ELGIN SABBATH CONVENTION.

PROCEEDINGS, ADDRESSES AND PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

The convention called by members of the Elgin Association of Congregational ministers and churches to consider the prevalent desecration of the Sabbath and its remedy, met Tuesday evening, November 8, in the Baptist church, Elgin, Illinois. Rev. W. L. Ferris of Dundee conducted the opening devotional exercises, assisted by Rev. A. N. Alcott of Elgin and the male choir. Different Elgin pastors presided at each sitting in this order: J. M. Clendeming, A. H. Ball, Wm. Craven and H. O Rowlands. Rev. Geo. A. Milton, who has lately taken charge of a church in the city, conducted the opening devotional service on the last evening. All the Elgin pastors were the business committee, and all their people joined hands and hearts to entertain the convention in a royal manner. Rev. John Mitchell of Sycamore was permanent secretary. The important addresses were by Rev. Henry Wilson of Carpenterville, Rev. Drs. W. W. Everts, Mandeville, and S. I. Curtis and Hon. Thomas E. Hill of Chicago, by Pres. C. A. Blanchard and Frank W. Smith.

At the opening of business the secretary, on reading the call for the meeting, said that words of approval and letters had been received from a number of States, and the signatures to the call which had been circulated numbered several thousands.

The opening address by Rev. Henry Wilson on "The Christian and Sabbath Business," was a very able and logical paper, in which he said the Christian of to-day is called upon to decide the following practical questions:

1. How much work shall the followers of Christ compel others to do on the Sabbath? Shall the Christian purchase meat or have it delivered Sabbath morning when he can buy a refrigerator? Shall the milkman deliver milk at the homes of Christians on the Sabbath when the Christians can purchase a double quantity Saturday or use condensed milk? Shall the Christian ride out Sabbath afternoon and so compel men to work in livery stables on that day?

2. Should the Christian give up his employment rather than neglect the means of grace, violate his own conscience, injure his children and the cause of Christ by working on the Sabbath?

THE HOME.

THY LOVING-KINDNESS.

Sitting alone in the shadow
Of a grief that was all my own;
Silently thinking it over,
Silently making moan,
Sudden there swept the music
Of a gladness great and deep,
Over the chords of feeling,
Till my heart forgot to weep.

"Because of thy loving-kindness"—
The word stole into my brain,
Like a cool hand soothing its fever,
And charming away the pain.
Because of thy loving-kindness,
Better than life to me,
My life shall be keyed to the measure
Of praise unchecked and free.

Not always the path is easy;
There are thickets hung with gloom,
There are rough and stony places
Where never the roses bloom.
But oft, when the way is hardest,
I am conscious of One at my side,
Whose hands and whose feet are wounded,
And I'm happy and safe with my Guide.

Better than friends and kindred,
Better than love and rest,
Dearer than hope and triumph,
Is the name I wear on my breast.
I feel my way through the shadows,
With a confident heart and brave,
I shall live in the light beyond them,
I shall conquer death and the grave.

Often when tried and tempted,
Often, ashamed of sin,
That, strong as an armed invader,
Has made wreck of the peace within,
That wonderful loving-kindness,
Patient, and full, and free,
Has stopped for my consolation,
Has brought a blessing to me.

Therefore my lips shall praise Thee,
Therefore, let come what may,
To the height of a solemn gladness
My song shall arise to-day.
Not on the drooping willow
Shall I hang my harp in the land,
When the Lord himself has cheered me
By the touch of his pierced hand.

WHAT AN OUT-OF-THE-WAY TOWN HAS GIVEN TO THE WORLD.

From the Magazine of American History for March we extract the following account of a famous family whose home was in Plainfield, Mass.:

"In the summer of the year 1792 came the young pastor who had been secured for the infant church in Plainfield. He was ordained on the 11th of July. This was the Rev. Moses Hallock, then thirty-two years of age, a graduate from Yale,and a minister, who, in scholarly equipment for his life work and in simplicity and force of character, had few equals and no superior. He and Deacon Richards became the most ardent friends,and so continued to the end of their lives. Mr. Hallock's salary was small at the beginning, less than $200 a year,which was paid one-fourth only in cash, the rest in farm produce. But he was content. One neighbor presented him with sixty young apple trees and he planted an orchard, which soon yielded delicious fruit. He preached to the Plainfield people forty-five years, during which period revivals followed revivals with more frequency and broader results than in any other individual church in the land. During one of the early years of his ministry it is recorded that 'seventeen joined the church in one day;' and again, 'thirty-one persons joined the church,twenty-four of whom adorned the aisle at one time.'

"In addition to his pastoral duties, Mr. Hallock opened a classical school in his dwelling house for the benefit of the sons and daughters of his parishioners. This attracted wide attention, and ere long many pupils came to him from other towns in the vicinity; during the three following decades he prepared a large number of young men for college and the higher walks and professions of life. In the records of Williams College,it is said that for a long time in the early struggles of that institution, the question of how many students were to enter at the beginning of each college year depended upon the number Mr. Hallock could furnish. Half the class were not infrequently from the Plainfield school. Among those who in boyhood learned their various lessons in the historic parsonage were the distinguished sons of Deacon Richards,before mentioned; Rev. Jonas King, the celebrated missionary to Greece, whose birthplace was in Hawley, the adjoining town; the Rev. Pliny Fisk and the Rev.Levi Parsons,early missionaries to Palestine, who brought that country nearer than ever before to Bible readers; Wm. M. Ferry,U. S. Senator; Prof. James Hayward,of Cambridge; Dr. Marcus Whitman, who took the first wagon over the Rocky Mountains to Oregon; John Brown, of Harper's Ferry notoriety; William Cullen Bryant, the poet, author and editor, whose name is a household word wherever the English language is spoken, and whose home in Cumington was in sight, less than three miles away; together with the pastor's own four sons,of whom the Rev.Wm A. Hallock, D. D., was the originator of the American Tract Society and its accomplished secretary for upward of half a century, residing in New York city; Gerard Hallock, who established the Boston Telegraph in 1825, united it with the Boston Recorder in 1826, became half-proprietor of the New York Observer in 1827, and in 1828, in partnership with David Hale, founded the New York Journal of Commerce, and then conducted it with signal ability through the most important thirty-three years in the history of the newspaper press of America; Leavitt Hallock, a scholarly, public-spirited, Christian gentleman,who settled in Plainfield, extended the most generous hospitality to missionaries, ministers, and college students, and gave all his children—both sons and daughters—a liberal education; and Homan Hallock, who went to Malta and Smyrna as missionary printer and invented the new Arabic type in which the Bible has been so successfully and extensively printed."

BLASPHEMY.

Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston has none too soon raised the voice of solemn warning against what he styles the "cooking stove apostasy." Total prohibition of carnal amusement in the house of God is the only remedy. The Gospel Sickle is responsible for the following horrid recital:

"A few weeks since in the town of Sullivan, Ill.,a 'crazy supper' was given by the ladies of a certain prominent church,which we refrain from mentioning out of respect to the denomination in general. A circular was gotten up and issued in very fantastic style advertising the supper,which reads as follows:

"'The ladies of the ——— ——— church,assisted by their many friends, will give a "Crazy Supper"at the Armory, Sullivan, Ill., Wednesday evening,Aug. 3, 1887, beginning at 5:30 P. M., and—"We won't go home till mornin'."

"'Is it not written, "Every vacuum must be filled?" "Let no guilty man escape?" So come along. Hear the words of the prophet Jerry My Oh, "The young man and his girl can't live on dry bread alone." So the crazy, mazy menu will consist, among other things, of tongue,chicken salad and just every-day chicken, ham, pickles, jelly, cake, ice cream, tea,coffee, etc.,and will be served in many crazy,mazy,hazy waze. "And the light shone down on brave women and fair men."—Burns. Give ear, O ye inhabitants of Sullivan and vicinity, to the voice of Dave the sweet ringer; make a joyful sound on the psalter-y and the butter-y,the tin horn and the cob pipe; such excellent music will be furnished. Admission and supper, 25 cents. Friends, Romans, countrymen,we come not here to talk, but to invite you to eat,drink and be merry.'

"Think of a religious organization in a civilized land and composed of civilized people getting up such a caricature on religion and the Bible as the above-described incident affords! Think of professed Christians giving to the prophet of God such a name as 'Jerry My Oh,' and putting into his mouth such words as 'The young man and his girl can't live on dry bread alone!' In the language of another, 'Such a caricature on God's Word is truly appalling.' It is enough to cause even worldlings to blush for shame that they live in a land where such iniquities are practiced in the name of religion, and for the support of the worship of God."

"YOU HOLLERS TOO LOUD."

"'Taint de true grace,honey! 'taint de sure glory," said Aunt Judy to one of her colored sisters. "You hollers too loud. When you gits de love in your heart and de Lamb in your bosom, you'll feel as if you was in dat stable at Beth'lem, an' de blessed Virgin had lent you de sleepin' baby to hold."

There are many people who, if they lived nearer to the Lord, would not need to talk so loud while trying to make him hear them. The still waters run deepest. Tumult and babble and excitement are no certain evidences of the peace that passeth knowledge. On the top of Mt. Carmel most of the yelling was done by Baal's prophets, while Elijah, calm,cool and collected, taunted them with the indifference of their sleepy god. Baal's priests made the most tumult, but Elijah's prayer brought down the fire which consumed the sacrifice. The Christian worships a God at hand, and he who walks with God and has fellowship with him is not dependent upon noise and racket for Divine recognition or help from above in time of need.—Christian.

WAS IT LUCK?

There was a frantic cry of "Whoa!" "whoa!" and the driver of "No. 7" put down the brake, and the car came to a standstill just as a runaway horse dragging but a fragment of a carriage, dashed past. Men, women and children ran in various directions, some of them trying to keep out of the horse's track, and others, more venturesome, making ineffectual attempts to seize the dangling bridle.

Mr. Lord was unfolding the Bee, which always reached him about the time he started down town, when the commotion outside attracted his attention.

"Look out for your old basket!"—and a slight kick completely overturned it. In their haste and excitement, a colored woman and two boys had actually collided; at the same time finding a street car in unyielding background.

Herbert Atkinson, nearly tumbling into the basket of freshly-laundried clothes, which the woman in her fright had dropped, indignantly applied the force necessary to scatter the immaculate linen upon the dusty street.

With a fierce scowl and muttered oath he immediately sprang upon the car. Other vehicles standing near completely blocked the passage,and while trouble was imminent (for the drivers were loud in expostulation),Mr.Lord gave his attention to the scene just under his window.

"Excuse me, madam," said the other boy, lifting his hat, which he was in the act of placing on his head, after picking himself up from the pavement, where he for a moment had fallen, when, during the scramble for safety, both the woman and Herbert had brought up against him.

"Yer didn't do it, honey, yer noways ter blame," was the answer.

As she reached for her basket she groaned, and George Graham exclaimed, "Are you hurt?" and while she with one hand was tightly holding the bruised and sprained wrist, he was very carefully gathering up the now soiled garments, brushing, shaking and folding.

When the car started, everything had been arranged, and the manly lad was walking away with the washerwoman's load.

Mr. Lord returned to his paper, first looking at his own advertisement, which read something like this:

"Wanted, at this office, an honest and gentlemanly boy, about sixteen years of age, who has a home in the city. None but an apt scholar, and one well recommended need apply. Call at twelve o'clock today."

Mr.Lord's experience in advertising was such that he congratulated himself on the short notice he had given,trusting that the right boy would be on hand, and he not be pained as he would be if obliged to turn away many applicants for the place.

A little before noon his wife came in for a chat, leaving their little Annie with him for an hour, as was her custom when out at this time.

"Papa's little Rest has come, has she?"as he took the child in his lap. It was one of his happy hours, he often said,when he gave himself up to a frolic with his little girl.

"Oh, pa, Dinah has hurt her hand and tumbled down in the street. It was something about a horse and a car,—anyway,mamma has packed a basket of food for her and taken her home. It was no matter 'bout the tumbled clothes, mamma told her."

"Yes, dear, but who is Dinah?" seeing that the child was too much interested to think of anything else just then.

"Oh, she helps Mary wash, and sometimes takes the clothes home with her. Pa, there is the very boy who brought the basket for her,coming here,"as she looked from the window.

"It is twelve o'clock,darling, and I must attend to a little business. You may stay here with me."

"John," through a speaking tube, "you may send up the boys in the order in which they come."

"Good-morning!" and a youth politely removed his hat as he responded to the usual pleasant greeting.

A prepossessing face and evidently a well-informed boy of sixteen, bright and active, with a letter from a well-known man, which read something like this: "James Armstrong is the son of an old friend of mine. He is a fine scholar. Please give him a place and oblige," etc.

"Well, James, I like your looks, and I do not doubt your ability, but I noticed the stump of a cigar in your fingers as you came in, and your clothes are filled with the odor of tobacco. How long have you smoked?"

"Two years or more,"he answered, looking resentfully at the gentleman, though he had the grace to blush.

"My boy,do you know you are sowing the seeds of misery?"

"It rests me to smoke."

"Rests you! Ah, poor child, I might preach you a long sermon, tell of the blighted lives, ruined nerves, and empty pockets, but forbear. My lad, learn a lesson,throw it away before it is too late. I'll excuse you now."

The boy went out in a swaggering,indifferent way, muttering something about "taking away a man's liberty."

Pityingly, Mr. Lord saw him depart. The next boy was clean and pure to look at, and handed his recommendation to Mr. Lord in a very self-satisfied way. The gentleman, with a sense of the morning fresh in his mind, even when he read the complimentary words, written by his own minister, could not say "Yes" to such an applicant. He had no doubt of his fine scholarship,and his general appearance was greatly in his favor, but said: "Hebert, I came down on car No. 7 this morning and witnessed a little scene that you will recall. I advertised for a gentlemanly lad. I'll excuse you now."

With hot cheeks he departed.

The next was a boy with a fine face,but not as well grown as the others, and with no recommendation except a note from his mother. Mr. Lord read: "Dear Sir:—We are strangers in the city. I know of no one,who,with this short notice,can recommend my boy. A mother may be partial in her judgment, but he is a good boy, and you, if you will take the trouble, can learn of his scholarship. Will you please give him a chance to learn a trade that has great attractions for him? We have a case in the house and he can already set type quite rapidly. His father was a printer. Excuse this long note and oblige, Yours truly, M. A. Graham."

"Well, a mother ought to know," he said to himself, and as his eye took in the air of respectability that pervaded the dress of the boy, he realized that unless supplanted by new it would soon become very shabby; and he recalled the time when his own mother came to the city with her small children and the disappointments that he, her oldest child, had met with before he gained a foothold in the seething tide of humanity that surrounded the unsophisticated youth.

"If you can give us a little time, sir, mother will write to our old home, and get the names of parties who will give me a recommendation.

"My boy, I advertised for a gentlemanly lad, and of that I have had indisputable evidence already,and the examination I will now give you will settle the question of scholarship. Everything else I'll take on trust, feeling confident that I shall not be deceived."

That evening Mrs. Atkinson, when discussing affairs with an acquaintance, said:

"I cannot understand the luck of some folks. Herbert went to the editor of the Bee this morning, and was only the second boy there." "Yes, my boy got there first," interrupted the other,"and he had a letter from one of Mr. Lord's own friends." "And my boy," broke in the first speaker, "had a recommendation from our minister, and even then Mr. Lord took a shabby little fellow,Herbert says,who doesn't know anybody in town. Such luck!"

Was it luck, boys?—S. S. Times.

A GOOD JOKE.

Boys are often fond of playing jokes. Such may sometimes be done, but never to any one's inconvenience. In one of our colleges the professor, who made himself very friendly with the students, was walking out with an intelligent scholar, when they saw an old man hoeing in a cornfield. He was advancing slowly with his work toward the road, by the side of which lay his shoes. As it was near sunset, the student proposed to play the old man a joke. "I will hide his shoes; we will conceal ourselves behind the bushes, and see what he will do."

"No," said the professor, "it would not be right. You have money enough; just put a dollar in the man's shoes; then we will hide behind the bushes, and see what he will do."

The student agreed to the proposal, and they concealed themselves accordingly.

When the laborer had finished his row of corn, he came out of the field to go home. He put on one shoe, felt something hard, took it off and found the dollar. He looked around him but saw no one, and looked up gratefully toward heaven. He then put on the other shoe, and found another dollar. He looked at it, and looked all around him, but saw no one. He then knelt upon the ground and returned thanks to God for the blessings that had been conferred upon him. The listeners learned from the prayer that the old man's wife and one of his children were sick, and that they were very poor; so that the two dollars were a great relief sent to them from heaven.

"There," said the professor, "how much better this is than to have hidden the old man's shoes."—Christian Advocate.

TEMPERANCE.

THE WICKED PROHIBITORY LAW OF IOWA.

[Correspondence of the Inter Ocean.]

But this "fanatical law" has also very seriously injured the sheriff business in the counties where it has been vigorously enforced. In a recent interview with Sheriff Painter, of this county,that official said: "Of course prohibition has injured business. I served as sheriff about two years before it began to take effect. In those happy days the county boarding house which I run was always full to overflowing. The county paid 50 cents a day for the keeping of each prisoner, and I had from forty to fifty boarders all the time,and no danger of their jumping the board bill. But now and for months past I have only a paltry eight or ten; and the expenses are more than the income. The first term I used to take from twenty-five to thirty to the penitentiary each year; but this year I have only taken four to the pen. I tell you the criminal business is all gone to smash and the sheriff's office isn't worth half as much as it was in the good old saloon times. I've had enough of the office and will be glad when my time is up. And large numbers of sheriffs with whom I have talked are in the same fix. If it hadn't been for the fees for prosecuting the saloon fellows I should come out in debt."

Now that is proof of the most positive character that prohibition hurts business. It has been particularly disastrous to the criminal business in four-fifths of the counties of the State. The district judges attest this fact. Judge Kavanaugh, of this district, said to the Grand Jury recently, in open court, that in this county the records show a decrease of more than fifty per cent in the cases of crimes of violence, or involving moral turpitude, within the past year. In fact, these are hard times for lawyers, especially the younger class, who depend upon criminal practice. A prominent lawyer of this State, who served in Congress a number of years, on resuming his practice recently noted the change. He said to the reporter of a local paper:

"The remarkable shrinkage in law business in Iowa is one of the most notable and significant signs of the times. I find on taking up my business again that the prohibitory law, by decreasing crime and bringing in peace and good neighborhood,has taken away half of my practice. The railroad commission, which is merely a method of arbitration between the people and the railroads, and a very successful one, has taken away another large part of it. The farmers and other business men who used to owe a great many small debts, and thus furnished a great amount of business to lawyers, have now either paid up or else have had the business sense to negotiate loans on long time, following the old rule of owing one large debt rather than a good many small ones, and this has taken away another large slice of my practice. There is no use denying the fact, Iowa now has far less business for lawyers than it used to have."

All this is sad, very sad! But the good people of the State will probably endure with rare Christian fortitude the afflictions that have lately come upon the criminal lawyers and others who have suffered by the operation of the law. There are some mitigations for calamities of that sort.

It is noted that among the jugwumps of this city, who complain most loudly of the disastrous results of prohibition, are a half dozen promising young lawyers, whose practice heretofore has been defending or prosecuting criminals. Like one Demetrius, the Ephesian silversmith, they cry out,"Our craft is in danger," and join the saloonocracy in the shouting, "Great is Bacchus and Gambrinus!"

Yes, and a similar plaint comes up from the penitentiary at Fort Madison. The contractors for prison labor complain that they are unable to fill their orders because of a marked falling off in the number of hands furnished them by the State. The decrease this year is over seventy, and if this thing goes on the contractors will be ruined for the want of cheap criminal labor. Without a doubt prohibition hurts business!

Another great industry has suffered a marked decline in this city within the past year or two, viz., the business of slugging and highway robbery. Three and four years ago cases of midnight assaults upon belated travelers and citizens were of frequent occurrence. There were certain streets and portions of the city in which an unarmed man would scarcely venture alone on a dark night. For a time there was serious talk among the law-abiding people of organizing a vigilance committee to clean out that prowling band of marauders. They made the saloons their rendezvous, and since the anti-saloon law took effect they have vanished. The "business" has been badly hurt. All our citizens can testify to that. Our streets are comparatively safe now at all hours of the day and night, and slugging is no longer feared. Of course this marked change makes dull times for reporters and the police, but other people don't complain much.

The driving out of that class of citizens has undoubtedly decreased the population of the city somewhat, but the result is not especially disastrous to those who remain. That class of gentry are now abroad, plying their trade in more congenial cities, and they are of the sort who most feelingly describe the disastrous effects of prohibition on Des Moines.

THE PROHIBITIONIST'S OPPORTUNITY.

Without doubt the Prohibitionist is abroad, and if he is anxious to win he must truly and honorably show to the colored man that he is his friend. As slavery could not die and the Republican party live without the colored man's vote, so prohibition cannot be secured and retained without us. There are thousands of colored men who want to join the Prohibitionists, as a political party, but as many questions concerning our rights are still unsettled, we are not prepared to leave the Republican party nor to join the Democratic party, and as there are many questions of wages and the entering of shops by colored men, it is hardly safe to trust the Labor party. Now, the colored man is looking to the Prohibition party, and he is really charmed with the moral ideas it represents. Many are disgusted with the weakness of the Republicans, nearly all hate the principles of the Democrats, and we want to help win our common rights. The whole South is under Democratic control. Republican victory will mean little help for us, for when they had power it was even worse, with no power to overreach the doctrines of "States Rights." What shall we do? Listen! Let the Prohibitionists of the South meet the colored man on the following platform:

1. A guarantee to put down mob law and prosecute all who make the Negroes' life a burden in the South.
2. Honestly to give extended public school privileges to the Negro.
3. To do away with all distinctions in traveling on railroads, steamboats and omnibusses.
4. A pledge to see that the Negro is defended in contracts and all dealings with planters, and others accustomed to cheat and outrage our defenseless, poor and ignorant plantation hand.
5. A pledge to see that colored men and women get justice before the courts, and that erring children be not sent to penal institutions but to reformatory ones.
6. To give equal representation on county and State tickets, and every way to share in the blessings of full American citizens.

Let the Prohibitionist do this and we will elect the next President of the United States for them, and put them in the possession of the Southern States and give them big foothold in Congress in both houses.

Of course, the white Southern Prohibitionist must expect to do as others to get votes—they must offer the inducement. The contest in Texas, Tennessee and Kentucky shows that the bare discussion of prohibition don't carry elections. Even Christians won't vote for it. Now, give the Negro something to vote for, and he will show you that he thinks more of his rights than he does of whisky. Try it and see. If there are not good men enough in the Prohibition party to grant these things let them stop prating about the effects of strong drink, poverty, etc. Come down to the things the Negro wants, and protect him at the polls, and we will pull off our coats and roll up our sleeves, and, braving death itself, sweep this country and drive whisky back to hell from whence it came.—American Baptist.

The report of the Oregon election of Tuesday last indicates that the prohibitory amendment was lost by a majority of from 7,000 to 8,000 votes.

At the territorial fair in Albuquerque, the New Mexico W. C. T. U. netted $65, while the saloon "privilege" on the grounds did not receive sufficient to pay for its license.

3. Should the Christian patronize those who violate the Sabbath day? Shall he ride on street-cars on the Sabbath, or hold stock in corporations that run Sunday trains? Shall he purchase or advertise in the papers that issue a Sunday edition? Shall he trade during the week with those who defy the best sentiments and injure the best interests of society?

4. What is the proper use of Saturday as preparatory to the Sabbath? Shall the Christian work late Saturday night and sleep late Sabbath morning and neglect going to church, or shall one-half of Saturday be observed as a holiday?

5. What is the necessary work that the Christian must do on the Sabbath? how much travel? how much trade? how much work in the home?

6. What shall be the difference between the converted and the unconverted to the observance of the Sabbath? Shall the law of charity be recognized by the follower of Christ? Shall he say, "If meat make my brother to offend" I will not purchase meat on the Sabbath days.

7. Shall the Christian church have as much authority over its members as the Knights of Labor, which forbids its members to buy or sell on the Sabbath?

8. The Christian should recognize certain principles to determine the measure of pleasure, work and religion, on the Sabbath in answering these questions.

In answering these questions we must regard:—

First—The permanence of the moral law. The Sabbath is not an ecclesiastical ordinance for Christians but a humane provision for all men.

Second—The supremacy of the divine law over the human law. The law of Sabbath rest is not the law of the Christian church, but the law of God.

Third—The church must also recognize the unity of moral law, man with his intellect and passions needs the restraint of the Sabbath on the ground that tempts him to labor seven days a week.

Fourth—The Christian should recognize the beneficence of the law of Sabbath rest. The Sabbath is for man, not man for the Sabbath.

Much can be done to redeem the Sabbath. The teachings of the Scriptures should be emphasized in the pulpit. The Christian is to enter the rest of God by following the example of Christ. The industries of the world should be silent one day in seven that the toiler may hear the invitation of the Master, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest," and that the spiritual temple of God may be built without the noise of the hammer.

Rev. Dr. W. W. Everts of Chicago, for some thirty years pastor of the First Baptist church, more lately engaged in a mission to the colored churches of the South, and author of a book on the Sabbath, next addressed the convention with such earnestness, eloquence and logical power as to create great enthusiasm. His statement of the fundamental principles of the discussion were the keynote of the whole meeting, that the Sabbath was the gift of God for all mankind.

The Sabbath, from its very nature, was intended to intercept all things of a secular nature and show men their duty to God. Jehovah gives us margin and liberties for six days, but gives us no liberty on the seventh day. This day is set apart for divine worship and preparation for another life.

It is the test of all religion. The people who do not keep the Sabbath have no religion. Think of your God and your duty to your God. The Sabbath was established in the garden of Eden. It was made in the beginning; it is a part of nature. Thus it anticipates all ages,all periods,and was made with man. It is no late innovation. This fact is too much overlooked. The Sabbath was enforced by Moses; Christ himself reaffirmed it. This was one of the greatest religious laws that the day of God should be honored. The Sabbath was made for man because man could not live without it. The church never abolished the Sabbath. The Christian church is built upon the Sabbath. The church understands it, and the church that remembers God will remember and keep holy the Sabbath day. It is a day set apart for the worship of God and for religious works. I have no patience with "religious" men who do not keep the Sabbath. He who does not keep the Sabbath does not worship God, and he who does not worship God must be forever lost.

The laboring class are apt to arise late on Sunday morning, read the Sunday papers and allow the hour of worship to go by unheeded. In Vienna,that Catholic city, the Sunday newspaper is prohibited. Cannot New York and Chicago do what Vienna can? The Sunday train is another great evil. They can not afford to run a train unless they get a great many passengers,and so break up a great many congregations. The Sunday railroad trains are hurrying their passengers fast on to perdition. What an outrage that the railroad, that great civilizer,should destroy the Christian Sabbath! The saloon is countenanced in our cities on Sunday. Not content with keeping this gateway of hell wide open during six days they must also hold open the doors on the Sabbath of the Lord. If our people have any respect for themselves, for their forefathers, they will not countenance any political party that countenances the saloon. The Sunday saloon is the widest gate possible to hell. In Chicago there are worse theatres running now on Sunday than New Orleans ever saw. Ball playing on Sunday must be stopped. When we get away from God's law we must sink. If Chicago had kept the Sabbath there would be no anarchists. The military are at Highwood because there was no Sabbath in Chicago.

How many ministers go after the people. Keep the Sabbath in the house of God or you will lose it. The doctor was, as always, eloquent, practical and forcible,and the audience enjoyed his remarks.

Frank W. Smith, the evangelist, well known in Northern Illinois for his lectures on Andersonville Prison-pen, was the last speaker. His eloquence, fervor and originality aroused the audience to the highest enthusiasm. He plead with Christians for self-denial in order to protect and preserve the Sabbath.

The Wednesday morning session, after a half-hour prayer meeting in the chapel and devotional services led by Rev. S. H. Swartz, late of Belvidere, now of Leaf River, was devoted to the discussion of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we recognize the Sabbath as an institution of God. revealed in nature and the Bible, and of perpetual obligation on all men; and also as a civil and American institution, bound up in vital and historical connection with the origin and foundation of our government, the growth of our polity and necessary to be maintained in order for the preservation and integrity of our national system, and therefore as having a sacred claim on all patriotic American citizens.

On motion to adopt, Dr. Mandeville of Chicago, State's Attorney Cooper of Du Page county, Prof. Whitney of Beloit, Pres. L. N. Stratton and Prof. H. A. Fischer of Wheaton, Rev. C. K. Colver of Chicago, Rev. Fuller of Morrison, Rev. Staunton of Rockford,Rev.Harbaugh of Genoa Junction,andRev. Lea of Woodstock, discussed the resolution which was adopted.

The committee on resolutions also suggested some queries on street car travel, the milk business and Sunday papers. Dr. P. S. Henson being unavoidably absent, the time which he was expected to occupy was devoted to brief speeches on these questions, and the liveliest interest was aroused in the practical work of Sabbath observance. Hon. Thomas E. Hill, late mayor of Aurora, read an able paper urging the universal adoption of a Saturday half-holiday in order to give the laboring man his recreation and time for small jobs, and save the Sabbath for needed worship and spiritual improvement.

Rev. Mr. Stewart, of Savannah, made an earnest speech for putting into effect the State law on the Sabbath. His was a railroad town and full of Sabbath-breaking, but the men were anxious something should be done to give them relief. The Brotherhood of Engineers, he believed, would sustain any effort to enforce the law against the railway companies.

Rev. Mr. Swartz said that all these lines of business would stop on Sunday if the profits were taken away. Let the railroads and street cars be restrained from making any charge for Sunday travel and they would stop quick. The man who can't get to church without a street car would glorify God more by staying at home. It is not a necessity; it is selfishness, the desire for dollars and cents. But for that, not a wheel of the Sunday train would turn; not a factory run.

The street car question came up by a good brother from Rockford who had horses and carriage, but did not like to drive in the dark, and, as he liked to hear Dr. Staunton preach, he took the street car which came near to his house. Pres. Blanchard showed how by so doing he kept the employes from enjoying their Sabbath. Dr.C. E. Mandeville thought that the Christian who rides on the Sunday train or street car encourages the Sunday travel among pleasure seekers, and places an obstacle in the way to their salvation. Rev. D. W. Wise of Granville said that in Toronto there are no Sunday street cars;there are no Sunday papers, no saloons and no places of amusement open on the Sabbath day, and in all of the cities he had ever visited, he had never seen a city with a greater moral advancement. All the churches are filled to overflowing and the city prospers and thinks. Revs. Helms of Forrest, Chittenden of Wheaton and Harris of Byron also spoke to this point.

[Our space will not allow the completion of this report in this number and we reluctantly postpone the conclusion for a week.]

—The Glenn Bill excitement in Georgia has had the effect in the offending university of Atlanta to increase the number of students from 291 last year to 413 at present enrolled.

—Rev. Paul S. Feemster, well known to our readers for his valuable services in Kansas and the South, has lately joined the Wesleyan conference in Kansas, and has taken up a circuit work in the vicinity of his home in Meade county.

—Mr. Bowes, formerly of Washington, D. C., but now of Baltimore, Md., has charge of a large class studying the Bible lessons. It meets every Friday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. building. Mr. Bowes will be remembered as being interested in the movement to secure headquarters for the N. C. A. in Washington four years ago.

—Joseph Cook will soon be in Boston and begin his autumn lecture tours. He has a new lecture entitled, "Law and Labor; Property and Poverty." Mr. and Mrs. Cook were lately visited at their Cliff Seat villa, Ticonderoga, by Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Parker of the Tabernacle, London, who spent several days and held long consultations about lecturing in the United States, Canada, Australia, Japan and India.

—The annual meeting of the United Presbyterian Association, formed last year at Allegheny City, is being held this week at Xenia, Ohio. Its object is to promote purity of worship, especially in respect to church music.

—D. K. Pearson of this city, a retired capitalist, has lately given $180,000 to Christian and benevolent causes. The Y. M. C. A. has $30,000; the Presbyterian and Congregational Seminaries, each, $50,000; the Woman's Presbyterian Board of the Northwest, $30,000; and to the Presbyterian Hospital, $20,000.

—Rev. W. R. Swartz, son of Rev. Joel Swartz, D. D., of Gettysburg, has joined the Presbyterian ranks. He had been engaged in missionary work in India for two years, having been sent out by the Southern Lutheran church.

—The New York cathedral is to be located on three blocks, bounded by Tenth and Morningside avenues, and One Hundred and Tenth and One Hundred and Thirteenth streets. The price paid for the lots was $850,000. The building is to cost nine or ten million besides. In this day of missions and benevolent enterprise, such a squandering of money on human pride, all in the name of the Lord Jesus, would seem to be a sin to be smitten with the divine curse.

—The General Missionary Committee of the Methodist church has apportioned the appropriation of the mission fund as follows: Africa, $16,000; South America, $58,500; China, $118,857; Germany, $35,060; Switzerland, $11,400; Scandinavia, $54,472; North India, $82,000; South India, $24,000; Bulgaria and Turkey, $21,504.

—A Lutheran Japanese attended the conference of Lutheran pastors recently held in San Francisco. He spoke German fluently and desires to be educated for the ministry. Some of the Lutheran missionary societies in Germany are at work in Japan, and he is doubtless one of the fruits of their labor.

—The Church of England Zenana Society is the most enterprising society of its kind, probably in the world. It has 88 missionaries, with 445 Bible women and other agents locally engaged; four normal schools with 123 pupils, and 133 other schools, with 5,411 scholars. Last year 2,364 zenanas were regularly visited. Financially it received 19,497 rupees in government grants, 7,916 rupees in fees, and 18,953 rupees locally subscribed. Its home receipts during the year amounted to $118,185.

—The China Inland Mission held a notable conference some months since in Hung Tung, Shansi Province, West China, three hundred Christians taking part in it. In connection with it, fifty-two women and 155 men were baptized. Last year 163 converts were baptized in the province, in which there are three stations, twenty-three missionaries and fourteen native helpers. A feature of the conference was the reports given by workers, showing that the people are being wonderfully stirred by tidings of the new religion.

—The Turkish Government has attempted to close the service held on Sabbath afternoons at a room over the Mission Reading-room at Koom-Kapou, in Constantinople. Minister Straus has, however, thus far succeeded in defending the right of the mission to hold worship in that place.

LODGE NOTES.

The Chicago Evening Mail published lately the following list of prominent Masons in this city:

Frank M. Bristol, the Methodist revivalist, is a Knight in Apollo commandery.

Henry C Ramsey is a Past Grand Commander, and is prominent in Episcopal church affairs. He is a board of trade man.

Dr. Vincent L. Hurlbert has another title which he only wears at lodge meetings. He is a Past Grand Master of the Grand Encampment.

Lieut. Gov. Smith was elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois at the State convention last week. He has a brilliant war record.

The rector of St. Mark's Episcopal church, the Rev. Mr. Fleetwood, is Prelate of Montjoie commandery. He is popular with his congregation, not many of whom know that their pastor is a Sir Knight.

"Maj. Tobey's Battery" gives a better history of E. P. Tobey than a lengthy biography of this Knight would. He is an old member of Apollo commandery, and his war record is a matter of history.

Capt. H D Purington is handsome, a military genius, aged 34 years, and he spends half his time in devising evolutions for the drill corps of St. Bernard commandery, of which he is Past Commander.

Not more than half of the Rev. Dr. Thomas's congregation are aware of the fact that their beloved pastor is a Knight Templar and a Thirty-second Degree Mason. He is, however, and his grip proves it.

The Maltese cross which dangles from the watch-chain of the Rev. Dr. Lorimer proclaims him to be a Sir Knight. Apollo commandery No. 1 is where he sees poor wretches bumped through their degrees.

The Rev. Dr. Clinton Locke, D.D., rector of Grace Episcopal church, is a Templar, and holds high office in Apollo commandery. He is Past Eminent Grand Prelate of the Grand Encampment of the United States.

DeWitt C. Cregier, who is paid $10,000 per annum for superintending the unloading of frozen passengers in winter from Mr. Jones' West Side street cars, is a Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, and is Generalissimo in Apollo commandery.

Amos Grannis, the wealthy South Side county commissioner and ex-alderman, is a P. M. of the Home Lodge, 508, and P. E. C. of Apollo commandery. Mr. Grannis's friends are sorry for him, as he is soon to be made an A. G. and R. T. M. B.

Bishop Fallows is a Knight Templar, member of the St. Bernard commandery, and one of the most eloquent speakers in the country besides. He entered the army as a private during the war, and when the forces were disbanded he wore a colonel's straps.

Sir Henry Turner is a military man, but he looks more like a French dancing-master. Turner is a Past Grand Commander, and aids Purington in drilling Sir Knights. He was one of the original members of the famous Ellsworth regiment of Zouaves.

Sheriff Matson has encounted the goat thirty-two times, is a member of Apollo commandery and Oriental consistory. He experienced some difficulty in gaining admittance to the order, the objection being that he belonged to the Bjoldfroly Pfenning club, a Norwegian organization.

C. F. Gunther has encountered the horns of the mysterious bunter thirty two times. He is a member of the Chevalier Bayard commandery and Oriental consistory. Mr. Gunther has been elected to receive his thirty-third degree, the highest grade ever conferred in Scottish rite Masonry.

Sir Gilbert Wordsworth Barnard, Grand Recorder of the Grand Commandery of Illinois, knows more about Knights Templar, their grips, signs, passwords, secrets, and history, than any other Knight in the country. Mr. Barnard is very proud of the Illinois Masonic Orphans' home, which he so zealously worked to establish. He is an old settler and has been in Chicago forty years. He belongs to St. Bernard commandery.

Norman T. Gassette has held so many offices in the Apollo commandery that it would take a column to do him justice. Mr. Gassette digs dollars out of Chicago real estate for a livelihood, and makes something less than $50,000 a year. He is a pillar of Dr. Lorimer's church and one of the most charitable of men. Massachusetts is Mr. Gassette's birthplace. He knows more about county politics than the average church member.

IN BRIEF.

The store and residence of F. N. Monroe, a prominent Prohibitionist of Howell, Mich., were burned during the temperance campaign last spring. Joseph Geloulang charged Monroe with having fired the premises for the insurance and to gain votes to the cause he represented. Suit for slander was instituted, and a jury has awarded Mr. Monroe $1,500 damages.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has decided that a student attending school in any other county than that in which he has his permanent residence, is not an elector under the law, and that in order to be such he must have definitely determined to make the town where he is attending school the place of his residence, and must be assessed for purposes of taxation.

The shut down of oil wells, manipulated by the Producers' Protective Association and the Standard Oil Company, went into effect a few days ago, it is alleged, is to continue eighteen months. Standard Oil is to divide the profits of 5,000,000 barrels of oil at 62 cents among the syndicate who shall live up to the contract, and 2 000,000 barrels are to be set aside to create a wage fund for the laboring men thrown out of employment.

At Louisville, Charles B. Brownfield, a dissipated character, cut the throats of his wife, his 10-year-old daughter, and his brother-in-law, William F. Bruner, and then hanged himself. He left a note stating that he was tired of life owing to his propensity for gambling; that he did not want his wife and child to be left penniless, and that he killed Bruner because he didn't think he was fit to live.
